I have before said that this doctrine is of very recent origin—that a country is obliged to receive all persons that come and has no power to prevent them. The honorable Senator stigmatizes as of quite recent origin the doctrine "that free institutions are a monopoly of the favored races." Why, sir, he might as well say it is a new doctrine that vigor shall be monopolized by the strong races. Free institutions are only possible with the favored races. It is not because they are a monopoly of the favored races, but because no other race is capable of creating them; no other race is capable of perpetuating them; no other race is capable of treading freedom's heights with firm and unwavering step. As well might he say that the title of LL. D. and graduate of Harvard is not to be monopolized by the few who study in that institution four or five years. A monopoly, he says, of the favored races! The favored races, as I said before, are the only ones capable of free government; and it is because we monopolize the capability that we monopolize the free institutions.

Then he scouts at the idea that the bird may fly but may never alight. We all admit that the bird may fly if he is able, but he is not at liberty to alight in our nest without our permission. This race of ours has been struggling for centuries upon centuries for the principles of liberty. It found this country a wilderness. Our forefathers made great sacrifices to found the institutions which we enjoy. With unequaled valor they faced all the rude forces of nature; they confronted and overcame the wild Indian and the wild beast; they subdued the soil, and we, their descendants, on a hundred battle-fields have fought to preserve the precious inheritance bequeathed by them; and now, according to the ideas and doctrines of the Senator from Massachusetts and of the majority of the Senators from New England, we must take off our hats and make a bow across the western sea and say to these barbarians: You did not have the energy and the nerve and the determination to fit any country for yourselves; we have fitted this for you, and have done more to make it habitable in one century than you have done for your country in fifty centuries; and now we beg you to come over here and enjoy it, even though your presence forces us to retire.

Again I read from the Senator's speech:

> There may be much that is wrong connected with the coming of these people from China, especially the importation of coolies. But let us in our statute use language which fitly describes the evil and would prevent, not language which strikes at the prerogative with which government has no right to interfere. It is not importation, but immigration; it is not importation, but the free coming; it is not the slave, or the apprentice, or the prostitute, or the leper, or the thief, but the laborer at whom this legislation strikes its blow.

Mr. President, under the theories of these gentlemen, how can they prevent the cooly from coming? Let us ask what a cooly is. A cooly in India or a cooly in China is simply a laborer. Has poverty got to be such a crime, I ask these gentlemen——

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Nevada allow me to say that when I used the term "cooly" I used it in its acceptation in this country—what its acceptation may be in India I do not know—that of a laborer imported by another person under a contract forced by his employer.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I intend to do the Senator full justice in that respect. I simply want to state, by the way, that the cooly is merely a laborer in India or in China, but according to the interpretation in this country a cooly is a man whose passage is paid to the United States by some one who has the money, and who in return receives the promise of the emigrant to repay the advance with interest either in money or labor after his arrival. In what particular does the Senator find anything wrong or contrary to public policy in this transaction? When did poverty get to be such a crime that this so-called inalienable birthright of coming to this country could be alienated for any such cause?

Does the Senator from Massachusetts wish to deprive any man of his inalienable rights merely because he is poor? Is it a crime if he has not the money to bring him here, if he borrows it from some one who is willing to advance it? Certainly when he gets here he is not a pauper, because whoever pays his passage would find it incumbent on himself in order to get his money back to find him employment as soon as he arrived.

Is there anything criminal in a contract like that? A large proportion of the immigration from Europe came here in that way; a large proportion of the emigration from the Eastern States to California went in that way, and yet in neither case did I ever hear of any forfeiture of rights on account of the immigrant having borrowed the passage-money, and it seems impossible that the Senator should maintain that the newly discovered inalienable birthright of the foreigner to leave his country and settle in whatever other country he chooses could be alienated for such a cause.

If so, it certainly is not so important a birthright as I thought it was. The pretext that his labor is owned by the contractor after he gets here is dissipated by the fact that there is no law in this country to enforce specific performance of any such contract, and therefore no greater harm could come by reason of the importation of contract coolies than of the coming of Chinese laborers at their own expense. Does the Senator know of any coolies being sent here from China against their will? If so, then I can understand that his objection to cooly importation would be good, but not because the person coming happens to be poor.

Then, I should like to know how, even if he be a pauper coming, by what right this country deprives a pauper of his birthright? We can only deprive him of that birthright, if it be one, on the plea that his presence is injurious to the people of this country. Can we not then for the same reason prevent the coming of any and all whose presence we may deem injurious to our own welfare?

The honorable Senator from Massachusetts lays down the following proposition:

> The insertion of the phrase "the pursuit of happiness," in the enumeration of the natural rights for securing which government is ordained, and the denial of which constitutes just cause for its overthrow, was intended as an explicit affirmation that the right of every human being who obeys the equal laws to go everywhere on the surface of the earth that his welfare may require is beyond the rightful control of government. It is a birthright derived immediately from Him who "made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed and the bounds of their habitation." He made, so our fathers held, of one blood all the nations of men. He gave them the whole face of the earth whereon to dwell. He reserved for himself by his agents heat and cold, and climate, and soil, and water, and land to determine the bounds of their habitation.

The rights are to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." Whoever attempts to pursue happiness must pursue it as the majority of the people in the country in which he lives determines that he can pursue it. Is it left to each individual to say how he will pursue happiness, without reference to the general law? As I think was said before in this discussion, we all agree that marriage is a civil contract needing only the voluntary consent of the parties thereto. If I should choose to make such civil contract with three or four persons of the opposite sex, they giving their voluntary consent thereto, all in the pursuit of happiness, by what right is it that the nation or the State can come in and obstruct the pursuit? Simply because it is the right and duty of the Government to legislate for the general good and to prescribe rules of marriage which restrict natural rights; and I may say here in passing that almost all the important rights we enjoy are artificial rights that have superseded natural rights. The rule, in my opinion, is that we may pursue happiness until we cross the line of the happiness of somebody else, and it is for the general good that the laws should indicate the limits within which the individual can pursue happiness.

The Senator from Massachusetts states that—

> By the census of 1880 the number of Chinese in this country was 105,000—one five-hundredth part of the whole population. The Chinese are the most easily governed race in the world. Yet every Chinaman in America has four hundred and ninety-nine Americans to control him.

I for one, speaking for the Pacific coast, have reason to be very grateful to the Senator from Massachusetts for allowing the population of Massachusetts to be counted in making this computation, even though they bear none of the burdens of that immigration. What sort of a computation would he think it was, how fair and how disingenuous a computation would he regard it, if a great contagion was sweeping over the Pacific States, and it should happen that one in three of the able-bodied population had perished, and that 105,000 had died in a few cities on that coast? Would he exclaim: "Only one hundred and five thousand; what is that? Just average them with the 50,000,000 people of the United States, and what you call a calamity will be shown to be utterly insignificant."

It is a wonder to me that he did not also embrace within his calculation all the rest of the civilized people of the world, in order to make the average look a little better than it does for his side of the question. Why, sir, the 105,000 have already occupied large portions of that coast to the exclusion of our own people, and an average cannot be made of the whole United States, for the reason that the Chinese population have not distributed themselves on the principle of averages. If they had distributed themselves over the whole country they might in these numbers have been easily absorbed; they might create no great danger; but massed as they are on a limited area among the small population of white people living on our coast, they threaten the very existence of our institutions, and it is that of which we complain.

The honorable Senator [Mr. HOAR] asks:

> Will it be maintained that if California could have for nothing what she gets cheaply from Chinese labor, she would not be better off?—if the swamp lands had been made prairie lands by nature; if the ravines had been filled and mountains tunneled by nature, so that the road-bed was ready for the rail; if every man, instead of buying shoes from Massachusetts, had a pair left gratis at his door, that the State would not be better off? Is barren land or productive land best for a State? Then surely the laborer who does these things at least cost does most for the community, and gives the people who occupy the State opportunity for better profit in other fields of industry.

I regret to find in nearly every statement he makes against this bill that in treating of the American laborer he strikes a deadly blow at him while he extols him to the skies as being engaged in the most honorable calling in the world. Is it to be supposed that if the Chinese shall reclaim the swamp lands they will not occupy them? Is it to be supposed if they build tunnels they will not hold them? Is it to be supposed if they have the capacity for doing these things that they will not invade every other industrial pursuit? And when they have invaded all these industrial pursuits, where will be the American artisans and laborers? There will be no civilized community, but only a few rich employers on the one side and a large number of the most degraded kind of employés on the other.

The honorable Senator gives us to understand that there are certain kinds of laborers who will become subordinate to our laborers and lift them up to a higher level; that the Chinese are to be a substratum for all our laborers, each one of whom is to become an employer of Chinamen. Mr. President, it does not work that way. These are not the results we see. The Chinaman is not to be put off with the labor that we say he is fit for. He will apply for every species of labor that he can perform, and he will drive out of employment that large proportion of our population, namely, all our people who depend for their daily bread upon their daily toil in the grades of labor that he can pursue.

These gentlemen fail to tell us where our dispossessed laborers can go. The only way they can live is to descend to the abject condition of the Chinese. You cannot introduce Chinese wages and Chinese laborers without bringing in Chinese conditions, social and political.

I have noticed, Mr. President, that most of those who are in favor of the largest liberty being extended to the Chinese immigrant to this country are also in favor of a tariff—a tariff which has been urged as necessary to protect the American laborer from the degradation of competition with the pauper labor of Europe, as it is usually termed. In reality, if we may judge of their motives by the action of the men who are now advocating a tariff, it was not the American laborer they wished to protect against the pauper labor of Europe, but it was the American capitalist, the lordly manufacturer, that they wished to protect against the free competition of the capitalist of Europe. Our capitalist manufacturer wanted a larger interest on his money than the capitalist of Europe was willing to accept, and he was given the benefit of a tariff.

Let us see how that tariff works. It works in this wise: that everything that the capitalist manufacturer has to sell he sells in a protected market, he sells in a market in which foreign capitalists cannot compete with him.

How is it with what he has to buy? For the principal article he has to buy, to wit, the labor of men, he demands free trade in the broadest sense, not only free trade in bringing in laborers of our own race who can soon accommodate themselves to our conditions of life, but the bringing in a class of laborers who have been inured to poverty by thousands of years of training. The capitalist asks the broadest free trade for that, his own market in any event being protected.

Now, how is it with the laborer? Everything he wants to buy he has to buy from his capitalist master in a protected market; everything he has to sell, to wit, his labor, (and, unlike the capitalist, he cannot hold it away from sale; unlike the capitalist he cannot wait for better times or travel here and there where he pleases to sell it, but he must sell it every day,) he must sell in the openest market in the world. This is the theory in favor of the laborer that the gentleman propounds to us. We reject it, and by this bill propose to bar out this degrading, this shocking competition with our own people. And yet he tells us that we are striking a blow at labor, that we are proposing to inflict injury on the laborers of our country.

Ah! sir, when the artisans and laborers of this country shall be made to understand that they are subjected to free trade in labor they will demand as one of the conditions of their existence that they shall have an open market in which to buy that which they want if it is an open market in which they must sell their labor, the only thing they have to sell. They will never consent to a tariff on bales and boxes and hampers of goods coupled with free trade in human brain and muscle.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] told us that he wanted the American people to know that this bill was a blow struck at labor. Yes, sir; it is a blow struck at degraded, under-paid, under-clothed, and under-fed labor, and it is a blow in favor of that fair remuneration which the forces of our civilization up to this hour have decreed that the laborer should get. There never was a greater fallacy than that cheap labor is a source of wealth to any country; on the contrary, the facts show that in every country where cheap labor is found there the greatest poverty prevails, there the conditions of abject dependence are most abundant, and there will be found misery and want, and not wealth and comfort. If cheap labor is the great source of wealth to a country, why ought not China, which to-day is a poor country, to be the richest in the world? You have three hundred million laborers in China that can be had to work for the merest pittance.

If our capitalists, jealous of the way in which our workmen with their increased intelligence combine in order to get their fair share of the results of protection, should attempt to introduce this new supply of cheap laborers, or, as the Senator very tenderly said, bring in "the little brown man" as a sort of counter-balance to the trades-unions of this country, I suggest that the American laborers will see to it that no "little brown man" is brought in. They may agree to the incoming and to the competition of European laborers, men of their own race, who, while they increase the supply of labor, also increase in nearly as great a proportion the demand for the products of labor. On the other hand, while the incoming of the honorable Senator's "little brown man" tends to glut the labor market to the full extent of his increased numbers, to nothing like the same extent as the European does he increase the demand for products. To allow free admission to the products of foreign labor would not be to the interest of the capitalist manufacturer; and shall it be tolerated that when our laborers combine to get the fair remuneration of their labor, "the little brown man" of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts shall be introduced to coerce them into accepting much less than this fair remuneration to which they are entitled. The American laborer has come to understand this, and he will never tolerate the immigration or importation of the "little brown man," who would be used as an instrument for his own destruction.

If I were to admit, which I cannot, that all races have a natural right to come to this country without our consent and without our being able to prohibit them, then I should be obliged to admit that the same natural law gave the same right of access to this country to the products of the labor of all races. But I deny both propositions. The laborers of foreign countries have no more right to come here independently of our will than have the products of their labor, the admission of which at our ports has always been under our own exclusive control.

We claim the right to exclude the Chinese from our shores, because if we were to permit them to come at their own will they would never cease to come until the industrial conditions in China and the United States were equalized.

I said a few moments ago that there never was a greater fallacy than that cheap labor is a source of wealth. It affords, perhaps, a temporary advantage, but at the sacrifice of vastly greater advantages in the long run. The true mode of increasing production and of diminishing the cost of production is to increase human command over the forces of nature. It is in that way that it is possible to have at one and the same time a larger profit for capital and a better remuneration for workmen. The contrary method of using cheap labor puts an end to labor-saving inventions, by diminishing the motive for them and by reducing laborers to a condition which takes away their capacity to invent. It is nevertheless true that men will generally seek a temporary advantage unless the policy of the laws restrains them to a course dictated by the permanent interests of a country. I believe somewhat in a tariff. I think our manufacturing capitalists should be protected, provided always that the laborers they employ have their fair share of the results of the protection. But if the purchase of American goods at somewhat higher prices than those at which similar foreign goods could be purchased was left to individual option, foreign goods would completely command the market. The protection to American capital and labor must be given by the coercion of law if at all.

If from the wealth of this or any other country, as it is exhibited by statisticians or appraised for taxation purposes, we deduct that part of the valuation of lands which results solely from density of population and is independent of the improvements put upon them, what remains is insignificant in comparison with the value, even if estimated in a merely monetary point of view, of the original native intellectual power, cultivation, science, and arts of the population. It has been estimated that the average stock of all the things which make up the food and clothing of mankind does not exceed the consumption for six months. Wealth consists more in the power of production than in accumulations of what has been produced. It will thus be apparent that a deterioration by a very moderate percentage of the character and force of a population by intermixing with it an inferior race may involve a greater national loss of wealth, and that of the most reliable and permanent form, than all which can be gained by employers from a reduction of wages.

How transitory as well as trivial is the advantage, such as it is, of cheap labor, when obtained by the introduction and employment of essentially inferior races, will be made clear by contrasting the present condition of the English-speaking people in Great Britain and in this country, with what we can plainly see it would now be if at the date of the American Revolution it had been the policy of the whole of those people, as it was of a small part of them in our Southern States, to draw their laborers from the heathen and benighted quarters of the globe. There was undoubtedly a temptation to do that, from the fact that an equal amount of work could be extorted from such laborers for less pay; or, to express the same fact in other words, that of the results of the work of such laborers a greater proportion could be made to inure to the benefit of their employers, or of their owners, if a system of slavery was adopted.

The case is a supposable one, although it fortunately did not in fact occur, that the property and employing classes, the persons who had money to expend for either consumption or production purposes in both Great Britain and in the northern as well as in the southern

American colonies, (now States,) might have been in 1775 dissatisfied with the rates of wages they were being obliged to pay, and might have sought a remedy in importations of some part of the teeming millions of Africa and Asia, to be made use of under some one of the many forms and modifications of servitude.

Without doubt the remedy would have been temporarily an efficient one, but at what an immeasurably greater sacrifice of the permanent and lasting interest of the English-speaking employers and property classes of 1775, and of their posterity. No less a sacrifice than that of the greater part, and perhaps of all of the inventions and discoveries of the English-speaking race during the past century—the steam-engine, the spinning-jenny, the loom, the cotton-gin, the effectual use of coal in making iron, the railroad, the steamship, the electric telegraph, the steam printing-press, the sewing-machine, and the other innumerable advances in science and art which have, during that memorable epoch, illustrated the powers of the human mind, subjected the forces of nature to the control and uses of man, given dignity and enjoyment to life, and, looking merely to material and pecuniary results, have created an aggregate magnitude of wealth unknown and impossible to the highest degrees of African and Asiatic civilization, while they have secured to the wealthier classes and the wage-earning classes a command over both necessaries and luxuries unknown and impossible to former times under any form of civilization.

The introduction of the cheap labor of an inferior race in 1775 would have arrested progress in every part of the British dominions as it did in the British southern colonies (now States) on this continent. The presence of an inferior race either inevitably expels the superior race or reduces it to the ways, modes of life, and all the other conditions of the new-comers.

The principal motive to improvements is that of saving labor. This motive is sensibly weakened and almost destroyed when workmen can be had at the price of the scantiest subsistence. Furthermore, the general employment of laborers of an inferior race cuts off all that largest proportion of inventions which originate in the suggestions of workmen themselves.

No improvements or inventions are to be looked for either from such laborers or from the free laborers of the superior race, inasmuch as the constant tendency must be to a level of condition between both these classes. A scale of wages graduated to the bare support of life imposes a duration of daily toil which exhausts all the physical and mental vitality of the laborer, leaves no time or strength for reflective thought, and completely represses the exercise of the inventive faculty, even when it exists.

No, Mr. President, the wealth of a country does not consist in the bushels of wheat, in the tons of coal and iron, or in the commodities generally that it possesses. No wealth is possible without intelligence. Let a white man go with a mountain of gold into the center of Africa and Asia, and has he any considerable wealth? Are any of the conditions of wealth around him? None whatever. He has got to import intelligence there, without which no important accumulation of wealth can possibly be effected. Does anybody tell me that you can introduce a lower order of people into a country without affecting the higher orders? Can a current of barbarism be permitted to flow into this country without affecting the white people for the worse? You may lift up the barbarous people above their dull, dead inanity, but do you not drag us down correspondingly?

Sir, I am in favor of this bill because I believe it to be an advance in public law, making it conform to the law that nature has written on the face of the physical universe and upon the face of man. Does anybody suppose for an instant that if the African were not in this country to-day we should be anxious to welcome him? Does any reflecting man believe that he is an advantage to this country? Is it not true if his place were occupied by smaller numbers of intelligent men of our own creative race that the country would be stronger than it is? What caused the intellectual stagnation that was observable everywhere in the South outside of politics, the bar, and the pulpit?

Look at the dearth in our Patent Office of names from the Southern States. Why was it? Because a servile race was performing the labor of those States, making it dishonorable there; and because few or none of the laborers of that region belonged to this great creative race, who alone could have given the stimulus to the material development of the Southern States which they have given to that of the Northern States.

Does anybody pretend to tell me that it is a blessing to this country that those people are here? It is no fault of ours that they are here; it is no fault of theirs; it is the fault of a past generation; but their presence here is a great misfortune to us to-day, and the question of the adjustment of the relations between the two races socially and politically is no nearer to a settlement now than it was the day Sumter was fired upon.

The philosophy of the history of every age and our experience of the last seventeen years justify me in making the prophecy that the African race will never be permitted permanently to dominate any State of the South. The experiment of conferring upon them political power in proportion to their numbers has thus far proved a dismal failure, and in my judgment will so continue as long as human nature is as it is. The failure has not been because we have not done everything we could to make it succeed, but because laws independent of and above all human laws have irrevocably stamped upon the one race its superiority over the other.

Intellect and intelligence are forces in this world often greater than numbers. It makes no difference what votes you put in a ballot-box, how many little white pellets of paper that signify one thing and dark pellets of paper that signify another. Those pellets of paper in that box which represent a majority of force will in the end rule even if they be a minority of numbers. If contrary to my expectations the colored race should permanently secure the control of any of the States of the South, and the whites should tire of trying to overcome the majority of numbers by force or intimidation, I predict that they would migrate to the State where their own race was in the majority. I have nothing but the very kindliest feeling toward the negro which is intensified by the recollection of the oppression he has suffered at the hands of my own race, and never would I consciously do him an injustice. The negro possesses in a marked degree all the humane and affectionate sympathies. He easily becomes attached to those with whom he lives and is loyal to them. He adopts our customs and is proud to imitate them, instead of taking a pride, as the Chimaman does, in adhering to his own national habits. To the extent of his capacity for improvement he has a willingness and even ambition to improve himself, instead of shutting himself up as the Chinaman does, with an indomitable self-conceit within the limit of present attainments. The negroes now in this country were born in it; they speak our language; they have the same religion, and they recognize the same standard and code of morals. Considering how their race was brought here, and how admirably well they have borne themselves during and since their transition from servitude to freedom, we owe them not merely justice but kindness. My warmest sympathies have always been with them, and always will be. I was first, last, and all the time for their emancipation, and trust that I shall never fail to assist in securing for them all the rights and the highest advancement which are possible to them. I cannot but feel admiration for the acquirements which many of them have made under difficult and depressing circumstances, and I have no doubt that their race is capable under our leadership of attaining a much higher than their present development.

We clothed the African with the blue uniform of his country which he never disgraced. His instincts were against the men who held him in slavery. When the war of the rebellion broke out he knew intuitively which side would strike the shackles from his limbs, and with fervent enthusiasm and unwavering fidelity he espoused their cause. That he would do so was eloquently prefigured fifty years ago in a speech of Governor McDowell, of Virginia, in which, advocating the gradual emancipation of the slave, he said:

> You may chain the African like an ox to his task; you may teach him that he works only to live, and that he lives only to work, and that his destiny is to be a slave; but the idea that he is one day to be free is a candle lit in his soul by the hand of Deity not to be extinguished by the hand of man.

There never were more truthful words spoken; but it is one thing to aspire to be free from personal servitude and a very different thing to have the intelligence, the self-containment, the great qualities of character that can direct and support free government. Does anybody believe if the restraining, the directing, the guiding intellect of the white man that now surrounds the African in the South were entirely taken away and he was left to maintain our institutions alone, that he could do it? I do not know how my friends on this side of the House may feel, but I for one do not believe that they could be maintained without impairment for a period of ten years. This judgment may seem to some to be harsh and unwarranted, but it is the truth as I see it.

Suppose, then, that when the first ship-load of Africans was landed in this country some one had risen on the floor of one of the assemblies of the States and opposed their landing because they would in the end prove the source of immense disturbance in the country, because their presence would occasion a great civil war, because they would produce precisely the effects we have since seen that they have produced in the South, how true these views would have been, though doubtless they would have been regarded as groundless and fanciful alarms. And, digressing for one minute, I ask Senators to reflect what would have been the condition of this entire country if the same proportion of Africans had been in the North as were in the South? I say, then, suppose that objecting to this immigration because it was the immigration of an incongruous race, of a race that could not assimilate or amalgamate with us, this speaker had urged the exclusion of the negro from our country, he would have uttered wise words and given sound advice. How delusive would have been the rejoinder, in the light of our experience, of any one who might have said:

> We have broad fields and extensive areas where cotton, tobacco, and sugar can be raised; and it is for our common advantage to bring in these negroes and obtain the benefit of their cheap labor.

A similar rejoinder, and one equally delusive, is to-day made to the facts and arguments in support of a measure to prevent the immigration of the Chinese, an immigration that threatens evils more portentous than could result from the importation of the African. The skill of the Chinese enables them to invade more of the industrial pursuits than the negro is capable of invading. Deft and subtle and able in manipulation, the Chinaman can be utilized in almost any kind of a factory; but his race is socially more incongruous to ours and less capable of assimilation with us than is the negro race.

In dealing with the Chinese we are dealing with a race whose historical existence of fifty centuries shows that they have outlived all contemporaneous nations, and during that immense period have never been able to rise from the ranks of semi-barbarism. The reason of this unexampled national longevity is that they have been a race by themselves, a homogeneous race, and tenacious of their homogeneity. When once or twice conquered by the Tartars of the North, a nation closely resembling themselves, they imposed their customs, their laws, their institutions, and their beliefs on the conqueror, thus ultimately subduing him by the force and tenacity of their peculiar systems.

What encouragement do we find in the history of our dealings with the negro race or in our dealings with the Indian race to induce us to permit another race-struggle in our midst? It is because the inhabitants of the Pacific coast are in favor of civilization, because they are in favor of our civilization, and not of some other civilization, that they oppose the further incoming of the Chinese. They believe in maintaining the homogeneity of our population, and they believe that on that homogeneity depends the permanence of our institutions, depends our progress and everything upon which we build our hopes.

Mr. President, when I rose to my feet, without having any prepared speech, I did not intend to say as much as I have said. I simply desired to present a few of the considerations that impel the people of the Pacific coast to conjure their brethren in other parts of the country to come to their assistance against this tidal wave of barbarism, that is not averaging itself over the United States generally so as to be easily absorbed, but which is massing itself on our western borders. It is invading one industry after another and driving our own people out, and has already taken possession of the vine, of the fig-tree, of the wheat-field, and of every avenue of manufacture. I make this earnest appeal not because the white man has not the physical and intellectual power to compete with the Chinaman, but because with the qualities which the white man possesses, with his civilization, with his lineage, with the blood that flows in his veins, he disdains to abandon his present condition of life and to descend to the degrading level of Chinese labor and Chinese wages, and to the unrelieved and barbarous penury of Chinese daily life.

We appeal to Senators to stand by the judgment of 154,000 of their fellow-citizens, spoken without passion, spoken without vindictiveness; 154,000 people, as against only 1,100 votes that could be obtained in favor of this immigration on a secret ballot. Why such universal concurrence of opinion on a question like this? The people of the Pacific coast are not a provincial people; they do not speak the prejudices of a section, they are made up of emigrants from every city and State of this Union and from the leading countries of Europe, so that they are in a very marked degree a cosmopolitan people.

At first they had no objection to Chinese immigration, because they had no experience with it. They now see what it will inevitably result in. They are not so unreasonable as to say that the interests of the Pacific coast are destroyed now by the 105,000 Chinese there, but they see that the industries of that coast will, if this immigration be continued, be inevitably destroyed for our own people; and they ask Congress to check this evil while it is within moderate and controllable limits, for if the rest of the United States should contain as great a proportion of Chinese as are now in California the evil would be too large to be peacefully dealt with and it might occasion another civil war which, unlike the last, would carry the horrors of an intestine struggle into every part of the country.

I trust, Mr. President, that the views of that coast will not be misapprehended, will not be misinterpreted. It is because they are in favor of our own civilization; it is because they are in favor of the homogeneity of our population and citizenship; it is because they are in favor of labor with rewards such as the forces of our society have given to it, that they oppose the incoming of the barbarous hordes from semi-civilized Asia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. FARLEY] to the amendment of the Committe on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I desire to say that this provision was not incorporated in this bill when presented, nor has it been added by the committee, for the reason that I thought, and I believe the committee thought, that such was the law now, and therefore it was unnecessary to so provide in express terms. It has been decided by the circuit court in California, a decision to be found in Sawyer's Reports, that Chinese cannot be admitted to American citizenship under our laws. I am aware that in one or two other States an occasional Chinaman has been admitted to citizenship. I think, however, the provisions of the law are too plain to be misunderstood, and that the decision of the circuit court in California will, if the matter be carried up to the Supreme Court, be sustained. Section 2169 of the Revised Statutes declares that—

> The provisions of this title shall apply to aliens [being free white persons, and to aliens] of African nativity and to persons of African descent.

This shuts out all except aliens who are free white persons and aliens of African nativity or of African descent. Therefore Chinese, who are of the tawny race, who are neither free white persons nor of African nativity nor African descent, cannot be made citizens. I have no objection particularly to this amendment, because it is merely declaratory of what the law now is; but I make this statement merely to show why the provision was not included in the bill.

It may be said also that it is not germane to the purpose of this bill, it being a bill to suspend what is called immigration under the treaty, and the question of naturalization does not properly belong to it.

I wish also to supplement the very able speech of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] with one important fact, that another people of the Anglo-Saxon race, with a similar civilization to ours, view this question as we do in the Pacific States. There was passed in New South Wales an act to restrict Chinese immigration and the introduction of Chinese to New South Wales, and it was approved by the sovereign of Great Britain on the 6th day of December, 1881. This legislation met the approval of that distinguished statesman—that distinguished liberal statesman, perhaps the greatest of English statesmen—who is now Prime Minister, Mr. Gladstone, and it was approved too without the formality of having made a treaty with China by which they conceded the right on the part of Great Britain to enact this legislation. This shows that the voice of a distant colony of Great Britain has been heard by the home government and its wishes have been complied with by one of the most intelligent, able, and liberal statesmen of modern times. Let me present that act of a sister people:

NEW SOUTH WALES.

[Anno quadragesimo quinto Victoriæ Reginæ, No. XI.]

An act to restrict the influx of Chinese into New South Wales.

[Assented to, 6th December, 1881.]

Whereas it is expedient to regulate and restrict the immigration and introduction of Chinese into New South Wales:

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council and Legislative Assembly of New South Wales in Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1. For the purposes of this act the following words in inverted commas shall, unless the context otherwise indicate, bear the meanings set against them respectively:

"Chinese"—Any person of the Chinese race.

"Vessel"—Any ship or vessel of whatsoever kind or description.

"Master"—The person (other than a pilot) for the time being in actual command or charge of any vessel.

2. The master of every vessel upon arrival at any port or place in this colony, from parts beyond the colony, having Chinese on board, shall, before making any entry at the customs, deliver to the collector or other principal officer of customs a list of such Chinese, specifying to the best of his knowledge the name, the place of birth, the apparent age, the ordinary place of residence, the place and date of shipment, and the calling or occupation of each such Chinese, under a penalty for not delivering such list not exceeding £200.

3. If any vessel having on board a greater number of Chinese than in the proportion of one Chinese to every hundred tons of the tonnage of such vessel, shall arrive at any time in any port in this colony, the owner, master, or charterer of such vessel shall be liable on conviction to a penalty of £100 for each Chinese carried in excess of the foregoing limitation, unless the defendant shall show that the Chinese so carried is a British subject or one of the crew or has not been landed in the colony and is not intended to be so landed. For the purposes of this act the tonnage of a vessel shall be ascertained (if she be a British ship) by her certificate of registry, and if not, or if the said certificate shall not be produced, then according to the rules of measurement prescribed by the "merchant shipping act, 1854," being the act of the imperial legislature, seventeenth and eighteenth Victoria, chapter 104.

4. Before any Chinese arriving from parts beyond this colony shall be permitted to land from any vessel at any port or place in the said colony and before making any entry at the customs the master of the vessel by which such Chinese shall so arrive shall pay to the said collector or other principal officer the sum of £10 for every such Chinese, and no entry shall be deemed to have any legal effect until such payment shall have been made and such Chinese for whom such sum has been paid shall receive from the said collector or other principal officer a certificate to that effect. And if any master shall neglect to pay any such sum or shall land or permit to land or suffer to land or to escape from such vessel at any port or place in the said colony any Chinese before such sum shall have been paid by such master or his agent or before such list shall have been delivered such master shall be liable for every such offense to a penalty of £50 for each Chinese so landed or permitted or suffered to land or to escape and in addition to such penalty shall also pay the sum hereby required to be paid for each Chinese.

5. Every Chinese arriving in this colony after the passing of this act otherwise than by a vessel shall pay or there shall be paid for him to some officer whom and at such places as the governor, with the advice aforesaid, may appoint at, on, or near the borders of the colony, or otherwise conveniently situated for that purpose, the sum of £10.

6. If any Chinese shall enter or attempt to enter this colony who shall not have paid or had paid for him the said sum of £10, he shall be liable to a penalty of £10, and in addition thereto of the said sum of £10 required to be paid by section 4 hereof, and on default of payment either of such penalty or sum, shall be liable to imprisonment for twelve months, unless such penalty and sum be sooner paid, and may be apprehended and taken before any justice of the peace, to be dealt with in due course of law.

7. All penalties and all moneys ordered to be paid or being the proceeds of any sale made under the authority of this act shall be paid into the consolidated revenue.

8. For the purposes of all proceedings under this act the justices may decide upon their own view and judgment whether any person produced before them is a Chinese within the meaning of this act.

9. It shall be lawful for the colonial treasurer or any person authorized by him, upon the application of any Chinese and upon being satisfied that such Chinese was at the passing of this act a bona fide resident of this colony and that he desires to be absent therefrom for a temporary purpose only, to grant to such Chinese a certificate that he is exempt from the provisions of this act for a time to be specified in such certificate.

10. Notwithstanding anything in this act contained any Chinese arriving in the colony who produces evidence to the collector of customs or other duly authorized officer that he is a British subject shall be wholly exempt from the operation of this act, and a certificate of the governor of any British colony or of a British consul shall be sufficient evidence of the claim of such Chinese to exemption under this section.

11. The provisions of this act shall not be applicable to any Chinese duly accredited to this colony by the Government of China or by or under the authority of the imperial government on any special mission.

12. The penalties and restrictions imposed by this act shall not nor shall any of them be held to be applicable in respect of any Chinese being one of the crew of any vessel arriving in any port in New South Wales and who shall not be discharged therefrom or land except in the performance of his duties in connection with such vessel.

13. All penalties and sums of money recoverable under this act shall be recovered in a summary way at the suit of some officer of customs authorized by the colonial treasurer before any two or more justices of the peace in accordance with the provisions of the acts regulating proceedings on summary conviction. And it shall be lawful for the colonial treasurer by writing under his hand to authorize any officer to detain any vessel the master whereof shall in the opinion of the said treasurer have committed an offense or be a defaulter under this act. Such detention may be either at the port or place where such vessel is found or at any port or place to which the said treasurer may order such vessel to be brought. For the purposes of such detention the officer so authorized shall be entitled to obtain in the customary manner such writ of assistance or other aid and assistance in and about the detention of or other lawful dealing with such vessel as are by law provided under the act or acts regulating the customs with reference to seizure of vessels or goods. But such detention shall be for safe custody only and shall cease and be discontinued if a bond with two sufficient sureties be given by such master for the payment of the amount of such penalty and other sums as may be adjudged to be paid under the provisions of this act: Provided, That if default be made in payment of any such penalty incurred by such master in terms of any conviction adjudging the payment thereof, it shall be lawful for such officer to seize such vessel and for him and any other officer or person duly authorized or empowered in that behalf to take all such proceedings for the purpose of procuring the condemnation and sale of such vessels as are provided by law in case of condemnation or forfeiture of a vessel for a breach of the custom laws of the said colony: Provided, That the proceeds of sale of any such vessel shall be paid into the consolidated revenue and after payment of the amount of such penalty and of all costs incurred in and about such sale and the proceedings leading thereto the balance shall be placed by the colonial treasurer to a trust account and be held in trust for the owners of or other persons lawfully entitled to the vessel so condemned and sold.

14. Any vessel on board which Chinese shall be transhipped from another vessel and be brought to any port or place in this colony, shall be deemed to be a vessel bringing Chinese into the said colony from parts beyond the said colony, and shall be subject to the provisions of this act.

15. This act may be cited as the "influx of Chinese restriction act of 1881."

The holding of mass-meetings on last Saturday in the State of California has been criticised here. It has been characterized as giving evidence of an overmastering passion. It has been said that it was to make an imposing representation to Congress of what the people of the Pacific coast wanted. Why, Mr. President, the people did no more upon that occasion in the State of California than they had a constitutional right to do. They assembled together to petition for a redress of grievances, and those resolutions and those dispatches that were read here from the Secretary's desk were no more and no less than petitions, and the acts of that people were no more and no less than petitioning Congress for a redress of grievances. Has it come to this that a Senator from Massachusetts would deny the people of California the right of assembling together and making known to Congress their wishes by petitioning for a redress of grievances? The older statesmen of Massachusetts would never have put themselves upon record as criticising or denying the right of a people to do this. Where in all this discussion has passion been shown? Have the people of California shown an overmastering passion in the discussion of this subject? Was there at the time those meetings were held any disturbance? Was there any intemperate language used? Is there a word in any one of those resolutions, any one of those dispatches that were sent here, which shows the slightest feeling of passion or even prejudice?

No, sir; the people of California are not in a frenzy of passion. We here have attempted to represent the sentiment and the feeling of our people. We have not dealt in declamation. We have attempted to reason on this subject; and if there has been any passion shown here, it has been shown by those who have discussed this subject on the other side.

I do not mean to detain the Senate with any remarks of mine. I am content to leave this argument where it is. I am very anxious that a vote shall be had upon this bill. Therefore I shall not say what I should like to say in defense of my people and in defense of my action in bringing up this bill. My motives and my reasons, I think, sufficiently appear from the remarks which I made in the opening of this debate. I have nothing to take back; I do not think that we have been completely and entirely answered; and I am willing now to leave this subject to the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate from a vote but a very few moments. I am quite unwilling to place myself on record as against the power of this Government, should it become necessary, to prohibit all immigration to this country. I foresee that the time may come before the next generation comes and goes, when it may no longer be desirable that large numbers shall be encouraged to come here from abroad. But the difficulty that I have about this bill is in relation to the two treaties that we have with China. The question arises in my mind whether this bill is in harmony and good faith with the two treaties that we have made with the Empire of China, and whether we do not leave it in such position that the Executive will be called upon to interpose, as once before, against the legislation of Congress.

Mr. President, some of our wisest statesmen heretofore have regarded with some apprehension the large amount of foreign immigration to this country as threatening to the durability and perpetuity of our Republic. I foresee that that idea is one that is likely to grow. The measure proposed here now is one that has been heretofore entirely unusual in our theory or practice; such as a sudden change of closing the doors to any people when they have hitherto been wide open, I regard as a question that should be treated with some delicacy. It seems to me that there are some rigors in this bill that ought to be softened.

I have voted for nearly all the amendments that have been hitherto proposed, and I trust that some of them may yet be adopted.

But besides the passing upon this question by the Executive after the bill leaves us, it may be brought up for the adjudication of the courts. Will they say that this law is according to the two treaties we have made with that people? I know it is the opinion of some, it is my opinion, that the last law passed by Congress is the supreme law of the land in spite of any treaty, but that it is not the opinion of every Senator; it is not the opinion of all those who have hitherto spoken on the subject. I do not know exactly how that question will be decided. At all events I trust that the bill will receive the amendment to shorten the time, and various amendments that have been proposed by the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, whatever may be said about the propriety of the enactment of this bill into a law as it now stands under the provisions of the treaties between the United States and China, I think there can be no difference whatever in the judgment of thoughtful men that the amendment now pending offered by the Senator from California [Mr. FARLEY] is open to two very serious objections.

This bill, in its terms, is one to carry out treaty stipulations with China, and the amendment proposes to declare that no State or Federal court shall naturalize Chinese subjects. In the first place, therefore, this amendment does not belong upon this bill; it is not germane; it has no connection whatever with the subject that it is proposed to treat upon and the ends that are sought to be accomplished by the Senators from California and Nevada. Besides that, it is exactly in contravention of and in direct opposition to the stipulations of two existing treaties. Article 5 of the treaty made at Washington on the 28th of July in the year of our Lord 1868 begins with this language:

The United States of America and the Emperor of China cordially recognize the inherent and inalienable right of man to change his home and allegiance, and also the mutual advantage of the free migration and emigration of their citizens and subjects, respectively, from the one country to the other, for purposes of curiosity, of trade, or as permanent residents.

Article II of the treaty that was last made declares that—

Chinese subjects, whether proceeding to the United States as teachers, students, merchants, or from curiosity, together with their body and household servants, and Chinese laborers who are now in the United States shall be allowed to go and come of their own free will and accord, and shall be accorded all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to the citizens and subjects of the most favored nation.

This amendment, therefore, proposes not only to exclude from naturalization as citizens of the United States the class that is regarded by the citizens of the Pacific coast as objectionable, but declares that those Chinese who are here with the concurrence of all parties shall be excluded from advantages which have been guaranteed to them solemnly by two treaties; that is to say, that a Chinese merchant or a Chinese trader or a Chinese scholar or a Chinese traveler, who may come here for purposes admitted by everybody to be innocent and lawful, shall be excluded from naturalization by the courts of the States and by the courts of the nation if they desire to become naturalized and are declared by the courts to be proper subjects of naturalization.

I should hope, Mr. President, that this spirit of proscription and intolerance, which to my mind is obviously manifest in some portions of this bill, would not be extended so as to violate the specific terms of a treaty solemnly twice declared, and do injustice to a class of citizens who are here lawfully and to whom there is no objection from any quarter whatever.

Mr. FARLEY. I have no disposition to take up the time of the Senate in the further discussion of this matter; but the position taken by the Senator from Kansas in reference to the naturalization of Chinamen demands notice. If he had read further from the Burlingame treaty, he would have found——

Mr. INGALLS. Let me anticipate the Senator. I know what he intends to call my attention to. It is to the closing paragraph of the section succeeding the one which I read.

Mr. FARLEY. Exactly.

Mr. INGALLS. It is that—

Nothing herein contained shall be held to confer naturalization upon citizens of the United States in China, nor upon the subjects of China in the United States.

Mr. FARLEY. Precisely.

Mr. INGALLS. I recognize the fact fully. Of course the treaty could not do that.

Mr. FARLEY. Then the position taken by the Senator from Kansas is an objection to what the Chinese people acquiesced in in making this treaty, that there was nothing in the treaty that gave the right to American citizens to be naturalized in China or——

Mr. INGALLS. Oh, no, Mr. President, I trust the Senator will allow me to interrupt him there. It does not bear upon the right at all, but simply declares that that treaty itself shall not be held to confer naturalization.

Mr. FARLEY. Precisely, just as I said.

Mr. INGALLS. Not that they may not be naturalized.

Mr. FARLEY. There is no misunderstanding between the Senator and myself. That subject was fully discussed here last spring and by some very able lawyers on the other side of the Chamber as well as on this. I did not claim then, nor do I claim now, that under the provisions of that treaty the courts were bound to refuse naturalization to Chinamen. I say that the treaty itself cannot confer the power upon the courts to act on that question, but it is solely and purely a matter for legislative action. It is true that the treaty said that nothing therein contained should authorize Chinamen to become citizens of the United States, or citizens of the United States to become subjects of China. But in order to make this question beyond any doubt, so as to place it beyond the double construction that has been given to the power of the courts to naturalize Chinamen, I have proposed this amendment to this bill. The courts of the United States in some of the States have been admitting Chinamen to citizenship. The courts of my State and the circuit court of the United States held in California, presided over by Judge Sawyer, have decided that they were not entitled to be naturalized; but the courts in Massachusetts and some of the courts in New York have held otherwise, and have admitted them to citizenship. And in order to clear that point, to make it perfectly clear before the people of the country, I simply propose this amendment, so that it will become settled that the courts are not authorized to admit these people to citizenship of the United States.

Mr. INGALLS. What objection have the citizens of California to allowing Massachusetts to naturalize a Chinaman in that State if she desire?

Mr. FARLEY. I have always understood, and I do now understand, and still think, that the honorable Senator from Kansas is a very able lawyer, and why should he ask me a question hardly needs an answer.

Mr. INGALLS. What objection has he if she desire it?

Mr. FARLEY. The objection to it, I reply, is this: if they become citizens of Massachusetts they are citizens in California if they go there.

Mr. INGALLS. Yes.

Mr. FARLEY. Why ask that kind of a question, then?

Mr. INGALLS. Because the objections I have heard the Senators urge to this kind of Chinese migration are that these people are not citizens, that they come for the purpose of remaining briefly and taking away the fruits of their labor, that the repugnance to them is based upon the fact that they do not assimilate with the great body of citizens.

Mr. FARLEY. Mr. President, I will try to talk so that the Senator from Kansas will understand me. I am opposed to the naturalization of Chinamen who come here on any mission, either to labor or for pleasure or for business or otherwise. They are not of us; they are not entitled to be of us; and I am opposed to their being naturalized in any court of the United States or in any court of any State. The position taken by the honorable Senator from Kansas, when he wants to know what objection there could be by California to having Chinamen naturalized in Massachusetts, answers itself: because a citizen made such in one State is a citizen of another if he chooses to go to another State. Therefore his argument on that point falls to the ground.

I shall insist upon this amendment. It is perfectly germane to this bill. There is nothing about it in regard to which the point can be raised that it was not proper to be attached to this bill, because we are legislating on the subject of Chinese immigration. I am perfectly willing to submit the question to a vote of this body to determine whether they shall become citizens or not.

Mr. MAXEY. The act of 1870 extends the naturalization laws to persons of African descent. That act was amended in 1875, as will be found in chapter 80, volume 18 of the statutes.

Mr. FARLEY. I am familiar with that legislation.

Mr. MAXEY. The provision is that—

> Section 2169 is amended by inserting, in the first line, after the word "aliens," the words "being free white persons, and to aliens."

So that the remark of the Senator from Kansas does not apply, for if there had been anything in his point under the treaty of 1868 it was superseded by subsequent legislation, the Supreme Court having decided that a law subsequent to a treaty repeals the treaty if inconsistent with it.

Mr. FARLEY. But notwithstanding that provision of the statute these people have been admitted to citizenship in some of the States of the Union, and I have mentioned Massachusetts because I had the authority of one of the honorable Senators from that State for my statement. I had the authority of the senior Senator [Mr. DAWES] in a discussion carried on between that honorable Senator and Senators Blaine and Sargent on this very question. The Senator from Massachusetts then admitted that in the State of Massachusetts the courts had admitted Chinese to citizenship. I hold that as being high authority for my statement that that State does admit Chinamen to citizenship. In order to make the matter perfectly clear that that shall not be done, I hope this amendment will be adopted. It can do no harm. If the people of the United States are in favor of admitting Chinese to citizenship, let the Senate vote down this amendment; if they are opposed to it, let them settle that question now as we are legislating upon the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. FARLEY] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well.

Mr. BROWN. Before the vote is taken I simply wish to remark that I do not desire to see the naturalization of Chinese in this country, but I am not satisfied that under the treaties as they now exist we have a right to refuse to naturalize them while we naturalize other foreigners. There are some Chinese who are now here who are intelligent people, and some of them are assimilating with us, some of them are members of churches, some of them are Christian men. There are some of them who would make good citizens. For the present, therefore, I should be unwilling to say, without further investigation upon that point, that there was no case where a Chinaman could properly become a citizen of the United States. If we can get rid of the treaty obligations honorably, or rather if we are not bound by treaty stipulation that would prohibit us from excluding them from naturalization while we admit other foreigners, and if the naturalization comes to a point where it becomes at all serious, Congress can interfere and enact a positive statute on this question. For the present bill, and in the present state of things under the treaties, I am not prepared to vote for the entire exclusion of Chinese from naturalization.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator if we do not already exclude this class of people from naturalization by our statute? I think we do.

Mr. BROWN. If we do, then this additional legislation is unnecessary.

Mr. FARLEY. It is to make the matter entirely clear.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If I did not know the sincerity of my friends from California in their desire to accomplish what the treaty now allows us to accomplish in a reasonable way on this subject, I should have supposed if I were a stranger here that the object was to break down this bill and to load it with incongruous provisions to defeat in the end any legislation at all. This amendment proposed by the Senator from California on my left [Mr. FARLEY] has nothing whatever to do with the question that this bill proposes, and that this last treaty, which is the only one I am speaking of, deals with. That is a question simply of the incoming persons who are not now in the United States, and who have no other right to come here than such as the laws of nature, whatever they may be—I am not going into that again—may give. Now, coming or going is an entirely different thing from naturalization, from being admitted to citizenship; and if there is anybody here who is a real friend of the substance of this bill—I am not speaking of its details or of its excess or want of excess—if there is anybody here who is really in favor of the substance of this bill, to deal with the subject of it and nothing else, I should expect that that person would vote against any amendment that would introduce any element into the bill that did not legitimately and correctly belong to it. This certainly does not.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, my colleague [Mr. PENDLETON] is detained from his seat by indisposition, and at his request I have agreed to pair with him on many questions that arose on this bill which would tend to change the present character of the bill. If at liberty to vote, I should vote against this amendment, but I shall refrain from voting on this and on other questions. My vote not being recorded, I think it proper that I should state very briefly the position I occupy in regard to this bill. My colleague not being here to state his own opinion and to vote, I am at a loss sometimes whether to consider myself paired or not on a particular amendment. I shall very briefly state the position I occupy in regard to the bill and will refrain from voting except where I know that my vote would conform to his.

Mr. President, I had long since made up my mind to vote for some fair, just, prudent measure to restrain immigration from China to the United States. My own observation when on a visit to the Pacific coast, what I have heard in the debates now and in times past, and what I have read upon the subject, convinced me fully that some proper legislation ought to be adopted by Congress to prevent the vast immigration that will probably pour into this country from all China unless it is restrained by law.

I recognize as fundamental the principle stated by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] that every nation has an inherent right to prescribe who shall come and share the advantages of its institutions and its citizenship. No nation could deprive itself of that right. The power is expressly given to Congress by our Constitution to frame laws for the naturalization of foreigners. We have always reserved the right to control who shall come here and who shall exercise rights and privileges under our laws. But there is another thing that is equally clear, and that is that it has always been the public policy of this country from the very foundation of the Government to open the doors wide to the immigration of foreigners from all the nations of the world. Never before, I suppose, in our history has such a bill as this been presented to the Congress of the United States.

The policy of our country has always been to invite foreigners to come among us. In this way more than one-third of our population—it is said considerably more than one-third of our population—is composed either of persons of foreign birth or of descendants of persons who have migrated to this country since the adoption of the Constitution. Probably only about one-half of our population is native born, or the descendants of persons who were living here at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. It is by this flow of immigration into our borders that our country has increased more rapidly than any other nation in ancient or in modern times. We have now fifty million people, where within a century there were but three or four millions. This has been due largely to the system of foreign immigration coming from the European countries, which has enabled us to extend the boundaries of our country, utilizing new land and extending our civilization into regions that were a waste and a wilderness only a few years ago. In thirty years our population has doubled, and largely by the aid of this foreign immigration.

It has been the public policy of this country to invite foreigners from all lands to come here. We have not only given them our public lands upon their declaring their intention to become citizens, we have made them in a very brief period citizens with the right to vote and hold office; we have protected them in their rights as against the country of their nativity; we have negotiated treaties for their protection against the rights of their parent country; we have threatened violence to defend them in their rights, and we have done the utmost we could not only to encourage their immigration but to protect and foster the immigrants.

Last year there came into this country nearly eight hundred thousand immigrants from European countries, and this year in the two months that have already transpired this rate of immigration is increasing; and we are continually inviting immigration. The different States, especially of the South and of the West, have by emigration aid societies, if I may so call them, enticed and invited immigrants to come here from all the countries of Europe.

Now, Mr. President, when we stop and pause in that public policy and adopt the exactly opposite course and prevent and prohibit—for that is what the bill does—immigration, it is a great step in our national history. I do not doubt our right to do so; I do not doubt our power to do so; Congress may do it with or without regard to the treaty. Congress may violate a treaty if to do so would promote the public interest. No doubt our law, and this bill when passed by Congress being a law, would supersede any treaty that there may be on the statute-book on this subject.

But, sir, it is a grave and a difficult problem how far we ought to go in this direction. Any step we take in this way is a reversal of the public policy of this country from the beginning. We have already taken care to make a treaty with China to enable us to pass certain legislation limiting, restraining, or suspending, but not prohibiting immigration from China to this country. That has been done so that we violate no treaty if we conform to the terms of the recent treaty with China in our legislation; but when we in Congress pass a law that no portion of the people of Asia, no portion of more than one-half the whole people of the civilized world, shall come to this country, we take a grave and important step, and we ought to do it with care and deliberation.

When this debate commenced I had no more doubt about the necessity and propriety of voting for a bill on this subject than I had as to any ordinary act of legislation, because I had become convinced that, although it was exceptional legislation, contrary to the general habits of our country, yet the dangers that threatened our Pacific coast and might extend further and further eastward did demand that we should pass some law to restrain and limit this immigration; but it does seem to me, on consideration, that in the very first act that is proposed under this treaty we have gone not only to the extreme of the treaty but we have gone beyond the reasonable bounds of the treaty. We have not only suspended for twenty years all immigration of Chinese laborers here, but we have adopted all the most offensive features of European laws; we have adopted the passport system by which no man of the Chinese race can travel anywhere in the United States without showing his passport; we have adopted some of the most offensive features of European despotism, I may say, as against the Chinese.

It does seem to me that this bill might have been limited, restrained in such terms that it might have prevented the threatened evils without seeming to violate a treaty and to go in hot haste in a new policy that is foreign to the general habits of our people and of our country. I have voted for and would still vote for the amendments that have been proposed to limit and restrain the words of this bill. I think a suspension of twenty years is in violation of the spirit of the treaty, as we gather it from the correspondence that is laid on our table. The treaty itself expressly provides:

> Whenever, in the opinion of the Government of the United States, the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States, or their residence therein, affects or threatens to affect the interests of that country, or to endanger the good order of the said country or of any locality within the territory thereof, the Government of China agrees that the Government of the United States may regulate, limit, or suspend such coming or residence, but may not absolutely prohibit it. The limitation or suspension shall be reasonable.

How is it possible to go further than it is proposed to go by this bill? Not only is restraint put upon all immigration of Chinese into this country, except those who are professors or teachers or merchants, but that immigration is suspended absolutely for twenty years. Is that a reasonable exercise of the powers granted by this treaty? It seems to me it is going too far. I think there ought to be a shorter trial of such an act as this. A suspension for five years would accomplish all the beneficial purposes proposed by this bill. It may be that at the end of five years the people of California will themselves demand the useful labor of many of the Chinese. They may by that time have learned to discriminate between the labor of skilled artisans, shrewd, able men such as exist in China, and the coolies that have been sent over here, the criminals, the paupers, the contract laborers, who ought to be excluded from this country whether they come from Asia or from Europe.

Mr. FARLEY. Does the honorable Senator from Ohio desire to have brought to this country skilled laborers from China to compete with our own skilled laborers?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not want to go too far in this new policy which reverses the whole policy of the Government from the foundation. I want to go slowly. What is the evil to be guarded against? The people of California and the Pacific coast say that they are fearful of being inundated by a vast horde of hungry coolies or contract laborers—I call them coolies—ignorant, vicious, debased, who come here without wives and children, who come here to degrade our society, an immigration of the lowest and worst classes of the oldest nation of Asia. It seems to me we might guard against the evils of this dangerous immigration without going to the extreme of excluding all laborers from China. We may limit, restrain, suspend, but we must not prohibit immigration. Here is a prohibition for twenty years, longer than the life of any Senator on this floor, for in twenty years' time all of us will have disappeared from the stage in all human probability.

It seems to me that this measure might be just as effective to accomplish the purpose desired by limiting the time to five years, and by making other exceptions that might be proposed, not to extend it to the whole mass of Chinese laborers, not to extend it to every person in China except a few favored, selected classes. The power which we asked China yielded to us. We, by the terms of the former treaty that existed between China and the United States, had no power to pass such a law as this; we had no power to prohibit this immigration; but when our difficulties were stated to China she yielded to us certain rights, the right to limit, restrain, or suspend, provided it should be done in a reasonable way, not to prohibit, not to discriminate against the Chinese more than is absolutely necessary to meet the threatened evil in California. It seems to me we have in this bill gone too far, and this bill has been framed not with the spirit of guarding the people of the Pacific coast against a threatened inundation of a pagan horde of contract laborers, but in the spirit of reversing the whole policy of this Government, of excluding all foreigners under a hue and cry against the Chinese race, however skilled, however useful, however meritorious they may be.

It seems to me, sir, it is only the entering wedge of another policy which may be in a short time proposed to exclude European laborers as well. It may open other doors of danger. There may be another and still greater reversal of the policy of this Government. That is the way I have felt about this bill. While I had no more doubt of voting for it when the debate was opened, I feel on reflection that the committee, acting no doubt under the strong spirit that animates all the Senators from the Pacific coast, perfectly honest in their intention and design, have been guided by that spirit. They feel no doubt more keenly than the rest of us the danger that threatens the Pacific coast; but they have gone too far.

I therefore feel disposed to vote for any amendments which will modify this bill and make the experiment of a suspension for say five years of the immigration of this class of laborers. Then let us watch whether or not within the five years the current of opinion may not change. Ten or fifteen years ago the people of California were anxious for this immigration. It was this immigration that enabled us to build the Central Pacific Railroad in such a rapid manner. Then this labor was courted, although it was degraded. They have changed their minds about it. It seems to me if we tried the experiment for five years, when the law could be renewed if Congress chose, it would be a wise exercise of the powers granted by this treaty. To go beyond that is not, it seems to me, within the spirit or the language of the treaty. If my colleague were present I should vote for the amendments I have indicated, and then probably vote for the bill as so amended. As he is not here, I shall refrain from voting.

Now, in regard to the proposition to amend the naturalization laws; why ingraft it on this bill? Has any Chinaman been naturalized in California? Not at all. How many have been naturalized in the United States? I do not know that any Senator has stated a single case.

Mr. FARLEY. I stated before, and, as I supposed, in the hearing of the honorable Senator from Ohio, that it was admitted by one of the Senators from Massachusetts that the courts of that State had been in the habit of admitting Chinese to citizenship.

Mr. SHERMAN. How many?

Mr. FARLEY. I ask the honorable Senator, if he will pardon me, what difference does it make whether they are naturalized in Massachusetts, or New York, or in California?

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me get an answer to the question how many have been so naturalized? I never heard of but one man, and he was a graduate of Yale College, who I understood was naturalized. I heard so, probably on the ground that he was nearer white than black; he probably had some of our boasted Caucasian blood in his veins, as there are many people of Caucasian blood in China nearer white than black. Under the decisions of the courts of Ohio, and perhaps of other States, such a man would come within the definition of a white man as distinguished from a man of another race. Is that a danger that alarms the Senator from California? I do not attribute to him the idea that he offers his amendment merely to prevent some Senators from voting for the bill, because I do not believe it——

Mr. FARLEY. If the Senator attributes anything of that kind to me, he does it unjustly.

Mr. SHERMAN. I said I did not attribute that to the Senator.

Mr. FARLEY. I have stated before the reasons why I offered the amendment. The Senator well knows that we had on our statute of naturalization for year after year until the late unpleasantness was settled between the various portions of the country the word "white." That was stricken out of the statutes, and then in 1875 they put it back in a sort of modified shape.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand that perfectly.

Mr. FARLEY. Then why not put in this bill that the Federal or State courts shall not be authorized to naturalize Chinamen and let them become citizens of the United States?

Mr. SHERMAN. We understand that perfectly. Under the old naturalization law none but a white man could be naturalized. But who was a white man? Under that very law it was decided in the courts of Ohio and in many of the other States that if a man was nearer white than black he was a white man. The line must be drawn somewhere. The law was not that a man should have pure Caucasian blood; it was not necessary to prove that he was the son of an associate of a pilgrim father, or that he was one of the cavaliers, or that he was of a particular kind of blue blood. That was not necessary; but he was simply to show that he was a white man; that is, that he was nearer white than black; and several of the courts in many of the States decided that under the old naturalization law a mulatto man who was more white than black could be naturalized. The question sometimes arose at the polls whether a man from his appearance was a white man or a black man, and the judges would decide according to their affinity. If they were Republicans the judges would be very apt to decide that he was a white man; if they were Democrats the judges would decide that he was a negro man and exclude him.

Mr. FARLEY. I thought that judges were not governed by their passions.

Mr. SHERMAN. Sometimes. But after that by express stipulation of law the African race was allowed to be naturalized. Now, in some of the courts they hold yet that certain classes of Chinese are nearer white than black. In California it seems that a Chinese must necessarily be not a white man, cannot be a white man, although some of them are about as white as some of our own Anglo-Saxons.

Now, Mr. President, is it worth while to throw that controversy into this? Does the Senator from California fear that because Massachusetts has naturalized a few men who graduated at her colleges or because some few Chinese are willing to take the oath of citizenship, they threaten the safety and good order of the Pacific coast? Why, sir, it is very ridiculous. It is introducing into this question a troublesome element which is not properly here; and if I had any right to appeal to Senators on the other side who do not agree with me in regard to this bill, I would ask them not to encumber this bill with a proposition that raises a new question not at all connected with the danger that they are seeking to protect the Pacific coast from.

Mr. FARLEY. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. SHERMAN. I never refuse, although it is not very pleasant to be interrupted constantly.

Mr. FARLEY. I understood the honorable Senator from Ohio to say a short time ago, and to criticise this bill upon an entirely different proposition from that on which he opposes it now.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. FARLEY. The objections he raised to the bill would amount to the defeat of the measure in fact if his points were good as to other provisions of the bill. Now the Senator falls back on this proposition. After having stated to the Senate that his objections to the bill were serious, he falls back on this proposed amendment as intended to jeopardize the passage of the bill when he had already stated objections that he had to the bill that would be fatal if good, that would be ruinous to the bill, and I apprehend my colleague and myself would not advocate the passage of it if the objections which were made to it by the honorable Senator from Ohio were to prevail.

Mr. SHERMAN. In other words, not only is the bill as reported from the committee unnecessarily objectionable in containing provisions which go beyond the fair meaning of the treaty, but now the Senator from California, without the report of the committee, indeed you may say against the report of the committee, wishes to put another obnoxious feature on the bill, which has no connection with and does not arise out of the danger which leads to the passage of the bill as reported. That is the condition which will cause the amendment he presents to form another objection to the measure.

We interfere with the naturalization laws. However you may regard this measure, and I am not sure what the future will say of the passage of the bill, it is a dangerous experiment with our public policy. It is a departure from the principle which invites all men to our country to share in our civilization and to help develop with us a great republic. Those who like myself see dangers from Chinese immigration which do not spring out of European immigration are willing to give to the Senators from California a law that will protect them against the danger, but in doing so we do not want to go further than is necessary against the well-established public policy of this country. There is the trouble.

It seems to me the bill might have been made effective to prevent this tide of immigration; it might have contained moderate provisions, simple in their character, which would have prevented the landing here of great hordes of Chinese pauper laborers without striking at all the laborers who might come from China. Discriminations might have been made. From anything that has been said in this discussion there is at present at least no danger whatever of the immigration to this county of that class of skilled laborers in China who, when they come here, would be like comers from all other lands, who would add to our country their skilled labor and aid us in developing our country. Very few of that kind of men will leave China, because, if I read the history of China aright, they are more like the French in that particular than other nations; there are no emigrants of the better class, or but few; none, you may say.

If we confine the operation of the bill to the particular class of pauper laborers, contract laborers, and if we protect you from that kind of "immigration," you ought to ask us to go no further. If there are intelligent Chinamen, skilled laborers, able to read and write, with wives and families, who choose to come here and make their homes among us and help us develop this country, there is no danger from that kind of immigration, and no Senator has alleged that there is danger from it. Therefore I think there ought to have been a discrimination between laborers so as not to exclude all laborers, or indeed all China except a few learned professors, but only to exclude the class of laborers who are brought here under contract, paupers without wives or children or homes. I think the bill has gone too far.

This is all I desire to say, Mr. President. If my colleague were here I should feel at liberty to vote to make the bill more perfect in the respects I have stated; and, if it could be made so, I should vote for the bill with the greatest pleasure, because to a certain extent I believe the case is made out that the kind of immigrants who come to this country from China ought to be prohibited. We have a right to prohibit them, or to suspend their immigration for a time, and, although it would be an exception from our public policy, it would be a wise exception which could be justified before the people of all parts of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll will be called on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. FARLEY] to the substitute reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FARLEY, (when Mr. BUTLER's name was called.) The honorable Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] asked me to announce that he was paired with the honorable Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] on all questions affecting this bill.

Mr. CAMDEN, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the senior Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY.]

Mr. HAWLEY, (when his name was called.) The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] on other questions, but with me on this question. I should vote "nay" if I were at liberty.

Mr. McPHERSON, (when his name was called.) Upon this question I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. SEWELL.] If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SHERMAN, (when Mr. PENDLETON'S named was called.) I am paired, as I have already stated, with my colleague, [Mr. PENDLETON.] If he were here, I should vote "nay," and he would no doubt vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT, (when his name was called.) To accommodate the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON,] who is ill, I have paired with him on this amendment. I should vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. ROLLINS, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Florida, (Mr. JONES.) I make the announcement now for all the subsequent votes that may be taken on this measure.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 26, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Bayard,	Farley,	Jones of Nevada,	Teller,
Beck,	Garland,	Maxey,	Vance,
Call,	George,	Miller of Cal.,	Vest,
Cameron of Wis.,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Pugh,	Walker.
Coke,	Jackson,	Ransom,
Fair,	Jonas,	Slater,

NAYS—22.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Ingalls,	Morrill,
Allison,	Edmunds,	Lapham,	Plumb,
Blair,	Frye,	McDill,	Saunders,
Brown,	Hale,	McMillan,	Sawyer.
Conger,	Hill of Colorado,	Miller of N. Y.,
Davis of Illinois,	Hoar,	Mitchell,

ABSENT—28.

Anthony,	Grover,	Kellogg,	Rollins,
Butler,	Hampton,	Lamar,	Saulsbury,
Camden,	Harrison,	Logan,	Sewell,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hawley,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Davis of W. Va.,	Hill of Georgia,	Mahone,	Van Wyck,
Ferry,	Johnston,	Pendleton,	Williams,
Groome,	Jones of Florida,	Platt,	Windom.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment is in the shape of an additional section, proposed by the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. GROVER,] who is absent. It will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as an additional section:

SEC. —. That the words "Chinese laborers" wherever used in this act shall be construed to mean both skilled and unskilled laborers, and Chinese employed in mining.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk called the roll.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to announce that on this amendment also I am paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.]

Mr. SLATER. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. GROVER] is unable to attend the session of the Senate to-day, but is paired with the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. VAN WYCK.] If my colleague were here he would vote "yea" on this amendment and the Senator from Nebraska would vote "nay" I understand.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER.] I should like to vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to state that I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] on all questions relating to this measure. I shall not trouble the Senate by repeating the announcement.

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 22, as follows:

YEAS—25.

Bayard,	Farley,	Jones of Nevada,	Vance,
Beck,	Garland,	Maxey,	Vest,
Call,	George,	Miller of Cal.,	Voorhees,
Cameron of Wis.,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Walker.
Cockrell,	Harris,	Pugh,
Coke,	Jackson,	Ransom,
Fair,	Jonas	Slater

NAYS—22.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Ingalls,	Morrill,
Allison,	Edmunds,	Lapham,	Saunders,
Blair,	Frye,	McDill,	Sawyer,
Brown,	Hale,	McMillan,	Teller.
Conger,	Hill of Colorado,	Miller of N. Y.,
Davis of Illinois,	Hoar,	Mitchell,

ABSENT—29.

Anthony,	Hampton,	Logan,	Sewell,
Butler,	Harrison,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Camden,	Hawley,	Mahone,	Van Wyck,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hill of Georgia,	Pendleton,	Williams,
Davis of W. Va.,	Johnston,	Platt,	Windom.
Ferry,	Jones of Florida,	Plumb,
Groome,	Kellogg,	Rollins,
Grover,	Lamar,	Saulsbury,

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. In section 5, line 29, I move to strike out the words after "arrive." The latter part of the section reads thus:

This passport and the identity of the person named in it shall, before such person goes on board any vessel to proceed to the United States, be viséd by the indorsement of the diplomatic representative of the United States in the Empire of China, or of the consular representative of the United States at the port or place from which the person named in the passport is about to depart. Such passport shall be prima facie evidence of the fact set forth therein, and shall be produced to the collector of customs of the port in the district in the United States at which the person named therein shall arrive, and afterward produced to the proper authorities of the United States whenever lawfully demanded.

It is the last clause which I propose to strike out, the words "and afterward produced to the proper authorities of the United States whenever lawfully demanded."

A British subject coming to the United States is not required, in the first place, to get a passport from his government. He is not required to have it viséd by any representative of the United States in Great Britain; he is not required to be kept on board when he reaches a port of the United States until his name is reported to the custom-house officer and an examination is made to see whether he corresponds to the description given of him in the passport; and he is certainly not required to carry his passport in his pocket and produce it to every officer he meets in the United States who chooses to demand it from him.

We have agreed solemnly by the treaty that a Chinese subject shall have the same rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to a British subject or a German subject, or a subject of any other nation. We require this passport and all these burdensome provisions of the subject of no other nation on earth, but propose, if the bill passes, to require these conditions hereafter of the Chinese subject. The Chinaman coming here is usually not able to speak our language. After he has landed at the American port and has presented his passport there, it seems to me it is surely an unnecessary burden to require him from time to time to produce the passport to an officer of the United States. If his baggage should be misplaced, or if in any way he should lose the passport or it should be destroyed after he has landed in the United States, not being able to speak our language, not understanding our laws or our forms of procedure, he might be seized and fined and imprisoned for being found here illegally, and be unable to defend himself.

It seems to me that to that extent at least this is a very unreasonable burden to impose upon the Chinaman. I think the advocates of the bill might at least be content when they have cumbered him with all the restrictions that are mentioned in the bill previous to this, after he has passed through the custom-house and has landed, to let him alone then while he remains peaceably in the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As one member of the committee I assisted in framing these amendments, although a good many of the provisions did not meet my own sense of what it was wise and right to do. I thought as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] has stated, that we were pushing the thing unreasonably, particularly in regard to the period of time, which I thought at first ought to be for five years, but I was willing to go for the general scope of the bill at ten.

When we came to the passport question, the suggestion made by the Senator from Georgia appealed to our consideration. We did not overlook it. First, we tested it by "the most favored nation" clause in the treaty, and on investigation we were all satisfied (although as a first impression I had great doubt about it, but I became satisfied myself) that this passport provision would stand consistently with "the most favored nation" clause. We found one interesting historic precedent not touching persons but what "the most favored nation" clause meant in treaties, which confirmed us in the opinion to which we came that the passport question is not touched by the favored nation clause in the treaty. Secondly, we were of opinion that this passport provision was one essential to the enjoyment of those who are entitled to come and go, securing them against molestation and trouble, and so on.

What the Senator from Georgia moves to strike out I shall cheerfully vote to strike out. It happened to stand in some other provision and was put in. As it now stands it really amounts to nothing, because the Chinaman is only obliged to produce his passport whenever it is lawfully demanded. There is not any law of the United States that I know of in the interior of the country which authorizes any officer whatever to demand anything of anybody except the payment of taxes. Therefore I have not the least objection to striking out the clause which the Senator proposes to strike out, but the main provision the committee thought was not inconsistent with the "most favored nation" clause, after a most careful investigation of the history of those clauses; and secondly, we thought that it was clearly within the real spirit, the beneficial spirit of the treaty, for the benefit of the people who under the treaty are still entitled to come and go.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] to the substitute reported from the committee.

The question being put, there were on division—ayes 20, noes 22.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to amend is lost.

Mr. BROWN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We will second the call for the yeas and nays; otherwise the thing is lost. At least I am willing to do so in order to open the question again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment can be renewed in the Senate. The Chair announced that it was lost.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is the usual practice, when a Senator immediately afterward calls for the yeas and nays, to consider that he is in time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there a second to the call for the yeas and nays?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, I wish to appeal to the friends of the bill to allow this amendment to be adopted and save time. It does not injure the bill a hair, in any possible particular.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I do not consider the amendment of any consequence whatever. I would as soon have the words stricken out as not.

Mr. FARLEY. Let it be reported, and if it is of no consequence we will withdraw objection to it.

The Acting Secretary read the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll will be called.

Mr. BROWN. If it is permitted, I am willing to take the question by another rising vote.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us ask consent to withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BROWN. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The call for the yeas and nays is withdrawn and a recount demanded.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be taken by a viva voce vote. I presume there will be no objection to striking out the words.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the sundry amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is only one amendment, because we have been amending the amendment of the committee.

Mr. PLATT. There was a section added relating to naturalization.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But that was an amendment to the amendment. It is all one amendment now. Am I not right, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is right.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then the bill being in the Senate, I move to amend the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, or my friend from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] can make it again, as he moved the amendment before——

Mr. INGALLS. The usual practice is, I believe, to act upon the amendments which have been agreed to as in Committee of the Whole, and then for the Chair to announce that the bill is open to amendment. It was my purpose, as I had announced, to renew the amendment I had offered substituting ten years for twenty years in the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There was only one amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, because we have been on the amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations all the time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. INGALLS. In line 4 of section 1, I move to strike out the word "twenty" and insert "ten," and on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas will wait until the Chair puts the question whether the Senate will concur in the committee amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; then it will be too late.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Vermont suggests, (and upon reflection I concur with him,) inasmuch as this is an entire amendment which has been agreed to as a substitute for the bill, if the Senate should concur in the amendment my amendment could not be made without a reconsideration of that vote. I therefore now offer the amendment in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, which will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In section 1, line 4, before the word "years," it is proposed to strike out "twenty" and insert "ten," so as to read:

That from and after the expiration of ninety days next after the passage of this act, and until the expiration of ten years next after the passage of this act, the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States be, and the same is hereby, suspended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the amendment of the Senator from Kansas the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. Mr. President, I wish to say but a few words on this amendment. The subject of Chinese immigration has very largely agitated the public mind of the Pacific coast for many years. As has been stated on this floor, there are large numbers of Chinamen on the coast to-day occupying the positions of artisans in most of the industrial pursuits there, to the exclusion in a great measure of the white artisans.

Twenty years may seem a long time in the life of a man, but it is a very short time in the life of a nation, and especially in the life of a nation that measures its existence by fifty centuries of time. If this amendment should be agreed to we shall scarcely know a cessation of the discussion upon the Pacific coast; it will not be more than two or three years before the subject will be brought up again, and the country be agitated for the passage of a law at the end of the ten years' time. During that period the Chinamen who are there would not seek to go back, because from the restriction of the number of Chinese laborers who could come to the coast the natural tendency would be for a little improvement in the condition of those who are there. The processes of time could not operate so as to eliminate from their numbers in the ten years, and the Congress of the country would scarcely be any wiser at the end of the ten years in dealing with this question than they are to-day.

We wish repose, we wish rest, and we wish that a sufficient amount of time shall be allowed to test this political formula. I apprehend that scarcely any great question like this can be tested in ten years' time. The immigration has continued for thirty years; and as I said before, although twenty years may seem a long time in a man's life it is but a little time I hope in the life of this nation. It is but a little time as we know in the life of the Chinese nation. Before great changes could be made so as to show what the effect is the ten years would be over; in fact, in five or six years, in two or three years, the discussion might commence again.

I conjure the Senate to stand by the period of twenty years, because that will give time enough to show to the country whether we who have advocated this bill are earnest in our ideas or not.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Nevada another consideration, which is that the effect of Chinese immigration has been to prevent and keep out white immigration. The consequence of a short period would be to settle up the country by Chinese. We want white immigration from the older States and from Europe for the settlement of the country. If the term of this suspension is short, and the people we want know that in ten years the flood-gates will be opened again to the Chinese, they are not going to come to California, because about the time they would begin to settle in that country the Chinese would come in again, and they would come in competition with that race. That is an additional reason why we are contending for the longer term.

We want this question settled. If settled at all we want it settled so that it will remain settled for at least nearly twenty years. The agitation in the case of a shorter period, as the Senator from Nevada said, would begin directly, and as the time approaches toward the end of this suspension it would become fiercer and fiercer, and we should be continually in the state of unrest which we are now in and from which we desire to escape. If it be right to suspend this immigration for ten years it is right to suspend it for twenty years.

Mr. HOAR. Why not forty?

Mr. MILLER, of California. I do not know that that would be extravagant, but we are not contending for such a long period.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to inquire why not forty as well as twenty?

Mr. MILLER, of California. I should not object to forty; but we are not contending for that. There is no use in raising a hypothetical case here.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator a question? Does he deem the good faith of this nation bound not to prohibit the coming of these laborers?

Mr. MILLER, of California. I will answer that by saying that under the recent treaty we have the right to suspend this immigration so called. I do not know what the word "suspension" means if it does not mean to stop it for some time. When the Senator from Massachusetts is speaking and the Secretary of the President of the United States appears at the door, the President of the Senate asks him to suspend his remarks.

Mr. HOAR. Not for twenty years.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Until the secretary of the President has made his report to the Senate. The Senator does not keep on talking; he stops. That is what the word "suspend" means. It means to stop for a time.

We have also the power to regulate this immigration under the recent treaty, and "regulate" is a word of very broad meaning and broad signification. I do not see that it contravenes the treaty or the spirit of the treaty in the least to make this term twenty years. It was urged here in argument yesterday that the commissioners understood that the term was to be short. The commissioners refused to agree to a short term of suspension.

I want to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that the leaders of the Republican party in this country caused us on the Pacific coast to believe that he and they were in favor of the restriction of Chinese immigration. The Republican candidate for the Presidency, in speaking of the fact that a commission had been sent to China, distinctly said in his letter of acceptance that if that commission failed to obtain the consent of China to such a restriction, if their efforts there failed, it would be the duty of Congress——

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from California yield? I simply desire to inquire of the Senator from California if it would not be more agreeable to him to conclude his remarks to-morrow?

Mr. MILLER, of California. I have not any further remarks to make. I am about to conclude now.

Mr. HARRIS. I simply desire to consult the convenience of the Senator.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I am willing to vote now. I was simply urging some considerations why the period of suspension should not be reduced. I am willing to take a vote on the amendment now.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to say in reply to the honorable Senator from California that I do not so read the Republican platform. It states that—

Since the authority to regulate immigration and intercourse between the United States and foreign nations rests with the Congress of the United States and the treaty-making power, the Republican party, regarding the unrestricted immigration of the Chinese as a matter of grave concernment, under the exercise of both these powers, would limit and restrict that immigration by the enactment of such just, humane, and reasonable laws and treaties as will produce that result.

Undoubtedly the coming of what have been described as cooly laborers, undoubtedly the coming of the poor classes which have been discussed here, may be properly regulated by law, but it is only such provisions as are "just, humane, and reasonable" to which the Republican party commits itself.

Mr. SHERMAN. The term during which this proposed law is to last is the most important feature of the whole bill. I want to simply remind the Senate of what occurred in regard to the Hawaiian treaty. At the urgent request of the Pacific coast the Senate approved and ratified the Hawaiian treaty, and the House and Senate passed laws to carry it out. It was by its terms to last, I think, for ten years, but finally reduced to seven years. In those seven years we lost about $10,000,000 of revenue, and I do not believe the people of California gained one single thing, not an abatement of a quarter of a cent a pound on sugar, and I am told now there is a very strong sentiment in that State for abrogating the treaty, which they were before so anxious to continue for a long period. That may be the case now and if this period is reduced to ten years it takes away from the bill——

Mr. FARLEY. This is to be a law. We can repeal the law, but cannot repeal the treaty.

Mr. SHERMAN. That makes no difference. We reduced the term of the Hawaiian treaty to seven years, and now I doubt very much whether California would be willing to renew that treaty just as it is. At all events, there is an evidence of the change of popular sentiment in that community; it is the same on the Pacific coast as elsewhere. If this experiment can be tried for ten years, then if the people of the United States are satisfied with it they can renew it for another ten years and there would be no difficulty.

Mr. FARLEY. Let us vote on the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am willing to vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll will be called on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.]

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMDEN, (when his name was called.) I repeat that I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY.]

Mr. FARLEY, (when Mr. HAMPTON'S name was called.) The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] sent word by a Senator to get him paired on this subject, and I have succeeded in pairing him with the Senator from Pennsylvania. [Mr. MITCHELL.] The Senator from South Carolina would vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. McPHERSON, (when his name was called.) I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. SEWELL.] I should vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. MAXEY, (when his name was called.) On this particular amendment I am paired with the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. HARRISON,] who is necessarily absent. I should vote "nay" if he were here, and the Senator from Indiana would vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT, (when his name was called.) If the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON] with whom I am paired were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PUGH, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. KELLOGG] on this question. I should vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. SHERMAN, (when his name was called.) I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. PENDLETON.]

Mr. VEST, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. SAUNDERS.] He is for the amendment, and I am against it.

Mr. BECK, (when the name of Mr. WILLIAMS was called.) My colleague [Mr. WILLIAMS] is detained in Kentucky by sickness in his family. I do not know how he would vote on this amendment.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] on this question.

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Aldrich,	Davis of Illinois,	Hoar,	Mahone,
Allison,	Dawes,	Ingalls,	Morrill,
Blair,	Edmunds,	Lapham,	Plumb,
Brown,	Frye,	McDill,	Sawyer,
Conger,	Hale,	McMillan,	Teller.

NAYS—21.

Bayard,	Farley,	Jones of Nevada,	Vance,
Beck,	Garland,	Miller of Cal.,	Voorhees,
Call,	George,	Miller of N. Y.,	Walker.
Cameron of Wis.,	Gorman,	Morgan,
Coke,	Jackson,	Ransom,
Fair,	Jonas,	Slater,

ABSENT—35.

Anthony,	Hampton,	Lamar,	Saulsbury,
Butler,	Harris,	Logan,	Saunders,
Camden,	Harrison,	McPherson,	Sewell,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hawley,	Maxey,	Sherman,
Cockrell,	Hill of Colorado,	Mitchell,	Van Wyck,
Davis of W. Va.,	Hill of Georgia,	Pendleton,	Vest,
Ferry,	Johnston,	Platt,	Williams,
Groome,	Jones of Florida,	Pugh,	Windom.
Grover,	Kellogg,	Rollins,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. INGALLS. I have no further amendment to offer, but I call the attention of the Senate to the remarkable condition in which section 14 leaves any Chinamen who may unlawfully come within the jurisdiction of the United States under the provisions of this bill. Section 4 declares, beginning in line 4:

> And any Chinese who shall knowingly come into the United States contrary to the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

That is, he is to be subject to fine and imprisonment by the court. The next clause declares that if he comes into the country unlawfully he shall be removed to China by the collector of customs. It leaves him in rather a bad condition. It is not apparent by the terms of the proposed law whether he is first to be fined and imprisoned and then sent abroad, or whether he is first to be sent abroad and then fined and imprisoned.

Mr. McDILL. Mr. President, I have had an earnest desire to support this bill for the reason that I feel that I must pay attention to the voice of those gentlemen who live where the Chinese mostly come, and whose voice seems to be almost unanimous against their presence.

In listening to the discussion, I have not been able to raise in my own mind any doubt about the power of Congress to restrict, to regulate, or to suspend the immigration of the Chinese; hence I have voted for all amendments that seemed to me to be within the spirit of the treaty; but there is a broad distinction in my mind between suspending immigration and prohibiting it. "Suspend" has a meaning much more limited than "prohibit;" and the very terms of the treaty with China, as well as the discussion with reference to the treaty, show that the Chinese people understood the difference between the terms "suspend" and "prohibit." It does seem to me that a proposition to prohibit this immigration for twenty years, in the face of a stipulation in the treaty that the suspension, regulation, or restriction shall be reasonable, is one that ought not to be entertained by a faith-keeping people.

Twenty years is the whole active life of almost any man; I believe in the old law books twenty-five years is called a life; and this is a proposition to prohibit this immigration during the life of the present generation. Can we do it in good faith, in the face of a stipulation that we will suspend only, not prohibit, and that all our legislation shall be reasonable? With my understanding of what is right, with my understanding of what is my duty in my endeavor to keep good faith with those with whom my country makes treaties, I cannot vote for the period of twenty years.

Hence, the amendment of the Senator from Kansas having failed, I must record my vote against the bill; but I want to put upon record my earnest desire to do something, if the citizens of the Pacific coast would be satisfied with what I thought was reasonable to help them out of the difficulties which seem to surround them.

I understand that both of the great political parties of the day have in a measure pledged themselves in aid of the people of the Pacific coast with reference to Chinese immigration; but they have not (at least I have not so understood the pledges) pledged themselves to do an unreasonable thing. They have not pledged themselves to do a thing that would be in violation of good faith, in violation of the spirit and the terms of the treaty.

Now that we have come to this stage of the bill, and as the Senate, after the long discussion that has been had, has by a majority determined to retain the limit of twenty years mentioned in the bill as reported by the committee, I have no other course left for me, with my understanding of my duty, than to give a negative vote against the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, after what the Senator from Iowa [Mr. McDILL] has so well said, I do not think it necessary or desirable that I should occupy more than a moment of your time. I agree to what he has said entirely. I was desirous of accomplishing what the intelligent people of California think is for their interest, not in injuring anybody else but in suspending for a reasonable time the incoming of an alien people who our friends in California think are injurious to their welfare.

The people of California, like the people of the rest of the United States, have not only the interest that I have named, but they have the interest of honor and good faith to look after. They through their representative, the Government of the United States, have entered into a compact that binds their good faith as well as it does ours, as part of the people of this Government. That good faith is pledged to the Empire of China in amity and good-will to exercise this power, (which we had inherently, but which we had surrendered by a former treaty,) carefully, prudently, reasonably, in order that we might test by a suspension for a fair time the experiment of seeing what would become of the Chinamen here and of the interests of the United States meantime.

In the face of that it is proposed by this bill to absolutely prohibit, not in technical violation of the treaty but in violation of its spirit, the incoming of these people for twenty years, no matter now, as the amendment is, how intelligent the Chinese man may be, no matter how skillful he may be, no matter that he has discovered the means of ameliorating the condition of workingmen and other people and can bring his knowledge of that discovery to the people of the United States in a thousand of the arts that enter into the welfare and happiness of mankind. If he is a man who works not only with his hands as a servile laborer but who works like the intelligent mechanic of New England, like the Irishman or German man, who has brought his skill from another country to contribute to his own welfare and ours here, he is tabooed, with his family and his children, and is absolutely excluded for twenty years, the whole of the lifetime, for practical purposes, of any family anywhere on the face of the earth, from seeking the benefit of our free institutions and contributing his knowledge, and his skill, and his intelligence to the welfare of our own people and to the welfare of himself, when there is room enough on this continent yet for us all.

Is that honorable toward the Government of China and its people? Is it that reasonable good faith and amity that we are bound to exercise to a friendly country? Is it more than that, I will say to the friends of this measure, as it now stands—is it that wise policy which will bring success to any politician who is seeking to make a party call upon some other nationality to help him in a raid of this kind?

The people of the California coast, although they do not want the Chinaman just now, as they did want him a few years ago and got him, want the trade of that empire. They want the enormous resources that that will pour out for the wealth and the benefit of mankind to come to us; and wishing it they must compete for it. They must enter into a contest with every other of the several civilized nations besides us that are still left on the face of the globe, for the supremacy in that trade and for the wealth that it brings. How are you best to do it? By insolence? By unkindness? By dishonor? If anybody thinks that is a good way, he is about to try the experiment.

If you are desirous of promoting the welfare and the wealth of this country by making the Golden Gate a gate of gold, into which the wealth of the East shall be poured, you must do it by cultivating friendly relations with that supreme and enormous empire that exists upon the western shores of the Pacific; and your first step to do it is not the mere one that they have agreed we may take for a reasonable and temporary time, to suspend a particular class of immigration, but you make practically an indefinite prohibition against, not the servile labor of that empire, but against the intelligence, the skill, the co-ordinated and cultivated ability of every man who does not add professor, or scholar, or prince, or mandarin to his name.

Something has been said by my friend from California [Mr. MILLER] about Republicanism. If any Democrats on this floor think they are playing the game of bounce, as a late Senator from New York used to call it, on the political aspects of this question on the low grade of party politics, who think that during any time of this question they are going to make any political money out of that sort of business, they are mistaken in my opinion, for I have as much faith and I rather think a little more than most politicians, in the real, reflecting intelligence of the great body of the voters of the United States; and I do not believe that the body of the voters of the United States, be they our foreign fellow-citizens on the eastern coast or our native fellow-citizens and foreign as well on the western coast, are going to be so ignorant of their own interests as to be caught by that kind of statement.

I do not believe that our friends on the Pacific coast are disposed, when they think of it, to destroy their own prosperity, to break down their own commerce, to diminish their own wealth and their own development in running a race to see who will go the furthest in excluding for indefinite and unnecessary periods of time the immigration of the intelligent laborer, as he is called, of China. I do not think they are going to do it, and therefore I dismiss that part of it.

I shall vote against this bill as it now stands because I believe it to be an infraction of the good faith of the United States as pledged by this last treaty, because I believe it to be injurious to the welfare of the people of the United States, and particularly of our fellow-citizens on that coast, in promoting and developing by a friendly intercourse with the empire of China the great trade for which we must contend with all our power, if we are to get it at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll will be called on the passage of the bill.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMDEN, (when his name was called.) I repeat that I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY.]

Mr. FRYE, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. HILL,] but I have voted on all the amendments touching this bill and shall vote on the bill—first, because it is not a political question and I am only paired on political questions; second, because when the Senator from Georgia was here a day or two since he expressly allowed me and even desired me to record my vote on this bill. I vote "nay."

Mr. FARLEY, (when Mr. HAMPTON's name was called.) The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] is paired on this question with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MITCHELL.] The Senator from South Carolina would vote "yea" if he were here.

Mr. HAWLEY, (when his name was called.) I desire again to record my pair with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER.] I should vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. MCPHERSON, (when his name was called.) I am paired on this question with my colleague, [Mr. SEWELL.] I favor the bill and he opposes it.

Mr. MAXEY, (when his name was called.) I was paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] on the ten-years amendment. In the note which he wrote me he said if that amendment should be voted down he would vote against the bill. I am inclined to think that under that statement he would regard it as a pair upon the bill, because the amendment was voted down, and therefore I shall decline to vote. I should vote for the bill and he, from the statement made to me, would vote against it.

Mr. MITCHELL, (when his name was called.) As the announcement has already been made that I am paired upon this bill, I desire to state, in order that there may be a more permanent and express record in regard to the matter, that I should vote against the passage of the bill for reasons which I regard as very important, affecting not only the welfare of this country in our own time, but affecting it throughout the long future—affecting it in my judgment in results and to an extent which no Senator here to-day is able to conceive.

I speak from my heart as an American when I say that I regard this bill, as it now stands, as inconsistent with the principles which have hitherto obtained in the traditions and practice of this Government. We meet the existing law here to-day permitting all Chinese to come to this country with a proposition in this bill which allows no Chinese laboring-man to come to this country, and we provide that if he come he shall be subject to prosecution and punishment as for a crime. It goes, in my judgment, to the very root and spirit of our institutions by which our country is to be perpetuated, if it is to have perpetuity, as all Americans hope and trust it may. It goes, in my judgment, not in conflict with the idea represented by that great people abroad, and not recognizing the difference between their civilization and ours, but as an example of the possible danger of treading upon the traditions and practice of our own people, and inaugurating here the spirit of that government whose people it is said are unfit to come among us.

In my judgment, the principle which the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] so ably stated here to-day, that of homogeneity of race, which leads him to advocate the passage of this bill, to my mind leads to an entirely contrary conclusion. It is the homogeneity of five thousand years resulting according to the argument in the stagnation of to-day, and in the sinking of a cesspool in the midst of humanity from which nothing good can come, that is presented here for our consideration and adoption as the living principle of our institutions. Sir, the American citizen to-day is a conglomeration of all the branches of the Caucasian race upon the face of the earth who hold intact the civilization of Europe, and that is not the example of homogeneity, although it does not present a different caste and character of races possibly as the Chinese and the American or Anglo-Saxon races would in this country. Homogeneity enforced against natural right and the march of empire may lead to stagnation and decay.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, would it be in order to reply to the speech of the Senator from Pennsylvania now, during the roll-call?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not in order.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have been led perhaps by my feelings to say more than I intended to say when I rose.

Mr. BECK. Would it be in order to ask the Senator to suspend the rest of his speech until to-morrow morning, so that I may move to adjourn? I never heard a speech made during a roll-call before.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania was out of order in making the speech after the roll-call had commenced.

Mr. MITCHELL. I did not suppose I was out of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair presumed the Senator was not aware of the rule in that regard.

Mr. MITCHELL. I only desire to say—and I presume my friend from Kentucky will not object to that—that the action in the Senate upon this bill in refusing to consider and adopt amendments which I regard as reasonable will not permit me to vote for it. I would be willing to agree to what I would regard as a reasonable regulation of Chinese immigration, but I am not willing to agree to this bill. Therefore, if I were permitted under the rules of the Senate, I should vote against it. I wish also to state that my judgment upon the question is founded upon opinions differing from those entertained by gentlemen who favor the passage of the bill.

Mr. FARLEY, (when Mr. PENDLETON's name was called.) I have a note from the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] saying that he is paired with his colleague, [Mr. SHERMAN.] If the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] were here, he would vote for the bill.

Mr. PLATT, (when his name was called.) I desire once more to announce my pair with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.] I regret very much that I am not permitted by reason of the pair to vote against the bill.

Mr. ROLLINS, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES.]

Mr. BECK, (when the name of Mr. WILLIAMS was called.) My colleague, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] as I announced before, is absent because of sickness in his family. If he were present, he would vote for the bill.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. SLATER. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. GROVER] is paired with the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. VAN WYCK.] My colleague would vote "yea," if he were here.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM.] I do not know how he would vote on this question, but I think it best to refrain from voting myself.

Mr. ALDRICH. My colleague [Mr. ANTHONY] is absent and is paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. CAMDEN.] If here, my colleague would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—29.

Bayard,	Garland,	Jones of Nevada,	Teller,
Beck,	George,	Miller of Cal.,	Vance,
Call,	Gorman,	Miller of N. Y.,	Vest,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hale,	Morgan,	Voorhees,

Farley,	Jonas,	Slater,

NAYS—15.

Aldrich,	Conger,	Frye,	McDill,
Allison,	Davis of Illinois,	Hoar,	McMillan,
Blair,	Dawes,	Ingalls,	Morrill.
Brown,	Edmunds,	Lapham,

ABSENT—32.

Anthony,	Hampton,	Logan,	Rollins,
Butler,	Harrison,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,
Camden,	Hawley,	Mahone,	Saunders,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hill of Georgia,	Maxey,	Sewell,
Davis of W. Va.,	Johnston,	Mitchell,	Sherman,
Ferry,	Jones of Florida,	Pendleton,	Van Wyck,
Groome,	Kellogg,	Platt,	Williams,
Grover,	Lamar,	Plumb,	Windom.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. HAWLEY. In justice to three absent Senators I desire to ask unanimous consent——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is not disposed of.

Mr. HAWLEY. Very well; I will wait.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the preamble.

The preamble was agreed to, as follows:

Whereas in the opinion of the Government of the United States the coming of Chinese laborers to this country endangers the good order of certain localities within the territory thereof: Therefore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on amending the title so as to make it read: "A bill to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese." The Chair hears no objection to this amendment to the title.

Mr. HOAR. Would it be in order to move to strike out the word "execute" and insert the word "violate?"

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, sir, that is not in order.

Mr. HOAR. I move to strike out the word "execute" and insert the word "violate."

Mr. TELLER and others. Too late.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is too late.

Mr. HOAR. How can it be too late?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title has been amended as reported.

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to make a statement in justice to three absent Senators; I did not get here in time or I should have done it in the morning hour. Messrs. SEWELL, HARRISON, and HAMPTON are necessarily absent in an investigation at the Soldiers' Home, and left a note at my desk which I did not get in season, asking permission of the Senate to be so absent.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 130) for the relief of Paulina Jones, widow of Alexander Jones, deceased, late of Company E, Second North Carolina Infantry;

A bill (S. No. 143) for the relief of Charles Collins;

A bill (S. No. 242) for the relief of S. Rosenfeld & Co.;

A bill (S. No. 266) for the relief of George W. Wicks & Co., of Louisville, Kentucky;

A bill (S. No. 271) for the relief of Frank D. Yates and others;

A bill (S. No. 387) directing the Secretary of War to pay over to the Society of the Army of the Cumberland $7,500 to aid in the erection of a statue or monument to James Abram Garfield;

A bill (S. No. 491) for the relief of Henry P. Rolfe;

A bill (S. No. 494) directing the issue of a duplicate check to William J. Anthony, a pensioner of the United States;

A bill (S. No. 788) granting a pension to Olive Stephenson; and

A bill (S. No. 1092) authorizing and directing the purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the public use, of the property known as the Freedman's Bank and the real estate and parcels of ground adjacent thereto, belonging to the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and located on Pennsylvania avenue, between Fifteenth and Fifteenth-and-a-half streets, Washington, District of Columbia.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 85) in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore put the question, and declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

Several Senators called for a division.

Mr. HOAR. What is the motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To proceed to the consideration of the Japanese indemnity bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the indulgence of the Senate one moment.

Mr. MORRILL. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. HOAR. I gave notice several days ago that at the close of the bill just disposed of I should move to take up the bill in regard to the Presidential count. That bill, so far as I know, is unanimously approved by the committee to whom it was referred. It has once passed the Senate by a very decided majority, which majority was composed of gentlemen of both parties. I do not believe that it will take a very long time for discussion, but for obvious reasons it ought to reach the other House pretty soon; and there is not now, that I can see, any possible political consideration that can affect it. I appeal to the Senate, therefore, to allow me to move to make that bill the pending business.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I understand and appreciate fully the importance of the bill to which the Senator from Massachusetts refers, and I am disposed to believe that I shall favor the passage of that bill; but after all there must be some respect to priority of measures which are brought before the body—I mean priority in the simple question of time. The bill to create a tariff commission has been before the Senate; it has been discussed from time to time, and has given way to other measures. On the vote of the Senate, the very measure which has just passed took the precedence of the tariff-commission bill. I do not know that there are any speeches to be made upon it.

Mr. HOAR. It is my belief that that bill will take a month.

Mr. BAYARD. That is an assertion which we must try before we can admit.

Mr. MORRILL. It will not take two days.

Mr. BAYARD. I trust the Senate, considering the order of business and the fact of the importance of the tariff-commission bill, will not now suffer it to be dislodged from the position it is entitled to before the Senate. It was understood I say that when the Chinese bill had been considered the next business in order would be the tariff-commission bill, and I move that it be made the order and taken up now.

Mr. MORGAN. I had the floor and had submitted my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. My motion was that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Japanese indemnity bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Pending that I wish to move an adjournment, and we can dispose to-morrow of the order of business.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator yield for a moment? I think I can persuade the Senate that we can dispose of the Japanese indemnity bill in a few hours.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator can do that much better to-morrow morning. It seems to me it is impossible for us now to decide what shall be the order of business to-morrow.

Mr. MORGAN. With the understanding that I have the floor on that motion to-morrow I yield for that purpose.

Mr. TELLER. I move an adjournment.

Mr. BAYARD. I give notice that I shall antagonize the motion to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Alabama to-morrow to make his motion and the Senator from Delaware to antagonize it.

Mr. CALL. I wish to give notice that to-morrow morning I shall call up after the morning business the resolution submitted by me relative to Chili and Peru.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 9, 1882.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to take from the Calendar the bill (H. R. No. 1992) for the relief of the savings bank of Santa Rosa, California. This is a bill the sole object of which is to make the law applicable to a check for $1,052 the same as if the amount were only $1,000. Under the general law a lost check for $1,000 may be reissued, but where the amount exceeds $1,000 special legislation has to be obtained.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the title of the bill to be read, after which objections will be asked for.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. MCCOID. I object.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to submit the following report from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object.

Mr. BERRY. I shall be compelled to object to all requests for unanimous consent unless objection is withdrawn to the request which I have made.

Mr. CALKINS. Then I demand the regular order.

Mr. ANDERSON. I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The demand for the regular order cuts off all applications for unanimous consent. The regular order is the morning hour for the call of committees.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman withdraws his demand for the regular order so far as this request is concerned.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for on all sides.

SECTIONS 3244 AND 3689 REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. DUNNELL, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5008) to amend sections 3244 and 3689 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES FROM STATE COURTS.

Mr. CULBERSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 3123) to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

TRANSMISSION OF MERIDIAN TIME.

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Commerce, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 594, a bill (H. R. No. 5009) to provide for transmitting the meridian time of the Naval Observatory at Washington to ports of entry and other cities, and for placing time-balls on custom-houses for the protection of commerce, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARINE HOSPITAL AT CINCINNATI.

Mr. McLANE, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 4683) to provide for the establishment of a marine hospital at Cincinnati, Ohio; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MARINE SIGNALS.

Mr. GUENTHER, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with a favorable recommendation the joint resolution (H. R. No. 138) to create an international commission upon marine signals; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. GUENTHER also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 707) to amend section 4233 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to danger signals; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RAILWAY BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. WASHBURN, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 4440) to establish a railway bridge across the Mississippi River, extending from a point between Wabasha and Read's Landing, in Minnesota, to a point below the mouth of the Chippewa River; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the amendments and report ordered to be printed.

ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 2751) relating to officers of the Army; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the amendments and report ordered to be printed.

USE OF TENTS, ETC., AT SOLDIERS' REUNIONS.

Mr. HENDERSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the joint resolution (H. R. No. 132) granting the use of articles, tents, &c., at the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic of the Department of Pennsylvania on the battle-field of Gettysburgh, in July, 1882; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. HENDERSON also, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the joint resolution (H. R. No. 130) granting the use of articles, tents, &c., at the soldiers' reunion to be held at Grand Island, Nebraska, in the month of August, 1882.

Mr. VALENTINE. That joint resolution passed the House long ago.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then I move it be laid on the table without prejudice.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON also, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 3278) to authorize the Secretary of War to loan tents to the Northwestern Missouri and Southwestern Iowa Veteran Soldiers' Association; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. BUCK, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5010) to increase the salary of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GEORGE STORRS.

Mr. BLANCHARD, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 3137) for the relief of George Storrs; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

STATE OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on the Territories, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 1925) to provide for the formation and admission into the Union of the State of Washington; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the amendments and report ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SYRACUSE.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report a substitute for a bill now on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the bill (H. R. No. 4172) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Syracuse, New York, and to ask that the substitute take the place of the bill on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks that the bill reported as a substitute for the bill now on the Calendar heretofore reported shall take its place. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the substitute, a bill having the same number and title, to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Syracuse, New York, was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, to take the place of House bill No. 4172, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MATERIALS FOR PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. COOK, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 4607) directing that all public buildings shall be constructed of materials found in the State where the buildings are to be erected; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the amendments and report ordered to be printed.

ADDISON M. SAWYER.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Patents, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5011) for the relief of Addison M. Sawyer; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CLARK MILLS.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on Patents, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 4270) for the relief of Clark Mills; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

L. MADISON DAY.

Mr. MASON, from the Committee on Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5012) for the relief of L. Madison Day; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THOMAS A. M'LAUGHLIN.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 1385) for the relief of Thomas A. McLaughlin; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

J. E. LABATT.

Mr. MILLS, from the Committee on Claims, reported adversely the bill (H. R. No. 1710) for the relief of J. E. Labatt; which was laid upon the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

A. J. GUTHRIE.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 2371) for the benefit of A. J. Guthrie; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH F. WILSON.

Mr. FORD, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 2215, a bill (H. R. No. 5013) for the relief of Joseph F. Wilson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GROUNDS SOUTH OF THE CAPITOL.

Mr. URNER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 159) making an appropriation for filling up, draining, and placing in good sanitary condition the grounds south of the Capitol along the line of the old canal, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

TRUE PUTNEY.

Mr. NEAL, from the same committee, reported adversely the petition of True Putney, asking relief from payment of certain taxes on lots in Washington, District of Columbia; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

THOMAS G. CORBIN.

Mr. MORSE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 917) for the relief of Thomas G. Corbin; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MAJOR LUCIEN L. DAWSON.

Mr. MORSE, from the same committee, also reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 2585) for the relief of Major Lucien L. Dawson; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The call of committees for reports has been concluded.

Mr. VALENTINE. I desire to move to go into Committee of the Whole.

SMOKING IN THE HALL.

The SPEAKER. The attention of the Chair has been frequently called to a violation of the rules, especially the one in regard to smoking within the Hall; sometimes in the galleries and at other times on the floor of the House. The Chair at this time simply desires to call the attention of members to the rule relating to this matter, which the Clerk will read, and members will notice that by the terms of the rule it is made the duty of the Doorkeeper and of the Sergeant-at-Arms to enforce that portion of it in relation to smoking.

The Clerk read the rule, as follows:

While the Speaker is putting a question or addressing the House no member shall walk out of or across the Hall, nor, when a member is speaking, pass between him and the Chair; and during the session of the House no member shall wear his hat, or remain by the Clerk's desk during the call of the roll or the counting of ballots, or smoke upon the floor of the House; and the Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper are charged with the strict enforcement of this clause.

EXPORTATION OF TOBACCO, CIGARS, AND SNUFF.

Mr. KELLEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to report for consideration at this time a bill relating to the exportation of tobacco, snuff, and cigars. The bill proposes simply to insert the word "otherwise" in the act in relation to the exportation of tobacco, snuff, and cigars. The Treasury Department has held that under that act in its present form tobacco, snuff, and cigars can be exported free of tax in ships, but not by rail.

The bill (H. R. No. 5014) relating to exportation of tobacco, snuff, and cigars, in bond, free of tax, to adjacent foreign territory was received, and read a first and second time:

The bill was as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 3385 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the act of June 9, 1880, be further amended by adding after the words "shall be canceled," where they first occur therein, the following words:

"But when the goods are exported to the adjacent foreign territory by vessel or otherwise said bonds shall be canceled upon such proofs of exportation as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill at this time?

Mr. HATCH. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] allow me to offer an amendment?

Mr. KELLEY. I am not at liberty to yield for an amendment. This is a bill prepared at the Treasury Department.

Mr. HATCH. Then I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman is too late.

Mr. HATCH. I was on my feet.

The SPEAKER. But when the gentleman rose he did not object.

Mr. HATCH. I asked the gentleman to allow me to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asked leave to offer an amendment; but did not object.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman rose for the purpose of objecting.

The SPEAKER. But he did not state his object when he rose.

Mr. HATCH. My object was to object to the present consideration of the bill unless the gentleman from Pennsylvania would yield to me for an amendment.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman did not state that until now.

Mr. HATCH. I stated it as soon as I could get an opportunity to do so.

The SPEAKER. After the bill was before the House the gentleman suggested an amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Well, Mr. Speaker, I submit that according to the practice which has been followed in this House time and time again, members have had the privilege of asking the chairman of a committee or a member presenting a bill for consent to offer an amendment——

The SPEAKER. Reserving their right to object.

Mr. HATCH. Reserving their right to object; and that is what I proposed to do when I took the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman so to state.

Mr. KELLEY. It was not so announced.

The SPEAKER. Doubtless the gentleman intended to do so, but he did not reserve the right to object.

Mr. HATCH. I did not propose to object until I had notified the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I desired to offer an amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. This is a bill for the relief of the gentleman's constituents.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Missouri insists that he rose for the purpose of objecting, the Chair does not think it right to enforce a very strict ruling in reference to this matter.

Mr. KELLEY. If the gentleman will hear me, I wish to say that this is a bill to allow the export of tobacco by rail as it now goes by ship. That is the whole of it. It comes from the Treasury Department with an official letter stating that the tobacco trade is greatly embarrassed because of the legal difficulty at present existing in the way of exportation by rail.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to say to the gentleman very frankly that until the wishes of this House as expressed by their vote recently upon the bill in reference to free leaf tobacco are heeded by the Committee on Ways and Means, we do not propose that any bill relating to the subject of tobacco shall be considered by unanimous consent.

Mr. KELLEY. Let the tobacco growers and manufacturers of the country know that it is the gentleman who inflicts this injury upon them.

Mr. HATCH. Yes, sir; and I am glad to have the people of the country know the position which I take on this question.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask that the bill go to the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Unless there be objection, the bill reported by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

There was no objection.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE M. P. O'CONNOR.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to submit a privileged report. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 140) to print certain eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Michael P. O'Connor, have directed me to report it back with a recommendation that it pass.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that this is not a privileged report for consideration.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have always understood that reports for the printing of eulogies upon deceased members were privileged. Certainly there has never been objection to the consideration of such reports.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of this resolution, after which the Chair will ask whether there is objection.

The title of the joint resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. McCOID. I object.

Mr. WILSON. I understand it has been settled by the practice of this House time and again that the printing of eulogies on deceased members of Congress is a privileged question.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call the attention of the Chair to Rule XI, clause 47:

The following-named committees shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated, namely: The Committee on Elections, on the right of a member to his seat; the Committee on Ways and Means, on bills raising revenue; the Committee on Appropriations, the general appropriation bills; the Committee on Enrolled Bills, enrolled bills; the Committee on Printing, on all matters referred to them of printing for the use of the House or two Houses; and the Committee on Accounts, on all matters of expenditure of the contingent fund of the House.

Now I submit that this resolution proposes printing for the use of the House or the two Houses. It is a resolution which was referred to the committee in the regular order of business.

Mr. WILSON. These eulogies are to be printed for the use of members of the two Houses, and the report as I understand is clearly within the rule.

Mr. VALENTINE. The committee no doubt has the right to report, but there is no right to have the resolution considered if objection be made.

The SPEAKER. There is no doubt that under the construction of the rule read by the gentleman from Illinois all resolutions directing printing to be done for either or both Houses of Congress are privileged, but that refers to printing essential for the conduct of the business of either or both Houses. A further objection to regarding this report as privileged is that it requires an appropriation to carry it out.

Mr. SPRINGER. Well, there is no doubt, I presume, that I have the right to report the resolution at any time.

The SPEAKER. Unquestionably.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then if any member objects to the present consideration of the resolution it must go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. McCOID] objecting, the joint resolution will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is the first time that a proposition of this kind has been objected to within my knowledge. I presume the objection grows out of the fact that I felt it my duty to object yesterday to a report made by the gentleman from Iowa on a public matter.

STATISTICS OF POPULATION.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I hope by unanimous consent I may be permitted to introduce a resolution for reference.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be printed 50,000 copies of the volume lately issued by the Census Office, characterized Statistics of the Population of the United States by States, counties, and minor civil divisions, compiled from the returns of the tenth census; 15,000 copies to be for the use of the Senate and 35,000 copies to be for the use of the House.

There was no objection, and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 160) was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. VALENTINE. I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill; and pending that motion I move that all general debate on said bill be limited to one hour after its consideration shall be resumed.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The motion to go into committee was then agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Iowa, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4466) making appropriations for the Agricultural Department of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes. By order of the House all general debate on the pending bill is limited to one hour.

Mr. VALENTINE. I yield for twenty minutes to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. HORR.]

Mr. HORR. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to take the time of this House for the purpose of talking on the agricultural bill, now up for consideration; nor should I do so now had not some of our friends on the other side of the House made this bill a pretext for bringing into this House a lengthy discussion on the question of the tariff; had they not made an attempt to prove to this House that the tariff of this country weighs heavily upon the farmers of the land and protects only the manufacturing interests. I propose to call the attention of this committee for a few moments to this subject. I do this from the fact that I do not believe the positions taken by gentlemen on the other side of the House are tenable.

I assert, Mr. Chairman, in the outset, that it is not true that the farmers of the United States are not benefited by our present revenue laws, and I think I shall be able to show before I get through that no set of men are more really interested in keeping up a proper protective system in this country than the men who cultivate the soil.

In debating this bill day before yesterday our friends, and free-traders before them have all done the same thing, assumed two positions: first, that the moment a duty is levied on anything by way of a tariff, that moment all the goods consumed in the country at that time will have added to their cost to the consumer a sum equal to the amount of the tax so levied on such goods; and secondly, that the entire amount of duty thus imposed goes directly into the pockets of the manufacturers. You all claimed that; did you not? But neither of those propositions is true, or anywhere near true.

In the first place, the excess, if any, goes into the pockets, first, of the men who do the work, the men whom the manufacturers pay as laborers; because we pay, as a rule, in this country more than is paid in the foreign countries for our help. From the pockets of those laborers it goes directly into the pockets of the farmers who furnish the supplies to feed those laborers. This gives the farmer a larger price for all his products than he would otherwise receive, and is in that way beneficial to all the tillers of the soil.

Now, I make another proposition, and I would like to have gentlemen study this question from a stand-point of facts. I lay down this proposition, and I challenge examination of it, that there never yet was levied in this country a duty on any single article produced in this country which tax resulted in enabling our people to commence and continue in the manufacture of it but that by the natural laws of competition the article soon commenced to grow cheaper from the time our works got into successful operation. I say there is not an instance in the whole history of this country that does not bear me out in this assertion.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman means duty, and not tax.

Mr. HORR. Yes, duty.

Mr. KELLEY. You speak of tax as though it were an internal tax.

Mr. HATCH. Truth will out. [Laughter.]

Mr. HORR. I am talking only of a tax on foreign imports, the duties levied by our tariff laws. Let us take salt as an illustration, because salt is attacked more in this House than any other article produced in our broad land. I talk about it on that account, and because I know more about it than I do about almost any other article; and I have found out in the past that it is much easier for me to speak on a question that I understand than upon one that I know nothing about. [Laughter.] How is it with salt? In 1807 salt was put on the free-list in this country. Our works soon went out of commission all over the land. In 1808 the manufacture of salt in this country well nigh ceased. Salt commenced advancing steadily so soon as the foreign manufacturers got command of our markets up to 1813, when it reached the enormous sum of $20 per barrel. Of course that price was the result of the war.

That illustrates another reason why we should always keep the manufacturing of all the necessities of life within our own borders, because when war comes, if we do not ourselves make the things we need, trouble comes also. Do not my friends on the other side of the House remember how it was during our little "unpleasantness" down South? Do they not know something about the price of salt during that war? I know Brother GIBSON, of Louisiana, once told me that what the South lacked in that contest was saltpeter more than salt. [Laughter.] Perhaps it was, but you will all agree that salt during that time became scarce in the South beyond all calculation. It is stated that your people even went so far as to dig up the dirt under their smoke-houses and leach it for the salt it contained. Why, sir, it is reported that at one time salt reached the enormous price of $4 per pound. That is $1,120 per barrel in confederate money, a price one would think that would satisfy the liveliest imagination of the wildest inflationist in the land.

Thus it is, Mr. Chairman, that no nation can afford to allow any commodity which it needs for its own consumption, and which it can produce itself, to be manufactured entirely by foreign nations.

The true policy is to build up every business which naturally belongs to our own country, and then when war comes we can live and prosper without any aid from the rest of the world. But I was attempting to show that when duties are removed, articles do not grow cheaper on that account.

I will print a table in this connection, showing the varying prices of English dairy salt from the year 1845 down to, and including the year 1853–'54:

Average price per bushel in the year—
1845–'46	$1 35
1846–'47	1 40
1847–'48	1 48
1848–'49	1 32
1849–'50	1 35
1850–'51	1 50
1851–'52	1 25

This table shows that in 1845, before the duty was reduced on salt, it was worth $1.35 per bushel. In 1846 the duty was reduced from eight cents per bushel to about two and one-half cents per bushel; and yet during that year, under the decreased tariff, it went to $1.40 per bushel. It went down in 1849 to $1.32; went up again in 1850; down in 1851, and up in 1853; and in 1854 it got up to $1.60 per bushel. This table will indicate the different prices.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what was the reason of this? Simply this: whenever you cripple our home works and compel them to decrease their production so that the foreign producer gets control of the market, he will always put the article up as high as he can possibly get it, and not set the home works in motion. During the period of low tariff on salt, enacted in 1846, the works of New York State decreased their production nearly one-half. But the tariff on salt enacted in 1860 set the salt-works of Ohio, Kentucky, New York, and Michigan in motion. What was the result? Just what always happens when you build up home industries and thereby start competition. I have here a table which shows precisely how it worked in Michigan:

PRODUCTION DURING THE HISTORY OF SALT MANUFACTURE IN THE STATE.

The salt manufacture in this State commenced in 1860. The following shows the amount produced yearly since that time:

	Barrels.		Barrels.
1860	4,000	1871	728,175
1861	125,000	1872	724,481
1862	243,000	1873	823,346
1863	466,356	1874	1,028,979
1864	529,073	1875	1,081,865
1865	477,200	1876	1,462,729
1866	407,077	1877	1,960,997
1867	474,721	1878	1,855,884
1868	555,690	1879	2,058,040
1869	560,818	1880	2,676,588
1870	621,350	1881	2,750,299

AVERAGE PRICES.

The average net price to manufacturers for the salt product during a series of years is shown as follows:

Average price per barrel in the year—
1866	$1 80	1875	$1 10
1867	1 77	1876	1 05
1868	1 85	1877	85
1869	1 58	1878	86
1870	1 32	1879	1 02
1871	1 46	1880	75
1872	1 46	1881	83½
1873	1 37	Price now	75
1874	1 19

From this table you will see we made in 1860 about 4,000 barrels of salt. At that time salt was $2.57 a barrel. I change from bushels to barrels because we measure by barrels instead of bushels in my State. I was saying that in 1860 Michigan furnished only about 4,000 barrels. In 1861 this was increased to 121,000 barrels; in 1864 we reached over 500,000 barrels; in 1874 over 1,000,000 barrels, and thus we kept on increasing the amount until last year the district which I have the honor to represent and a few small towns outside of that district manufactured 2,750,000 barrels, being about one-third of all the salt consumed in the entire United States. Now, how about the price? Did the farmers lose by the duty that built up these enormous works? I have stated that when the duty on salt was raised in 1860 salt was $2.57 a barrel. From that time to this there has been a constant but gradual decline. I have inserted a table showing the prices from year to year. During the war and down to 1866 the price was reduced from $2.57 to $1.80 per barrel. The next year it went down to $1.77 and kept depreciating until in 1877 it was 75 cents; in 1878, 85 cents; in 1879, $1.02; in 1880, 75 cents; in 1881, 83 cents, and to-day it is only 75 cents a barrel, and that, mind you, includes the barrel and all, the barrel itself costing from 25 to 28 cents.

Mr. TILLMAN. How much is there in a barrel?

Mr. HORR. Two hundred and eighty pounds, or five bushels, and all that amount for 80 cents, including the package, which makes the 280 pounds of salt cost the enormous sum of 55 cents—that is five pounds of salt for less than one cent. And this result has been reached by what these gentlemen call grasping monopolies. Now, when is a thing cheap? That is a question political economists have often asked us. In answer, I say an article is cheap whenever it costs the least amount of money for the amount of labor or power expended in its production. I do not know that I make myself clear. I may not be an expert in these philosophical expressions; but what I mean is this, that salt to-day is the cheapest article in the markets of this country, when you take into account the amount of actual labor, the expenditure of power necessary to produce it as compared with the labor and power expended in producing other articles and the prices of the same.

I mean, Mr. Chairman, that salt pays less for the actual amount of work required to produce it than any other article produced within the boundaries of our entire country. Then why this constant ranting about the duty on salt? But what is the fact about the manufacture of salt? We happen in Michigan, as my friends here from Ohio, Kentucky, and New York very well know, as does also the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA]—I say we happen to be able to manufacture salt very cheaply, as the figures I have quoted will demonstrate. We are able to manufacture it at this low price simply because we are able to use the sawdust and refuse slabs obtained from the mills which are run in connection with the salt blocks as fuel.

If we had not that advantage, we could not manufacture salt to-day at the present rates without great loss. I will make a statement in this connection which will show the force of what I am now endeavoring to point out. No less than thirty-five different works have heretofore been established in our valley, containing seventy-five salt blocks, representing an invested capital of $1,000,000, which were built for the manufacture of salt alone. That amount of money was invested in these works for the purpose of making salt alone, just as would have to be done in a place where they had the brine but had no mills running from which to get their fuel; that is, by buying fuel and paying for it. Almost every one of these enterprises failed, have gone into bankruptcy, and have ceased to manufacture a barrel of salt, every dollar of such capital having been sunk. I do not now remember over three or four of them that are in existence to-day.

And why is this, Mr. Chairman? Why, sir, simply because the price is so low that if we were not able to use this refuse fuel—if we had to buy wood and coal we could not manufacture a barrel without loss. I have already shown that we have reduced the price of this article from $2.57 a barrel to 75 cents, and will any one claim that this reduction has not benefited every farmer in the country? Yet some men would try to make it appear that the farmers have been injured by this reduction and are worrying over the salt question.

Gentlemen, permit me to say that such is not the case. The farmers of this country are not worrying in the least about this matter. On the contrary they are well satisfied with the present price of this commodity. It is the importers who are paid by British gold, who get up petitions on this question, and who are peddling their pamphlets and publishing their lies all over the country for their own gain. If I saw fit I could give the first letters of the names of some of these gentlemen, for some of them are well known.

Mr. DUNN. Let us have them.

Mr. HORR. This business, Mr. Chairman, of manufacturing salt has had its vicissitudes like all the other great interests of our country. Let me give some illustrations. In 1872 salt works were erected on the Ohio River which originally cost $109,000, and which, after being worked with all the economy possible, could not survive the low prices, and were subsequently sold for only $19,000. Another instance were works costing $75,000 which only brought $13,000. What was the matter? Simply this: they could not make salt for so little money. And yet they tell us that this duty on salt simply enriches the manufacturer and impoverishes the farmer.

Why, my friends, there is hardly a thing grown upon the farms of this country that is not protected to-day by this same tariff. For example: the men who make this salt could go over into Canada and buy their horses for much less than they have to pay you men in Kentucky for them, were it not for our revenue laws. I once paid $190 duty on nine head myself. Why does our law require this? Simply to protect the horse-breeders and the farmers of this country against the cheap labor and cheap lands of Canada. It is the same with oats. You can buy oats for fifteen cents less a bushel in Canada right across the bay from where these salt manufacturers live than you can on this side the water. But instead of that they go way out to Peoria, Illinois, and ship them to our valley by hundreds of thousands of bushels. What for? Because there is a duty on oats levied for the protection of our own farmers and for the protection of the farmers of the great West. Do these salt men complain of this? By no means. They believe it is right. Why, sir, there is hardly a single product of the farm that is not thus protected. Then why claim that duties are levied for the manufacturer alone?

But I must hurry on, my time being limited, and I have one or two things which I must say. [Laughter.] Why is it, some one may ask, that Canada can make salt cheaper than we can right across the bay? I will give you one reason why. We pay our laborers from a dollar and a half to two dollars and a half a day for every day's work they do in making salt. In Canada they pay their laborers only from eighty-five cents to a dollar and a half per day. This difference in wages alone is sufficient answer. Now, who are benefited by this duty on salt? Most surely these men who receive these better wages—the laboring men, not the manufacturer. Competition always brings manufacturing enterprises to a proper level as to prices. Thus it is that the laboring men of this country who do the work in our salt-blocks, in our shops and factories, and the farmers who need a home market for their products, are of all men interested in having a judicious protective tariff. And right here let me add, there was never a time in the history of this country when a farmer could take a load of grain, butter, eggs, cheese, the usual products of his farm, to market and exchange them for more of the goods he needs in his family than he can to-day. And, more than this, there is no country in the civilized world where a day laborer can take his day's wages and buy so many of the necessaries of life as he can here in the United States to-day. Is this the result of good or bad laws? Can that be said of a country eaten up by monopolies? That fact alone refutes all this twaddle about the laboring man and the farmer being oppressed.

And yet my friend from Kentucky [Mr. TURNER]—and I am sorry he is not in his seat—told us the day before yesterday that this Congress and this Ways and Means Committee were trampling upon the rights of the suffering millions because they would not report a bill cutting down duties and placing salt and such articles on the free list. He finally proposed, in a threatening way, to leave it to a Congress fresh from the people, meaning the next Congress, I suppose, which he seemed to think would be filled with men instructed in the gospel of free trade. He promised that if this Congress would not heed his warning, then he would have these matters straightened out in a succeeding one, elected when this subject should be discussed before the people. Why, sir, I had thought that this question was submitted to the people during the last election. I have a faint recollection that the Democracy of this country took a free-trade stand in that campaign. Let me inquire of you, gentlemen, was there not a resolution in your platform that you were in favor of a tariff for revenue only? I hardly believe there is a Democrat here who does not remember that plank at least in his platform. If the Democratic mind can comprehend those three words when taken together, in that event I say then this question was squarely before the people when this Congress was elected. I have sometimes thought that even that short statement was too complicated for the average Democrat to understand. Perhaps if they could have had the "tariff" on one plate and the "revenue" on another plate, and the "only" on still another, they might have understood it; but come to pile them all together on to one, no wonder that a party which usually takes its whisky straight should have become confused and should have ended in failure. [Laughter.]

Why, Mr. Chairman, no issue was ever more distinctly and squarely made before the American people than was this one in the last campaign. And I say to you, gentlemen, right here and now, if you propose to carry this issue into the next campaign, we want you to begin early. It suits us. It is a question that this side of the House is familiar with; and I suppose there are some Democrats, at all events those from Pennsylvania, who have heard it discussed heretofore in some of their towns, [laughter,] of course only as a mere local question, debated perhaps by their boards of education. What I claim is this, that the American people voted distinctly on this question in the election by which we hold our seats here to-day, and they decided plumply, unequivocally, in favor of a tariff for protection and against the doctrines of free trade. Then why all this whining about the tyranny of the Committee on Ways and Means? That committee have simply carried out the decision made at the ballot-box, after a full, fair, and free discussion of the whole question. Another complaint I have to make is, that the advocates of free trade give us no new thoughts on this question. They do not keep apace with the times. Theories are very good, but facts are a good deal better.

Mr. Chairman, I was astonished that even my friend from Kentucky, [Mr. TURNER]—I am sorry I do not see him in his seat—I say I was astonished to find that even he gave us no new theories, but simply a rehash of the arguments that have been worn threadbare in the past. I know the House will indulge me while I prove this.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TURNER] tells us of a poor farmer suffering under his tariff burdens. He says:

> Under the tariff, he rises in the morning—
> [Mr. TURNER entered the House, and took his seat.]

I am glad that I see the gentleman now in his place. This farmer, he says—> rises in the morning, puts on his common flannel shirt, taxed 95 per cent.; his coat, taxed 57 per cent.; shoes, taxed 35 per cent.; and hat, taxed 92 per cent.

Now, I find in turning to the record of a speech made by Mr. Marshall, of Illinois, upon this subject, he also had a farmer.

A MEMBER. In what year?

Mr. HORR. In 1870, just twelve years ago this month. This farmer started to his work the same as the other one. [Laughter.] Mr. Marshall said:

He rises in the morning, puts on his humble flannel shirt, taxed at 80 per cent.; his coat, taxed at 50 per cent.; shoes, taxed at 35 per cent., and hat, taxed at 70 per cent.

Now, if that shirt has been on that fellow these whole twelve years I think he would be a good representative of the unwashed Democracy. [Loud laughter.]

But again I find in the speech of the gentleman from Kentucky that this farmer—sits down to his humble meal.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

[Cries of "Go on!" "Go on!"]

sits down to his humble meal and eats from a plate taxed 50 per cent., with knife and fork taxed 35 per cent.; drinks his coffee with sugar taxed 68 per cent.; seasons his food with salt taxed 69 per cent.; pepper, taxed 61 per cent. He looks round on his wife and children all taxed in the same way; takes a chew of tobacco taxed 199 per cent., or lights a cigar taxed 118 per cent.

Now let us see what the farmer in 1870 did:

He sits down to his humble meal, eats from a plate taxed 40 per cent., with a knife and fork taxed 35 per cent., and drinks his cup of coffee taxed 47 per cent., or his cup of tea taxed 78 per cent., sweetened with sugar taxed 70 per cent., seasons his food with salt taxed 100 per cent., with pepper taxed 297 per cent., or with allspice taxed 379 per cent. He looks around upon his wife and children, all taxed in the same way, takes a chew of tobacco taxed 100 per cent., or lights a cigar taxed 120 per cent.

Thus you see they both looked around upon their wives and children, all taxed in the same way. [Laughter.] I do not know whether this tax on their families stimulated overproduction or not. [Laughter.] I have no way to tell, because Mr. Marshall does not give the size of his farmer's family in 1870; nor did the gentleman from Kentucky tell us how many children his farmer has now. [Laughter.]

starts to his work and puts on his horse a bridle taxed 35 per cent., and takes his horse that has been shod—the nails used in shoeing being taxed 59 per cent., and driven by a hammer taxed 20 per cent.—and hitches him to a plow taxed 45 per cent., with a chain taxed 58 per cent.

Mr. MILLER. Who says that?

Mr. HORR. The gentleman from Kentucky. Now, then, the Illinois fellow started—to his work with shoes on his horse fastened by nails taxed 67 per cent., driven by a hammer taxed 54 per cent.; hitched his horse to a plow taxed 50 per cent., with chains taxed 67 per cent.

But, again, this Kentucky farmer—after the day's labor is closed and his family is gathered around him, reads a chapter from his Bible.

Mr. MILLER. Not in Kentucky!

Mr. HORR. Yes. At least so my friend from Kentucky claimed.

He reads a chapter from his Bible taxed 25 per cent.—

And that in Kentucky—

and kneels to God on an humble carpet taxed 51 per cent., then he rests his weary limbs on a sheet taxed 45 per cent., and covers himself with a blanket that has paid 104 per cent.

Now you will find the Illinois man just as devout as the Kentucky chap. [Great laughter.]

He opens his family worship by a chapter from his Bible, taxed 25 per cent., he kneels to his God on an humble carpet, taxed 150 per cent.

Now, I submit to my friend from Kentucky that if that fellow has been kneeling ever since 1870, a motion would be in order to let him rise. [Great laughter.]

Now, gentlemen of the committee, I submit whether I am not right when I say that there are no new statements in their arguments. We simply get a rehash of the same old nonsense. Even after a lapse of twelve years the argument and illustrations are the same thing over and over again. These arguments have been refuted so many times in the past that it seems idle to spend more time upon them now.

I will detain the committee but little longer. I desire to state a few things which I believe to be for the best interests of this country. I believe it is for the interest of our entire country that we should build up in every part of this land every conceivable industry. A diversity of industries brings wealth, ennobles labor, gives employment to the millions, brings contentment and happiness. The world over that country is most prosperous which fosters and develops all its resources.

What you need in Texas on this salt business, my friends, is not to strike down that interest in the North, but to develop it within your own borders. You have spread out over that immense empire basins of salt where it can be gathered by merely scooping it up and shoveling it into wagons. Yet you pay freight on salt from my country clear down to yours. Why not open up your own salt works and save these railroad freights and make a business among yourselves that will give you cheap salt for your cattle and employ your idle workmen?

Now, again let me tell you what you need in Louisiana. Why, sir, there is to-day in Louisiana, in the Teche country, salt enough within three feet of the surface of the ground to supply the wants of the whole American republics for the next five hundred or a thousand years. It lies there now ready for the mining. Why do you not go to work like men and develop that, and thus save the cost of transporting the salt from where it is manufactured in the North? The cost of the salt where it is manufactured is not what ails you; it is transporting it a thousand or eighteen hundred miles to your families.

You have the salt there right under your noses. Go to work and develop it, and stop crying out against other places in the country where they are trying to develop their resources and improve their condition.

Mr ELLIS. I will inform the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] that those mines in Louisiana are now being steadily and profitably worked.

Mr. HORR. I am very glad to hear it. Louisiana, then, will vote with us hereafter on the salt question. [Laughter.]

Again, the gentleman from Kentucky talks about the farmers in his State being oppressed by the tariff. Sir, at the very time he made that speech I reckon he had in his pocket or in his desk a petition from the farmers of Kentucky asking him to see to it that the tariff on hemp was raised. Am I mistaken?

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. If the gentleman will allow me——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield?

Mr. HORR. Certainly.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I will state to the gentleman that when I commented on these tariff duties I used a figure that had been used before, but that I had carried it further and applied the present tariff duties, leaving out the articles that were on the free list, to show the burdens of the farmer under the tariff as it now exists, and the facts and figures I gave are correct and he cannot controvert them successfully. I obtained the tariff duties from the Bureau of Statistics, as I stated the other day, and they are correct. In regard to the arguments that have been used before, they apply with as much force now as they did then. The farmer is as much oppressed to-day as he was years ago by the tariff.

In regard to the hemp which the gentleman speaks of, I will say that the hemp growers in my State held a meeting and in that meeting generously stated that they were perfectly willing that the tariff on hemp should be abolished, provided it was taken from other articles; but as long as it was kept on other articles they asked that hemp should be protected.

But I will say to my friend further, so far as my position is concerned, that I represent a district which grows no hemp; and I would vote to abolish the duty on hemp and everything else, and bring the tariff down to a revenue standard strictly and make it a "revenue tariff only."

Mr. HORR. Yes, Mr. Chairman; and the day will come when in Kentucky that kind of doctrine will not go down with her intelligent people. I can recollect—and I am not an old man—when from that State there went all over the Union the voice of a man who has done as much honor to Kentucky as any man, I might almost say as all other men, that ever lived within her borders—Henry Clay [applause]—and he announced this doctrine of protection in such silvery tones that this whole nation listened and believed. I say, Mr. Chairman, that the doctrine expressed now by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TURNER] will yet die out in his own State. Facts are stubborn things. Theories come and go with the men who advocate them. The great laws of trade and commerce are unchangeable. As civilization advances and our country becomes developed even Kentucky will see and understand her true interests.

The proper doctrine is this: let us attend to the welfare of our own people and let England take care of herself. We have not only to supply labor for our own teeming millions, but one-half a million of immigrants are yearly landing on our shores, for whom we must prepare to furnish homes and food. Nothing will solve this problem but to build up and foster our own domestic industries. And in doing this I believe in no favoritism. I would carefully guard the interests of the farmer in his wool and his hemp, in his flax, in his horses, in his grain, in his sugar. These are all protected to-day. I would stand by the citizens of Maine and Massachusetts no more than those of Georgia and Kentucky. I would stand by the leather men both of Boston and of Chattanooga.

The iron of Pennsylvania should be protected no more and no less than that of Missouri, Tennessee, Alabama, or Michigan. I would stand by the woolen goods of New England; the lead, zinc, and iron of Missouri; the salt, iron, horses, and hemp of Kentucky; the salt of Ohio, New York, Texas, Louisiana. Wherever the people will combine and set their industries in motion they are entitled to protection. Any man who cannot grasp this question in its immense proportions, and deal with it in the light of existing facts instead of theories, will fall far short of the statesmanship that this country needs and that the times demand.

I had intended to say a few words in favor of the tariff commission which the gentleman from Kentucky so much condemns. I believe it may result in great good, and at some future time may take occasion to give my reasons for the faith within me. I thank the committee for their kind attention, though I have occupied time far beyond that allotted me.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. Before the gentleman closes, will he permit me to make one remark?

Mr. HORR. I have not the time, or I should be very glad to do so.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. As my friend from Michigan referred to Henry Clay just before he closed, I regret that I did not hear his whole speech. I simply wish to state that Mr. Clay advocated a protective tariff when the manufactures of this country were in their infancy; and even then he only advocated a tariff of 20 per cent.; and if he were alive to-day I believe he would oppose the present tariff, which is a system of legalized robbery. Are you willing now to take the Clay tariff and modify the Morrill tariff by bringing it down from an average of 43¼ per cent. to 20 per cent., which Mr. Clay advocated? The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] represents a salt monopoly, and that I suppose is why he is a protectionist.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. Would the people of Kentucky take the Henry Clay tariff of 20 per cent.?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. VALENTINE. I now yield to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. DIBBRELL.]

Mr. DIBBRELL. Mr. Chairman, in addressing the House upon the subject I have selected—the agricultural interests of the country—I am aware that it will be uninteresting to many members of the House; but it is a subject in which I feel a very great interest, in which my constituents as well as the whole country have a deep interest, and one that has in the past been greatly overlooked and neglected by the law-making power of the country. The agricultural department of the Government was established to promote and foster the agricultural interests of the country. To do this successfully it must be liberally sustained by the Government; liberal appropriations must be made, wise and able men must be selected in all its departments, and the results widely distributed to the farmers and laboring people of the agricultural regions. Agriculture is the safeguard upon which all other business relies; without it we would soon disappear, and against it all other business seems to combine. This is all wrong. Every other business and occupation should lend a helping hand to the agriculturists of the country, for they all derive their profits from the fruits of labor derived from the soil. And Congress should extend a liberal aid in all the different branches of the Department to collect valuable statistics, crop reports, animal products, weather indications, and everything valuable to the farmer, that he may the better realize the fruits of his labor and add the more to the wealth of our common country. By reference to the various appropriations made by Congress for the present fiscal year it will be seen that they amounted to $325,555,963.53. From this large sum it would seem reasonable that the Agricultural Department would share liberally; but that is not the case. For that Department there was appropriated only $355,500, all told.

For the next fiscal year the estimates for all Departments is $340,462,507.65, and for the Agricultural Department only $502,980, and the committee have reduced that to $396,880, as shown by the report of the honorable chairman and the bill. The small increase made over last year's appropriations is principally in the item for enlarging the Bureau of Statistics, so as to enable the Commissioner through his agents in each State of the Union to promptly gather all facts and data relating to the growing crops, their condition, the harvests, the weather, together with everything valuable to the agricultural interests in the country, and send it broadcast over the land, that farmers and producers may be the better prepared to share the profits of their labors by knowing the results of the crops, and be the better prepared to meet and cope with the bulls and bears who generally are thoroughly posted upon all such questions and seek to control the prices of the agricultural products of the country; and to gather this information and disseminate it promptly throughout the country it requires money, and I regret that the whole amount estimated by the commissioner, $100,000, for this purpose was not appropriated, believing as I do that it would have been judiciously expended and would have saved the farmers of the country millions of dollars, and would help to elevate this Department to where it properly belongs; in fact, I cheerfully voted for the bill now pending on the Calendar to make the Department of Agriculture a Cabinet Department, and think the bill should become a law, provided always that we can have good practical agriculturists at its head, men who know and feel the responsibility of the position to which they have been called, and who will faithfully discharge their duties in the interest of agriculture and not as a sinecure for political deadbeats.

Without intending to flatter the present Commissioner, or to speak disparagingly of any of his predecessors, I think in point of intellect and ability he would compare favorably with many of the present or past Cabinet officers of this country, and in knowledge of the interests of his Department with any of them. The small increase of expense by thus raising this Department would be abundantly returned in the benefits to be derived by the country. When we compare the vast amount of capital and labor invested in agriculture, the value of farm productions, the number of persons engaged in agricultural pursuits, the large sums realized by our Government from surplus agricultural products annually exported and sold abroad, the great reputation our country has made for the production of cereals and live-stock, that are being shipped abroad to feed the world, and then look at the small sum annually appropriated for this Department, it will be seen that Congress has acted very illiberally toward this branch of industry, the most important of all of our industries, and one touching directly more of our population than any other industry.

I have taken some pains to get some valuable statistics upon this subject. Although the census reports are not complete, yet many of the figures furnished from that department are interesting. In a letter from Hon. C. W. Seaton, superintendent of the census, he places the value of all the farms in the United States, as per reports, at $10,196,890,645; value of farm implements at $406,516,902; live-stock, $1,500,482,187; fertilizers purchased and used in 1879, $28,597,859; fences, cost of building and repairing in 1879, $77,765,723.

The above figures, he says, may yet be changed in the final make-up. But the above is enough to show the importance of Congress caring well for this branch of industry, that never seeks to have legislation done for them through the influence of rings, lobbies, or the use of money, but have in the past acted as the hewers of wood and drawers of water for the rest of mankind, supporting every other branch of industry and profession; paying enormous taxes upon everything they may have to buy either for the support of their families, cultivating their farms, or for the ordinary luxuries of life, the profits of which generally go to those who are basking in ease and comfort and know nothing of the hardships incident to an agriculturist's life. In addition to the foregoing information received from the Census Bureau, I addressed a note of inquiry to Hon. J. R. Dodge, chief statistician of the Agricultural Department, asking for statistical information. His reply was so full of valuable information, for which I am greatly obliged, that I will publish it in full, as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C., February 9, 1882.

SIR: In accordance with your request I send you a statement of farm values for 1880, as follows:

Articles.	Cereals.	Value.
	Bushels.	Bushels.
Indian corn	1,717,434,543	$679,714,499
Wheat	498,549,868	474,201,850
Rye	24,540,829	18,564,560
Oats	417,885,380	150,243,565
Barley	45,165,346	30,090,742
Buckwheat	14,617,535	8,682,488
Total	2,718,193,501	1,361,497,704

In addition to cereals the following crops were estimated to produce:

Potatoes	$81,062,214
Tobacco	36,414,615
Hay	371,811,084
Cotton	280,266,242
Total	769,554,155

These crops make a grand aggregate of $1,131,051,859. There are others not annually estimated and very difficult to present, either in quantity or value, such as pasturage, orchard and small fruits, and market gardening, all of which are of great importance, and the first is scarcely exceeded in value by any of the above crops, unless corn shall be excepted, being the basis of meat and milk production and the domestic wool supply.

Including sugar, rice, sorgbum, hemp, flax, and a multitude of minor crops, it is probable that the total value of all the annual farm productions of the United States would not fall much short of $3,500,000,000.

The value of the farm animals is a capitalized reproduction of the grass, hay, and grain consumed by them in their growth. The estimated value of farm animals of the country in 1880 was as follows:

Horses	$667,954,325
Mules	120,096,164
Milch cows	296,277,060
Oxen and other cattle	362,861,509
Sheep	104,070,759
Swine	170,535,435
Total	1,721,795,252

The value of farms in the United States in 1870 was returned in the census at $9,262,803,861. The census of 1880 has not yet completed the estimate of farm values, but it is certain that the figures will be very largely increased.

The principal part of the agricultural production of any country must be consumed within its borders. Very few countries are able, after feeding its own people, to send any considerable surplus to supply the wants of other countries. This country is one of the favored few, and stands first among them all in this respect. The following table presents the domestic exports of the last ten years, and shows the extraordinary proportion of agricultural products included in the exhibit:

Year.	Total exports.	Products of agriculture.	Percentage of agricultural products.
1872	$476,421,478	$368,796,625	77.41
1873	575,227,017	446,900,004	77.69
1874	633,339,368	501,371,501	79.16
1875	559,237,638	430,306,570	76.95
1876	594,917,715	456,113,515	76.67
1877	632,980,854	459,734,148	72.63
1878	695,749,930	536,192,873	77.07
1879	699,538,742	546,476,703	78.12
1880	823,946,353	683,010,976	82.90
1881	883,925,947	729,650,016	82.55

Nearly $100 per annum surplus for every farmer and farm laborer in the United States.

Yours, respectfully,

J. R. DODGE, Statistician.

Hon. G. G. DIBRELL, House of Representatives.

Being an average of 78½ per cent. of all our exports. From the foregoing reports some estimate may be had of the vast agricultural interests of this country. Take the value of farms, farm implements, stock, and farm products, amounting in all to about fifteen thousand millions of dollars in this country, and then look at the amount appropriated to foster and care for this interest, $396,880, and it will be seen that we are practicing economy with a vengeance, especially when this appropriation is compared with those for all other Departments of the Government, and when as shown by Mr. Dodge that nearly $100 per head of the product of the farmers and laborers in the country is exported abroad to enrich our country by bringing back the money from the countries we are supplying with food for their countrymen, the exports of agricultural products for 1881 alone amounting to the enormous sum of $729,650,016, the largest in any one year in the history of the country. Now, what reason can be assigned against the enlargement and increasing the usefulness of this Department, one in which every American citizen should feel proud and should be willing to aid and protect? Think of these vast sums annually brought into our country in money or valuables after properly feeding and caring for our fifty million of home population and say whether it should be protected or not. We do not ask protection as does many other branches of industry, which seeks by association, lobbies, and money to control legislation in their interest, as is evidenced by the Bankers' Association, with their regular organized associations, with their hundreds of millions of money invested in their business realizing them profits of 8 to 15 per cent. per annum, their publications in their interest, and at last depending upon the success of agriculture for the results of their business; nor of the large manufacturers who manufacture and sell indirectly to the farmers, who have their manufacturing associations of all kinds, combining in their own interest and at the expense generally of agriculture. This is especially the case with those engaged in the manufacture of tobacco, who constantly have a lobby around Congress to protect their interests and prevent any legislation looking to the amelioration of the hardships imposed upon the farmers and producers of the country by the laws that force farmers to sell to them or their agents. And still they expect to sell their manufactures to the farmers.

The merchants have their mercantile associations. The manufacturers also have their protective-tariff associations, with their journals and lobbies in the interest of protection to their manufactures. The sugar refiners have their associations in order to keep up the price of this indispensable article to the farmer and his family. And even the distillers have their whisky rings and lobbies to protect their interest in the national councils. But who has ever witnessed a lobby around this Capitol in the interest of the agricultural interests of the country? No one, I presume, ever witnessed such a scene, because those engaged in agricultural pursuits have something else to look after, and are generally engaged in pursuits better adapted to their tastes than in lobbying around the Capitol to secure legislation in their interest at the expense of another class of their fellow-citizens. It is true that agriculturists have their associations, their granges, &c. But in all such, politics is forbidden and seldom, if ever, discussed. All they ask is a fair chance in the race for life, with laws applicable to all, and favoritism to none. With equality before the law and a fair share of the benefits derived from our Government, this branch of our country can successfully cope with the world.

Who is not proud of the foregoing exhibits of our agricultural wealth, of our large exports, to which may be added many things not mentioned in the exhibit? What American citizen was not proud of the achievements upon the European turf during the past season by the American horses Foxhall and Iroquois, bred and raised upon American farms, and of the long list of American horses now in Europe as their comrades, to contest for the English purses the approaching season? Who was not proud of the American exhibits of wool and other fabrics and of farming and other implements of machinery manufactured upon American soil, supported and maintained by American agriculture, as exhibited at the Paris Exposition; and of our great railroads, extending from ocean to ocean, fed and fattened upon the production of the farmers of the country? Although they discriminate against the farmers to an alarming extent, yet we cannot get along without them, and they come as a great blessing to the farmer to haul off his surplus products. The same may be said of our great rivers that Congress is so liberally improving in order that commerce may be accommodated. The agricultural interests and products support all of these interests, and they put their tariffs and burdens upon the laborer just as far as he is able to bear, and all reap a rich reward in profits. No railroad would be constructed to a country void of agricultural products. No banker would risk his capital in a locality void of agricultural resources, nor would any manufacture invest largely in a country where it could not be supported by agricultural products. Hence the injustice done by legislation in the interest of capital against labor, of the few against the many, and of anything tending to or smacking of class legislation.

I hold that the agricultural interests of this country are entitled to, and should receive, greater protection and aid, if need be, from Congress than that of any business of the country, when it really receives less. It is alone promoted, fostered, and built up by the courage, industry, and will of the strong arms and noble minds of the men engaged in such pursuits—men who are not afraid to take hold of the plow and the hoe; men who seek it for a living and for the support and maintenance of their wives and children; men who follow it of choice and add to the blessings of the world by producing food for the millions of hungry people in this and other countries, many of whom think the life and occupation of a farmer and laborer is degrading, many of whom know nothing of the hardships thus endured in producing food and raiment for them, nor can they appreciate the pleasures enjoyed by the rural agriculturist in the enjoyments of his life in the midst of a happy family, if blessed with the ordinary comforts of life, even if he does know that he and his calling have been neglected by the legislation of his Government.

In the formation of committees it is generally supposed that members will be appointed according to fitness, and not because of interest. This was certainly so with this committee in the last Congress when a New York lawyer, an exceedingly clever gentleman and good presiding officer, was made chairman; and when the present committee of sixteen members was appointed due regard was had by the honorable Speaker of the House to select as chairman a gentleman not engaged in agriculture, but an able man, a courteous gentleman, and a fine presiding officer, with only seven of the sixteen members engaged in agriculture, three of them in other pursuits also. Yet the Speaker could hardly have selected sixteen gentlemen more agreeably associated together and who have had less wrangling in the committee. This, of course, will apply to other committees no doubt, as the honorable Speaker was not looking to the interest of the national banks when he appointed nine bankers on the Committee on Banking and Currency out of the eleven members composing that committee. Nor was he looking to the interest of the manufacturers of the country when he appointed the Ways and Means Committee to look after the tariff and internal-revenue interests of the country.

But the feeling is growing fast that the agricultural interests of the country must and will have recognition in Congress, and gentlemen who are not willing to concede to this large and important part of our country the rights and benefits claimed will be sent to the rear, and men sent here who will vindicate their rights against all rings, lobbies, and other influences combining against them.

It was my pleasure at the last session of Congress to offer an amendment to the agricultural appropriation bill appropriating $10,000 to build a museum at the Agricultural Department for the display of agricultural implements, farm products, and other things advantageous to agriculture. I was admonished that it would meet serious opposition and be stricken out by the House, but such was not the case, and the appropriation was made. And the honorable Commissioner is now having constructed said museum, and will soon have a splendid display of implements, minerals, cereals, &c., donated to him by the Atlanta (Georgia) exposition and others, where our farmers and agriculturists may see the implements and products adapted to the various sections of our country. Was this $10,000 foolishly expended? I think not. If so, was the $275,000 appropriated by a previous Congress to erect a museum at the Smithsonian Institution to hold the curiosities and other things belonging to that institution properly expended? I think both were right and proper; but the Smithsonian museum is the pride of the Appropriations Committee and cost $275,000, while that at the Agricultural Department is to cost only $10,000, showing the difference between fancy and real legislation—one to contain curiosities, and the other to contain the real necessaries of life, with the implements best adapted to their culture, and the most valuable products of the soil.

The Agricultural Department should have control of the Botanical Gardens. Their connection with the Library is out of place, expensive, and really unnecessary.

The Signal Service of the country, if not transferred to the Agricultural Department, should be required to furnish all weather reports promptly to the Agricultural Department, that they might send it broadcast over the country for the information of farmers. If this was done, millions of money would be saved by farmers by being warned in advance of frosts, storms, and other incidents calculated to destroy crops. In fact, every facility should be afforded agriculture that can be to foster, protect, and build up this great branch of industry that our vast and increasing population may be abundantly fed and cared for, and that we can be the better prepared to feed the hungry in all other countries dependent upon ours for their breadstuffs. Congress cannot act too liberally toward the Agricultural Department while it is in the hands of experienced and able officers, who, feeling the responsibility of their positions, will use it so as to disseminate as much valuable information to their countrymen as can be had, and to supply the country with such valuable and improved seeds as may be had.

The amount of money expended by this Department in the investigation of the insects destructive to cotton, the Rocky Mountain locusts, &c., has been of great benefit to the farmers of the country, as has the money expended in the investigation of diseases of swine and other domesticated animals. And just so long as the country is troubled with such diseases, or insects, it is the duty of Congress by liberal appropriations to try to meet their visits or provide against them, which can be done by judicious appropriations and the employment of the proper agents.

The operation of the internal-revenue law is a great source of trouble to the farmers in many sections of the country, prevents the proper development of the agricultural industries, and operates to a great degree as an oppressive law upon the farmers, especially those of moderate means who raise small crops of tobacco, fruits, &c. The law is harsh and oppressive, and the men usually selected to enforce it in the interior have been generally of a class selected more for their daring than for their good judgment or their desire to enforce the laws. I had hoped that this Congress would be willing to lift some of the burdens from the honest farmers of the country, when we have a surplus revenue in the Treasury of nearly $150,000,000. It would be much better to begin to cut down the internal-revenue tax, rather than vote it away extravagantly, as we are doing by voting $100,000,000 in pensions at a dash, $15,000 pension to one widow, $5,000 to another, and $13,500 yearly to a rich man to be placed on the retired list. But when a bill is presented to repeal a law that is a great annoyance to thousands of farmers and poor men in the country, that yielded last year less than $600 revenue, (as was done last Monday,) we find ninety-one gentlemen receiving an annual salary of $5,000 voting against it. I am truly glad, in looking over that list, to find but one gentleman claiming to be a Democrat who voted against the bill, and he from the city of Boston. I was delighted to read an able address delivered by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means before a meeting of protectionists in the city of New York a few months ago, in which he claimed to be the champion of the laboring men of the country, and spoke of the hardships endured by the farmers under our internal-revenue laws. I then thought the farmers had a friend that could help them. But when I was going to move to suspend the rules on Monday last and pass the bill in the interest of the very class he had alluded to, he took the floor and denounced my bill as opening the flood-gates of fraud, all of which he knew was not so, as does every other sensible man.

Now, the receipts of internal revenue last year were over $135,000,000, which, with other recipts, left a balance in the Treasury or a surplus of receipts over expenditures of nearly one hundred and fifty millions. With this showing I think, as did the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, that it is time to wipe out this internal-revenue system. It was adopted as a war measure, when we owed an immense debt. We have been at peace seventeen years, have reduced the national debt within a reasonable compass, and we can safely abolish the whole internal-revenue system. It cost last year more than five million dollars to collect the one hundred and thirty-five millions, but in the past five years it has cost about twenty-two millions, all of which comes out of the pockets of the tax-payers of the country. While this may seem a small per cent. upon the gross amount, yet in some of the districts the per cent. is large. For instance, in the district in which I reside—the fifth district of Tennessee—the collections last year were $922,014. And the salaries alone paid the officers were $101,551, or more than 11 per cent. Whether this large force was necessary to be employed or not, I am unable to say; but I do say that I was reliably informed that each subordinate officer was assessed $30 for campaign purposes and compelled to pay it. Thus the people are taxed in this one district 11 per cent. upon the collections, a large amount of which was assessed, collected, and used by the party in power to perpetuate their reign.

This is all wrong. Just as long as we have a large surplus of money in the Treasury, just so long will extravagant legislation be had, and the money wrung from the pockets of the tax-payers will be voted away by the million, in the interest of party favorites, large corporations, and monopolies, and the poor taxpayers are compelled to submit to it. They have no redress. When they appeal to Congress to repeal a law that yields no revenue, they are denounced by the friends of corporations and monopolists as wanting to open the flood-gates of fraud and their motives misrepresented, and they are denied any relief under a pretext that the large and wealthy manufacturer may be injured; and ninety-one gentlemen vote to keep this yoke upon their necks in order to fatten and protect the Shylocks and speculators, and to give employment to the more hungry office-seekers who are willing to act the part of spies, informers, &c., for the sake of the pay; men who are willing to spy out and report upon an honest farmer and neighbor for the pay. Such men are unworthy of countenance, and disgrace our country, who, by their conduct, cost the taxpayers of the country thousands of dollars annually that should be saved. To avoid this disgraceful mode of collecting revenue let us wipe out the whole internal-revenue system so far as it affects the productions of the farm.

Mr. VALENTINE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BURROWS.]

Mr. BURROWS, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, in rising to say a few words in support of this bill I do not wish to be understood as replying to the speeches upon either side of this House, for it must be acknowledged that debate has taken a very wide range, and, for one, I shall not be surprised to hear the "Chinese emigration question," the "subject of polygamy," or any other of the vexed questions upon which this body has or will be called upon to legislate before this session closes, being brought in and discussed as though analogous to the bill under consideration, to the merits of the bill, and its ultimate benefits to the agricultural and horticultural interests, and, I may add, the whole country; for how can you benefit the tillers of the soil, or the keepers of the orchard and vineyard, without receiving back a reflux influence that will permeate every branch of trade, industry, and enterprise.

I am utterly astonished to see members upon this floor offering objections or disparaging the utility and usefulness of this Department, originated solely, and purely, for the promotion and encouragement of agriculture, and that has already done so much good, and that is growing every year in the estimation and affections of the farmers of this country. Its work and workings are better understood and appreciated each year, and it is not only through the valuable information collected from all parts of our country, and I may say of the world, but by the distribution of seed, field, garden, and flower, as well as many rare and valuable trees, vines, and plants. The one publication alone, Contagious Diseases of Domestic Animals, is worth more to the stock-raising interest of this country than many times the amount asked for in this bill, and I am glad to see the same report embodied in the Agricultural Report for 1880. The losses to the farmers of the West from the ravages of these terrible diseases is not counted by thousands of dollars as this bill is, but by millions. Here is a meager appropriation for investigations as to insects injurious to agriculture.

Who will estimate the loss to growing crops by chinch bugs, locusts, and other destructive insects? Who is to superintend this work, collect statistical information, gather and disseminate the practical experiences and tests that are being made from year to year; the new varieties that are being introduced and tried in the various localities and sections of our common country? I am not surprised when gentlemen hailing from the metropolis and larger cities of our land have little or nothing to say upon this subject, and this bill in particular, and are silent; but when members who represent large agricultural constituencies can so far forget the people and their interests as to openly attack and oppose one at least of the principle features and purposes of the Department of Agriculture, i. e., the distribution of seed, I am utterly unable to account for it. One gentleman says "they are never given or distributed to those to whom they should go." Possibly these members speak from experience; if so, they are excusable, and it must be regarded as a most humiliating argument, to say the least.

According to the provisions of this bill and the law as it now stands "one-half of all the seeds, plants, and cuttings, &c., shall be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress" for distribution among their constituents, or shall, by their direction, be sent to their constituents, and the persons receiving such seeds shall inform the Department of the results of the experiments therewith. Where is the failure? Is it in the Department, the system, the people, or members of Congress? I leave this for every member to answer for himself. The object of this distribution is not an act of charity, or for supplying destitution, where by reason of drought, inundation, conflagration, or the ravages of insects, such as have swept over parts of our country in the last few years, however great and philanthropic such an act would be, but for the purpose of testing new varieties and acclimating the products of one section to that of another. The importation and introduction of the sorghum or African cane is one among the many as the practical results of this Department, and to the people of the North fell like a blessing from a war-clouded sky.

The gentleman from Kentucky is mistaken when he condemns the quality of the seed, and says "one-half of them will not grow." If he will take the trouble to investigate the purchases and report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1880-'81 he will find that seeds were purchased of the very best seedsmen in this and in other countries. The failure to germinate may arise from many causes other than from poor seed, i. e., poor soil badly prepared, lack of rain, &c. Mr. Chairman, I hope this bill will pass. The total amount asked for is only $396,880. I would be in favor of and gladly vote for every dollar asked for by the Commissioner or the estimate, $502,980, and am sorry indeed there has been a reduction. What is the industry represented in this bill, and what are its relative relations to all the other industries in the land? Of the boasted fifty millions of people in this country, sometimes called "the youthful giant," there is not less than 55, or possibly 60 per cent., engaged in agricultural pursuits or dependent upon it. Is it not the foundation of our national greatness and wealth? Is it not from that source that the stream of prosperity must ever spring upon this continent? We all realize this, and yet our laws too often discriminate against the agriculturist, and he is made a "hewer of wood and a drawer of water" for others.

This was shown a day or so since upon the floor of this House in the workings of the internal (I am not sure it is not a misnomer and ought to be, I was going to say, infernal) revenue laws that so unjustly discriminate against the producers of tobacco who are not permitted to sell to others than wholesale licensed dealers. But I will not now discuss that question as we are promised an opportunity of doing so soon. I will make one more statement that I trust will induce a greater spirit of liberality in agricultural appropriations and that is to what, far more than the mere passage of the so-called "resumption act," do we owe the prosperity that has fallen like the silent dews by night all over this country and has made resumption possible or tenable. Resumption acts cannot and did not fill our Treasury. What then? The excess of our exports over that of our imports, that for the last six years, or since 1875, the year of the passage of the resumption act, has averaged $196,706,922 for each year, or a grand total of $1,180,241,532.

We all know that the harvest-fields of the West and North, the cotton-fields of the South, together with our mines and forests, beef and pork, contributed more than 75 per cent. of this vast sum. Can we afford to be niggardly and miserly in our appropriations for the promotion and encouragement of agriculture and horticulture in this country of magnificent soil, climate, fertility, and richness, or shall we help those upon whose broad shoulders rest and depend so much of the prosperity, morality, safety, and patriotism of this nation? I hope the bill will pass. I would like to see it embrace every dollar asked for by the Commissioner in his estimates for the fiscal year.

Mr. VALENTINE. Is the time allowed for general debate exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. There are ten minutes remaining.

Mr. VALENTINE. I will reserve those ten minutes. The first reading of the bill has been dispensed with. I ask that it now be read by clauses for amendment.

The reading of the bill was proceeded with.

The Clerk read the following:

AGRICULTURAL STATISTICS.

For collecting agricultural statistics and compiling and writing matter for monthly, annual, and special reports, $75,000, to be immediately available: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be paid to any person receiving at the same time other compensation as an officer or employé of the Government.

Mr. PARKER. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "statistics," in the first line of the pending paragraph, insert the words "including statistics of the production, home consumption, and exportation of oleomargarine, butterine, and imitation butter."

Mr. PARKER. This amendment is intended to provide for future annual statistics of the oleomargarine manufacture. At present the Agricultural Department is barren of such statistics, so far as I can ascertain. I wish, also, to call the attention of the House and the country to such fragmentary data as I am able now to reach.

At home every consumer is liable to become the daily victim of those who are unscrupulously adulterating the food of the people by an imitation of butter so artfully made as to defy detection by any except the most expert. Abroad our market for genuine and honest products is greatly harmed by the belief that Americans are palming off upon consumers as a dairy product a very base imitation. It is due to the consumer at home and abroad that all of the facts obtainable be given them; and it is due to this great American industry that it be protected against a clandestine and surreptitious competition.

I submit several extracts indicating how little and how much is publicly known of the oleomargarine maker's work; and also communications and tables from our courteous and capable statisticians of the Treasury and Interior Departments, showing something of the enormous and rapidly increasing amount of this commodity, so difficult of identity that the man who eats it does not know what it is.

The statistics are of interest to all in anywise connected with the great industry affected. You will notice that the ascertained export of oleomargarine for 1881 was over 26,300,000 pounds, valued at nearly $4,000,000; and that the product of only twelve factories was in 1880 over $6,000,000. The immense quantities that have been absorbed at home and sent abroad without detection no man can fairly estimate from our present information.

[From a statement made by Dr. Ch. F. Chandler to a committee of the House of Representatives, March 27, 1880, in the interest of the factories.]

I am informed that there are at present thirteen factories in the United States licensed under the patents to manufacture this butter. The commercial manufacturing company of New York is making at the present from thirty to forty thousand pounds daily. In addition to this industry there is a large manufacture of what is known as "oleomargarine oil," which is shipped as such to Europe, to be there converted into butter; so that this product has become an important article of export to foreign countries.

[From the New York Tribune.]

OLEOMARGARINE EXPORTED AS BUTTER.

In response to complaints made by Walter Carr & Co., G. S. Hart & Co., McKenzie, Newman & Co., N. D. Hare & Co., and many other receivers and exporters of butter, upon the Produce Exchange, that they are now obtaining very imperfect statistics as to the quantity of butter that is being exported from the country because much oleomargarine is cleared as butter, F. H. Parker, president of the exchange, yesterday addressed a letter to Secretary Sherman requesting that necessary instructions be given to the United States Clearing Department to have oleomargarine distinguished from butter in the clearances.

Interviews with the leading butter firms show the general opinion to be that it is not only important to the trade that butter and its substitute should be classified under their distinctive heads, but that it is equally important in making up the general statistics of commerce. It was said that to class oleomargarine in the exports was a fraud perpetrated upon every American citizen who expects to get correct information from the Government statistics, and with the same propriety all grain might be classed under the head of wheat or all oil as petroleum. The report of exports of butter from June 1 to September 1, 1880, is 11,844,691 pounds, against 8,759,884 pounds for the same period in 1879, and 9,817,601 pounds for the same time in 1878. The trade are unable to ascertain what proportion of this is oleomargarine; but the dealers are convinced that the oleomargarine manufacturers are working night and day and selling the substitute very largely to the home, out-of-town, and export trade, and that the law requiring the packages to be branded and shipped as "oleomargarine" is not complied with. It is believed that of the adulterated butter exported not one tub out of a thousand goes out under the brand of "oleomargarine," or is cleared as such.

Regarding the extent to which oleomargarine has been sold, statistics furnished by Mr. F. B. Thurber, of the firm of Messrs. H. K. and F. B. Thurber & Co., the agents of the Commercial Manufacturing Company, but which were received too late to appear in the printed testimony, show that this company sold alone for the year ending January 29, 1881, the enormous quantity of nearly $2,000,000 of the oil and oleomargarine butter, from which it is not unreasonable to conclude from the testimony offered that at least two-thirds of it found its way into the stomachs of the community as natural butter. Taking this as a basis from which to form some idea of the extent this compound is placed upon the market by the many companies over the United States, together with the distrust raised in the minds of the community, and but little room for doubt is left that at no distant period the once brilliant prospects of dairy interests will depart forever.

In a report made to the House of Representatives February 4, 1881, George T. Angell, esq., of Boston, says:

Few persons have any correct idea of the extent to which this article is now made in this country. A single firm in New York City has recently contracted with parties in Vermont for 300,000 firkins, to be delivered this year, for packing oleomargarine butter. It is estimated that there was made in this country last year about one hundred millions of pounds.

[From Boston Journal of February 15, 1882.]

It is difficult to get at reliable statements of the product of oleomargarine in this vicinity, but it is safe to put it down at about one hundred thousand pounds a week. Were it not for this supply there is no telling where the price of genuine butter would go to. Oleomargarine is now taken largely by the manufacturing towns and for ship stores. It is retailed alongside of other butter in this city, and taken in preference to the other at the same price, the buyer, however, not knowing the real character of the article. The law forbids oleomargarine to be sold without being plainly branded, and we understand that a few parties have been fined for not obeying the statute, but to all intents and purposes the law is inoperative.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF STATISTICS,
Washington, D. C., February 7, 1882.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your verbal inquiry in regard to the subject of oleomargarine, I inclose to you herewith two statements. The first is simply an extract from the New York Shipping and Commercial List of September 18, 1880. I cannot vouch for the accuracy of the statements made therein and am inclined to think that the whole thing is quite crude.

Second. I submit to you a statement prepared from the records of this office showing the quantities and values of oleomargarine exported from the United States during the six years ended June 30, 1881.

I would refer you to a document, House of Representatives report No. 199, Forty-sixth Congress, third session, in regard to the adulteration of food. You will find in this report some figures which may be of interest to you on pages 13 and 15.

I am, sir, very respectfully, yours,

_____,
Chief of Bureau.

Hon. A. X. PARKER, M. C.,

NOTE.—The law of several States requiring this imitation to be so plainly marked that all who buy may read is said to be a dead letter. Nearly all the butter dealers sell the composite article; and so perfect is the imitation that few but experts can detect it.

It is not claimed that more than 5 per cent. of butter is used in oleomargarine, and it is estimated that ten cents a pound covers all the cost of the materials and manufacture. As it is sold to dealers within three or four cents of the price of dairy butter, it will be seen that its manufacture must be very profitable.

The manufacturers have called to their aid eminent professors in chemistry, who give it as their opinion that oleomargarine is fully equal to pure, fresh dairy butter.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, CENSUS OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 3, 1882.

SIR: In accordance with your request, I inclose the statistics of manufacture of "oleomargarine" for the following-named cities, namely, New York, Philadelphia, Brooklyn, Chicago, Boston, Baltimore, Cincinnati, and Louisville.

The compilations for this industry have not yet been completed for the United States, hence I am unable at this time to furnish you as complete statistics as I could wish. It should be borne in mind that statistics made public at this time are merely preliminary and still subject to such revision and correction as this office shall deem necessary by reason of the receipt of additional information.

Very respectfully, C. B. SEATON, Superintendent.

Hon. A. X. PARKER, Washington, D. C.

NOTE.—It should be borne in mind that statistics made public at this time are merely preliminary and still subject to such revision and correction as this office shall deem necessary by reason of the receipt of additional information.

Mr. VALENTINE. There is no objection to the gentleman's amendment so far as I am aware.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. PARKER, it was adopted.

Mr. HASELTINE. I move to amend by inserting after the word "available" in the pending paragraph these words:

Said report shall give a full statement monthly, showing the freight charges for the chief agricultural products upon the principal lines of railroads and river routes to the principal markets in the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I understand that the object of the Agricultural Department is to enlighten and encourage the agriculturist of this country. To enable them to become prosperous, they should not only be able to make good crops, but they should have the benefit of those crops when raised. The history of this country shows that the great producers of wealth have been placed at the mercy of wealthy corporations controlling the lines of transportation, by means of which they are enabled to control all the crops of the Western and Southern States. They are enabled to raise their freights in their discretion, and absorb all the profits of industry, thereby making millionaires in the East and renters and paupers of our agriculturists in the West. The object of this large appropriation is to gather statistics for the benefit of the people. We should be able to gain valuable information as an equivalent for the money invested.

Sir, we think it a matter of great importance to the agriculturists of the country to obtain information not only as to the best methods of farming, but also as to the cost of transportation on the different railroad and river routes, so that there may be materials for such legislation as will give to our agriculturists proper protection in getting their products to market. I submit this amendment in the belief that it will recommend itself to the intelligence of members without further discussion.

The amendment of Mr. HASELTINE was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

PURCHASE AND DISTRIBUTION OF SEEDS, ETC.

For the purchase and propagation and distribution, as required by law, of seeds, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, and expenses of putting up the same, to be distributed in localities adapted to their culture, $80,000. An equal proportion of one-half of all seeds, plants, and cuttings shall, upon their request, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution among their constituents, or shall, by their direction, be sent to their constituents; and the persons receiving such seeds shall inform the Department of the results of the experiments therewith: Provided, That all seeds, plants, and cuttings herein allotted to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, for distribution, remaining uncalled for at the end of the fiscal year, shall be distributed by the Commissioner of Agriculture: And provided also, That the Commissioner shall report, as provided in this act, the place, quantity, and price of seeds purchased, from whom purchased, and the date of purchase. But nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prevent the Commissioner of Agriculture from sending flower, garden, and other seeds to those who apply for the same. And the amount herein appropriated shall not be diverted or used for any other purpose but for the purchase, propagation, and distribution of improved and valuable seeds, plants, cuttings, and vines.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I move to strike out "one-half," in line 95, and insert in lieu thereof "three-fourths."

Mr. VALENTINE. What does the gentleman propose?

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I move to change the proportion in the distribution of seeds, plants, and cuttings from one-half to be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, to three-fourths, leaving one-quarter to be distributed by the Commissioner of Agriculture. I do not suppose the gentleman from Nebraska, chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, will have any objection to it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in the first place, it was left to the Commissioner of Agriculture, under the law, to distribute these seeds to Representatives of agricultural districts. In the exercise of his discretion he only gave them to members representing agricultural districts and not to gentlemen representing cities. The law was changed and he was then required to distribute them equally. At the last session the provision was incorporated, which is included in the present bill, requiring him to distribute one-half to members of Congress, the remaining half to be distributed by himself.

The present Commissioner of Agriculture, Dr. Loring, a gentleman for whom I have great respect, informed me he would rather have these seeds, plants, and cuttings distributed by the members themselves, as they knew better who required them in each district, and who would use them most judiciously. He was a stranger to many agricultural districts, and would have to rely on the postmasters and agents in the distribution of seeds, while the members of Congress would know their constituents and would be better able to judge who should receive them than any bureau officer stationed in the city of Washington.

My amendment provides, instead of an equal proportion being distributed by members of Congress and by the Commissioner of Agriculture, that the members of Congress shall distribute three-fourths, leaving one-quarter to be distributed by the Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. VALENTINE. Under the Revised Statutes and the law originally creating the Department of Agriculture seeds were distributed by the Commissioner of Agriculture. That is the law to-day, except in so far as it has been changed from time to time by provisions in the appropriation bills. The provision reported by the Committee on Agriculture in the pending appropriation bill, in reference to the purchase and distribution of seeds, is in the identical language of the bill passed in the last Congress. Before that by provisions in the appropriation bill at each session it became an almost fixed rule that one-half of the seeds should be given to the member, at his option, for distribution in his district, while the other half was to be distributed by the Commissioner of Agriculture. I think the House has now encroached as far on the prerogative of the Department as it should go in that direction. We have a liberal supply, and sufficient under the law, as it is, and I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. Under the distribution which took place this year to members of Congress I received only twenty-two packages for each county in my district. That amounts to little or nothing. The other half was received by the Commissioner of Agriculture, and I do not know what has become of it. Since I sent out the proportion of seeds furnished me under the law, that is, twenty-two packages to each county, as soon as I received them, I have received more than one hundred and fifty letters requesting me to send seeds. I applied to the Agricultural Department, and was informed my quota had been delivered to me and no more could be furnished at present.

Now, what becomes of the other half? The Commissioner says he himself would prefer members of Congress should have more of the seeds for distribution, because they are better qualified, as they know their constituents and are better able to judge to whom they should be distributed than anybody in the city of Washington. His idea, I believe, ought to be carried out, and therefore my amendment proposes that three-fourths shall be distributed by members of Congress instead of one-half, as the bill proposes—one-fourth to be distributed by the Commissioner.

Mr. ANDERSON. I would suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that the Commissioner of Agriculture distributes far the larger proportion of his quota of seeds among the counties of the several Congressional districts. The amount I received for each county in my district was less than the amount received by the gentleman from Kentucky for each of his counties, but at the same time the Commissioner distributed his proportion of the seeds generally in all the counties of all the States. He sends to his correspondents out of the quota given to him, and he has correspondents in every county all over the country. Therefore the amount of seeds going into the gentleman's district is not confined to what he himself has sent out.

The point is just here. While we would all like to have more seed than we get for distribution to our several counties, yet that is not the way to get at it, but rather by increasing the amount of seeds which are to be distributed. There is some amount of liberty due to the Agricultural Department. It has its correspondents in every county in each State, and it is only fair the Department should have a fair quota of these seeds for distribution. Last year I was in favor of making this discrimination, and the year before, and fought for it earnestly. This year I do not care whether it is put at one-fourth or one-half, as I believe the seeds will go to the farmer, whatever proportion may be fixed upon.

Mr. VALENTINE. I wish to correct a statement made by me in my former remarks, that this bill is reported in the exact language of the last appropriation bill. In that I was incorrect, as we have added the phrase "to be distributed in localities adapted to their culture." That has been included because cotton-seed were distributed in Nebraska and northern regions where there is no use for them, and to prevent any such thing in the future we have left it discretionary with the Commissioner of Agriculture in the distribution of these seeds to Senators and Representatives to distribute them in localities adapted to their culture. That is the only change which we have proposed.

Mr. ANDERSON. I will now be glad to answer the question of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. The question I wished to ask the gentleman from Kansas was, if he does not believe that members of Congress, representing districts here, are better qualified to decide and know better to whom they should distribute the seed than the Commissioner of Agriculture here in Washington, who is a total stranger to the people generally, except to the people of his own particular locality. I wished to ask the gentleman whether, in his judgment, it is not better that the members of Congress, who are individually acquainted with the wants of their constituents, should distribute these seeds than the Commissioner who does not know who may need them most. Would it not be better to allow the members themselves to distribute them?

Mr. ANDERSON. In response to the question of my friend from Kentucky I would say that if this were a mere simple abstract proposition I would say yes. There would not be, in that event, any difference of opinion between us on the subject. But as to whether there will be any difference in the quantity of seed that may go into a district, or whether the Commissioner is less able to discriminate as to where he should send them than the member, is scarcely a question here. For the fact is, as I believe, the Commissioner of Agriculture depends largely in distributing the seed upon the wishes of the members themselves, or upon the suggestions received from them; and the committee likes to have suggestions from members upon that point. I have no doubt at all that they will be properly distributed through him; and whether you fix this amount at one-half or three-quarters will not affect the result.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. The amendment which I have offered will not prevent the Commissioner from sending seed. It only extends to the members of Congress an opportunity of sending more seed than they are now allowed.

Mr. HAWK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state here that I apprehend there is very little difference as to whether we make this nice distinction in the distribution of the seed provided for by this bill or not; for this reason, that usually when seeds are sent out to the various districts the Commissioner is anxious and desires that lists be furnished him by members of Congress from the various districts of the persons to whom he shall distribute the seed. It makes no difference whether the member shall have for his portion of seed for distribution one-half, one-third, one-fourth, or any other amount, for usually they are distributed in this way through the Commissioner.

It seems to me that the amount fixed as proper to be under the member's control in this bill is eminently just; for if a member chooses to send out the packages of seed himself he has one-half of the total allowed him for that purpose; and if he prefers to throw the responsibility of sending them out upon the Agricultural Department, either of a half or of any other quantity that he can procure from the Department, the Commissioner has the power to do so, and the people get them the same as if sent by the member. Therefore, practically, I apprehend all the seeds are at the disposal of the members of Congress. So I say it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that upon this provision to make this nice distinction as to whether you will fix the amount which be placed under the immediate control of each member at a half, a quarter, or a third seems to be needless. I think the provision ought to remain practically just as it is, without amendment. I hope the amendment will not be adopted,

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. CONVERSE. I move to strike out the last word. I do so simply to inquire of the gentleman having the bill in charge whether this amount appropriated last year—$80,000—for this purpose was invested in seeds, and whether it is true that half of the amount has been delivered to members of Congress for distribution. I will state, at the time of making this inquiry, that my information is to the effect that one-half of this appropriation of $80,000 was expended not for the purpose of distributing seeds, but for an entirely different purpose. It is alleged that it was used for clerk hire and other needs of that bureau.

In that same connection I will state that the Commissioner this year has given me not only one-half of the seed to which I was entitled, the seed purchased with that money, but the other half also, for I understood he gave me the whole share that should go to my district. Therefore I have received about three bags of seed, or say six bushels, including the papers and all. If the $80,000 had been expended in seed, this six bushels would cost the Government $200; but if only one-half had been expended, then they would have cost the Government $100. But it seems to me impossible that this amount of money should have been expended solely for the purchase of seed, and for this reason I desire to know from the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture how much has been expended and whether the whole amount provided for in that appropriation has been distributed.

Mr. VALENTINE. Under the law adopted in the last appropriation bill the Commissioner of Agriculture was required to report to this House or to Congress an itemized statement of purchases, and also an account of the distribution of the seeds under that law. You will find that report in the Book of Estimates on page 238, and you will find a recapitulation of the items of that account showing the amount actually expended for seed to be $41,151.85; expended on account of freight, $2,874.06; for labor, $28,552.28; paper, twine, &c., $1,366.37; bags and pockets, $4,107.37; printing material, $747.70; traveling expenses, $2,015.93; miscellaneous, $1,438.79; leaving unexpended about $95.

Now I say the committee examining that account have ascertained that the Commissioner of Agriculture has, as I understand it, purchased and shipped these seeds, put them up in small packages of one hundred, at a considerably less rate of cost than the various seed dealers of the country distribute their seed.

Mr. CONVERSE. I would like to ask the gentleman another question, whether he supposes it has cost the Department $28,000 to put up in packages $41,000 worth of seed?

Mr. VALENTINE. If the gentleman from Ohio will examine the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture upon that question, he will see, as I have stated, an itemized account showing that every dollar of that was expended for the purposes stated. It is set out at length in the Book of Estimates and submitted to Congress under the law. That report is before the House and is accessible to all the members. It will show that this amount was expended for labor in connection with putting up these seeds. I have already stated that the committee carefully examined the whole subject.

Mr. CONVERSE. If the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture will allow me to press the inquiry a little further, I would ask him whether it is not a fact that clerks have been paid out of this fund who have not only put up the seeds, but have been compelled to do other necessary work in the Department; and if that be so, whether this bill should not provide for more clerks instead of charging their work to the seed department?

Mr. VALENTINE. I will say, in reply to the question of the gentleman from Ohio, there is a clerical force necessary for this work, which has been paid heretofore out of the seed appropriation. We have relieved this somewhat in this bill this year by giving the Commissioner six clerks at $840 a year, to be paid, not from this fund but from the fund appropriated for the payment of clerks; and we have increased the force by three clerks at $1,000 a year in another place. Therefore the money appropriated for the purchase and distribution of seeds will be relieved this year to that extent, and the Department will be enabled to purchase just that much more this year than heretofore.

Mr. CONVERSE. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. TURNER,] which the Clerk will again report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 95 strike out "one-half" and insert "three-fourths."

The question being taken, there were—ayes 46, noes 55.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CONVERSE. I move to amend by adding a proviso providing no portion of this appropriation shall be expended for labor, but that it shall be all expended for the purchase of seeds.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please send up his amendment in writing.

Mr. VALENTINE. If such an amendment should be put on this bill it would destroy the effect of it, and you would not get any seeds at all.

Mr. RYAN. If the amendment was agreed to the labor could be provided for somewhere else.

Mr. CONVERSE. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Congress," in line 97, insert as follows:
"In proportion to the number of persons engaged in agricultural occupations in the respective Congressional districts and Territories as shown by the census of 1880."

Mr. VALENTINE. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If these seeds are to be distributed at all they should be distributed where they can do the most good, and therefore I think the amendment ought to be adopted. I cannot conceive why seeds should be sent to gentlemen who represent districts lying entirely within city limits. I do not believe you can raise wheat on Broadway, New York, or corn on Madison street, Chicago.

I wish to call attention to this fact, that gentlemen living in city districts who have no gardens and no fields are in the habit of giving them to their friends who represent rural districts. If that be true, there is an unfair distribution of seeds, as one district would receive more than others. Now I represent a district which unfortunately has suffered perhaps more from the drought that afflicted this country last summer than any other; yet I have been unable to get tobacco-seed except a package from my friend from Georgia, [Mr. COOK,] which he gave me in exchange for a packet of cotton-seed. I think, as these seeds can do no good in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, or any of these cities, the seeds heretofore distributed in the cities should be distributed among members representing rural districts; and I hope every member here representing a rural district will vote with me in favor of this amendment.

Mr. VALENTINE. I now make the point of order on the amendment that it changes existing law and does not retrench expenditure.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. What is the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. That the amendment changes existing law and does not tend to retrench expenditure.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I do not think it changes existing law. I would like my friend from Nebraska to point out wherein it does so.

Mr. VALENTINE. The existing law is that the seeds shall be divided equally among all Representatives.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My amendment does not increase expenditures.

Mr. VALENTINE. And it does not reduce them. If it did it might be in order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Then I will modify my amendment by striking out "$80,000" and inserting "$79,999.99."

Mr. VALENTINE. I still make the point of order that the amendment does not reduce expenditure; that it does not do so by the provision of the amendment itself. That is the point of order that was heretofore raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ROBINSON,] and was sustained by the Chair, which held it must be by reason of the provision of the amendment that the expenditure was lessened.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Before the Chair gives his decision on the point of order I would like to call attention to the nature of the amendment itself. The amendment in its nature reduces expenditure by reducing the amount appropriated for seed.

Mr. VALENTINE. That is not what I object to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. That is so mingled with the other part of the amendment that the whole forms one proposition. The amendment reduces the amount of expenditure and distributes these seeds to districts outside of city limits.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MONEY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out from line 95 to line 105, as follows:
"An equal proportion of one-half of all seeds, plants, and cuttings shall, upon their request, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution among their constituents, or shall, by their direction, be sent to their constituents; and the persons receiving such seeds shall inform the Department of the results of the experiments therewith: Provided, That all seeds, plants, and cuttings herein allotted to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution remaining uncalled for at the end of the fiscal year shall be distributed by the Commissioner of Agriculture."

Mr. MONEY. I offer this amendment so that these seeds shall be put exclusively at the disposal of the Commissioner of Agriculture. If there is any good whatever in the expenditure of this money it is to send these seeds to localities which are fitted by soil and climate for their successful cultivation; to promote, in other words, the agricultural interests of the whole country. Yet we have every year a distribution of cotton-seed to gentlemen north of Mason and Dixon's line living in cities.

Mr. VALENTINE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. VALENTINE. What is the amendment the gentleman has offered?

Mr. MONEY. I move to strike out all of the paragraph from line 95 to line 105, relating to the distribution of seeds by members of Congress.

I will repeat that the object of my amendment is to place the whole amount of seeds, cuttings, plants, &c., in the exclusive control and disposition of the Commissioner of Agriculture. Under the arrangement now in force we have to-day a large amount of cotton-seed distributed throughout the Northern States where it cannot be used, to the deprivation of citizens of the Southern States, where it is an exclusive staple. We have wheat distributed in localities where it is never used; we have tobacco-seed and tea-plants distributed where they cannot be used.

If we have a Commissioner of Agriculture who has the capacity to administer this Department for the benefit of the people he should have the exclusive right to distribute these seeds and plants. I can see no good purpose to be obtained by giving one-half of the seeds and cuttings to members of Congress, to whom they are a perfect bore and nuisance, and giving the other half to the Commissioner. I would let the Commissioner have the whole amount and distribute them at his discretion. If we do that, I venture to say the result will be gratifying to every member of this House who has at heart the good of the agricultural interests of this country.

Mr. BLOUNT. I trust the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] will be adopted. Until Congress attempted to limit the discretion of the Commissioner of Agriculture in the matter of the distribution of seeds, every old member will testify, I undertake to say, that he received more seeds than he does now. And that was for a very obvious reason. Until we made the restriction it was always the usage of the Commissioner of Agriculture to distribute the seeds in the various Congressional districts at the instance of the members of Congress from those districts.

Prior to that time there was no claim on the part of the Commissioner to retain a large proportion of these seeds to be distributed at his own instance. But the very moment that Congress restricted the matter by putting in an appropriation bill a provision that such a proportion of the seeds should be given to members of Congress, then at once the seeds were divided into two parcels, and the Commissioner of Agriculture insisted upon distributing the half or whatever proportion of seeds were left to him; and from that moment the amount of seeds subject to the direction of members of Congress was greatly reduced.

It has been my experience that from the time we attempted to restrict the Commissioner of Agriculture in the distribution of these seeds loud complaints came from members of Congress in reference to the amount of seeds which they received for distribution. Let this matter, then, be left for the Commissioner of Agriculture, and I undertake to say that seeds will not be divided between members and the Commissioner as they are now.

As the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TURNER] has already said, the Commissioner of Agriculture feels that the true plan for the distribution of seeds is to allow the Commissioner of Agriculture to resort to members of Congress from all over the country for information as to where the seeds should be sent. In a conversation with me not long ago the Commissioner said that notwithstanding the provision in the appropriation bill he should undertake to ascertain from members what they wished to be done with these seeds, for they know better than anybody else, and he would prefer to have the whole amount distributed by members.

I think we should go back to the old practice and allow the Commissioner to pursue the course which he desires in regard to this matter, the same course that was followed until we changed it by legislation. In that way we will avoid the trouble referred to by my friend from Mississippi, [Mr. MONEY,] the sending of seeds to members whose constituents do not want them. I trust the amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate on the pending amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. VALENTINE. I move to strike out the last word. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] shall be adopted it would leave the question of the distribution of seeds just where it is placed by the Revised Statutes, and just as it has been reported to this House heretofore in all appropriation bills since I have been a member.

When the Committee on Agriculture came to prepare this bill they thought that as the House had, session after session, changed the provision reported from the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Agriculture this time would adopt the language which was placed by the House in the last bill. So far as I am concerned I will say that I believe the matter should be left entirely to the discretion of the Commissioner of Agriculture to distribute these seeds.

Mr. BLOUNT. Let us try it.

Mr. VALENTINE. For one, if I had the authority of the committee I would accept the amendment; but as I have not I will say that I have no objection to it personally.

Mr. SPEER. I dissent altogether from the purpose of this amendment, and I especially dissent from the reasons given by my colleague [Mr. BLOUNT] for his advocacy of the amendment.

I believe that one who represents a Congressional district on this floor, if it be an agricultural district, has to a large extent a correct idea of where these valuable seeds and cuttings should be distributed in that district. I believe I know the farmers of my district a great deal better than the honorable Commissioner of Agriculture knows them. I certainly think I am discharging an agreeable duty to myself and a grateful duty to them when I send to them a portion of this largess which is accorded to them by the Government.

It is not very arduous labor on the part of the Representative. But a portion of the amount provided for is left to be distributed by members, and I think the bill should be allowed to stand as it has been reported from the committee. In this opinion there is of course no reflection on the honorable Commissioner of Agriculture himself. He is, in my judgment, the right man in the right place, and I am confident that he will largely increase the efficiency and popularity of his most useful and widely appreciated Department.

I sincerely trust, sir, that this amendment will not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate upon the pending amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. VALENTINE. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I renew it. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] will be adopted. It comes as near as we can practically get to the object of the amendment which I offered, and which was ruled out of order.

It does seem to me that if the present Commissioner of Agriculture is qualified to hold his position he is well qualified to make a judicious and proper distribution of these seeds as was contemplated in the original law. I believe, from my observation of the Commissioner, and from my acquaintance with him, that he is fully qualified for his position and will make a better distribution of these seeds among the people of the country than members of Congress can do.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. The gentleman is an old member of this House, and would oblige me very much if he would tell me what the practice was under the old rule; how the seeds reached the people.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The practice under the old law, as I understand, was just what is contemplated by the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi; that is, the entire matter was left to the discretion of the Commissioner, who, as I am informed, familiarizes himself with the species of seeds that will be most advantageous to particular districts and distributes them in proportion to the number of agriculturists in those districts.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. How? Upon whose request?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. At the request of members, and also acting upon his own judgment, as I understand. Allow me to state my experience in this matter. I made out a list of the people in my district to whom I desired seeds to be sent, and placed it in the hand of the Commissioner of Agriculture. He made an estimate of the quantity that should fairly go into my district, and distributed the seed to as many persons on the list as it was in his power to accommodate, and when there were more persons on the list than could be accommodated he notified me of the fact, and that ended the matter. I feel that we cannot do better than leave this question entirely in the hands of the Commissioner of Agriculture, a gentleman who, I am glad to say, is well fitted for the position he occupies, and can in my judgment distribute the seeds much more satisfactorily and advantageously to the country than can be done through members of this House.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the pro forma amendment. I wish to get some light on this proposition. The practice until, I think, three years ago was that the Commissioner of Agriculture distributed the seeds through correspondents in each district or county. Within the last year or two there was submitted in this House a proposition that the seeds should be distributed to a certain extent by members of Congress. I was a member of the Committee on Agriculture at that time, and had something to do with getting that amendment upon the last bill. The experiment has been tried for two years; and, so far as I am concerned, I most heartily wish that the Commissioner of Agriculture were allowed to distribute all these seeds. It seems to me that in all probability we would do better to throw the whole thing into his hands than to undertake to control the distribution ourselves.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The amendment does that.

Mr. ANDERSON. As a member of the committee reporting this bill, I am technically opposed to the amendment; but if the Committee of the Whole should adopt it I am frank to say I would not cry at all.

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the bill reported by the committee, and indeed would go further in the same direction. As it has been stated here that seed can be distributed most satisfactorily and effectually through the Department of Agriculture, I desire to state my experience. I do not intend any reflection upon the present Commissioner, for I have had no such experience with him; but my experience was this: a year or two ago I sent list after list to the Commissioner, and was afterward notified by the Department that the seed had been distributed to the parties indicated by myself, who had been notified that the seed was sent at my request. But the people to whom, according to the Department, these seed had been sent informed me in many instances—in fact in a majority of cases—that the seed had never been received. On the other hand, when I distributed seeds myself, the people to whom I sent them told me almost to a man that they had received them. I know that when I get seeds and direct and mail them they go where I want them to go. Therefore I am in favor of the provision of the bill as reported.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. MULDROW. I renew it. Mr. Chairman, the question has been asked what was the result under the old system, the system in operation before members had the option to control the distribution of a part of these seeds? According to my observation that system did not work well, and because of its failure to satisfy members of this House the present system was adopted in the appropriation bill of, I believe, the last session of the Forty-fifth Congress as well as both sessions of the Forty-sixth.

The statement of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT] who has just taken his seat, that where he has relied upon his request to the Department that seeds be sent the seeds in many instances have not reached their destination, struck me with signal force. The Commissioner of Agriculture in undertaking to send out seeds must rely upon the clerical force of the Department; he cannot give the matter his personal attention, and cannot know whether his directions are complied with. The result is that in many instances seeds have not reached the parties for whom they were intended, while, on the other hand, where members have personally attended to sending the seeds, they have in almost every instance gone where they were designed to go and have fulfilled the purposes of the appropriation, that is, the dissemination of good seeds to our farmers for the purpose of benefiting the entire country by the propagation of those seeds in their neighborhood. My colleague on my right [Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi] informs me that the complaint comes to him constantly that these seeds are not received when their distribution is intrusted to the Agricultural Bureau.

More than that, Mr. Chairman, this thing should be popularized to a greater extent than it is even now, though so far as my observation extends no branch of this Government is nearer the hearts of the agricultural people than the Department of Agriculture; and one reason is that when these seeds reach them they are able to see some direct benefit from the action of this Department.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If the Commissioner of Agriculture should fail to send seeds to those indicated by members of Congress, is it not easy to make inquiry and ascertain the fact?

Mr. MULDROW. Such inquiries have already been made; in fact, the information comes without inquiry that the people do not receive the seeds with the same regularity and certainty when their distribution is intrusted to the Department as when they are sent out by members of Congress.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. One other observation to the gentleman from Mississippi, and it is this: this amendment does not prohibit the Commissioner of Agriculture from giving the seeds to members for distribution to their several districts.

Mr. MULDROW. Not at all; but this proviso makes it incumbent to deliver them to members on their demand. It gives members option, and under this law every member who desires the Commissioner to distribute the seeds can direct him to do so. It gives him the privilege of controlling their distribution. I am therefore opposed to the amendment of my colleague, although I regret to oppose anything he offers.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. I trust, Mr. Chairman, this amendment will not prevail. As a member of the Committee on Agriculture, I desire to say that no provision of this bill in committee received so much and careful consideration as this pending section in reference to the purchase and distribution of plant-seeds. And it was the united judgment of that committee, as the chairman well knows, although he has gone back on the direction of the committee. In view of what has happened in the past, every year when this bill was brought in leaving the distribution to the Commissioner of Agriculture this House has taken it in hand and refused so to leave it. Every year, for the last three years, it has directed the distribution should be made as provided in this section of the bill, and as a general thing most satisfactorily so for the reasons already given by the gentleman from Maryland and the gentleman from Mississippi. I trust, therefore, the amendment will not prevail, and we will be allowed to pass this bill as it was reported from the Committee on Agriculture, since the experience of the past three years abundantly confirms the wisdom of this course.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. Chairman, I am certain that I am moved only by a desire to promote the agricultural interests of this country. This Department was instituted for no other purpose. I do not care about the labor of sending out seeds; that is nothing to me, and I can do it very quickly.

If the design is, as my colleague states, to popularize this Department, why not then bring the people directly into connection with the Commissioner of Agriculture? Why should the people reach him through the medium of members of Congress?

Sir, my design is to popularize this institution; it is to put these things where they will do the most good. If we are to expend here $80,000 of the money of the people of this country, let it, for Heaven's sake, go where it will do the most good.

What has been said about distributing an equal amount of cotton-seed to every member of this body from the Arctic regions to the tropics? What is said about sending seeds which cannot be grown except in hot-houses?

I have heard objection made here under the previous system that gentlemen who lived in cities did not get any seeds, or plants, or cuttings for distribution to their constituents, although they did not have in the limits of their districts any ground where they could be planted. Now I want these seeds to go to the farmers of the country who are interested in agriculture. If any gentleman can show me that this thing will not be better done by the Commissioner, whose business it is, than by members of Congress, then I will withdraw my amendment.

I have had, Mr. Chairman, a little experience in this myself. I remember in the Forty-fourth Congress each member received his proportion of seeds and sent them out. He sent them with his own hands. Afterward we changed the law, and gave one-half to members and the other half to the Department to be sent through the Commissioner at the member's request, or at his own discretion.

I admit that seeds have been lost and have not reached their destination, but I say in my own case just as many have been lost sent under my own frank, under my own hand, as have been notified to me as having been lost when sent by the Commissioner. You have your seeds sent, and just as speeches sent by members are sometimes not received, so seeds which are distributed fail to reach those to whom they are sent. Books sent are not received, and of course the same complaint comes as to seed, but it comes equally in one case as in the other.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that if these seeds are left to the entire disposal of the Commissioner of Agriculture he will send them to the right place, consulting climatic conditions and conditions of soil, &c., so they may be of substantial benefit to the farmers of the country. I do not want seeds distributed to metropolitan districts. We do not want cuttings and plants sent where they will not thrive except in a hot-house. We want them to go where they will do the most good. If we cannot trust the Commissioner of Agriculture to distribute eighty thousand dollars' worth of seed, in Heaven's name let us abolish this office at once.

Mr. BLACK. In order that I may have an opportunity to say a word on this subject, I will move to strike out the last word.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think the best evidence of what has been the experience of members of the House is the official legislative action of the House itself. As I understand, the enactment in the appropriation bill for this fiscal year was the first experiment made with the provision included in the pending bill and which it is now proposed to strike out. It seems, sir, from the experience of members of this House, that the law has worked very well in that shape, although we are called upon now to incorporate a new provision, or to strike out that one which has given satisfaction. I say, Mr. Chairman, that I am willing to accept the experience of the House as indicated by its legislation, until some gentleman can convince me by a better argument than any which has been presented upon this floor to-day that there is a necessity for this change.

Why, under the provision of this bill as it now stands, unrestricted, the Commissioner of Agriculture has discretion to distribute one-half of all the seeds, and to require him in all cases to give each member his share of the other half. And, as stated here, it is the practice of the present Commissioner, who is admitted by gentlemen present to be well qualified for his position, and a man who discharges worthily his duties—it is admitted here, that he gives to the members not only the one-half of the seed to which by the law they are entitled, but also the other half; and I cannot understand, therefore, why gentlemen should complain of this provision. If he gives all, why should gentlemen complain of this provision? Under what law does the Commissioner act when he does give all? Under the last appropriation bill, which, I understand, contained substantially the same provision that is now attempted to be stricken out of this bill. What reason can there be for complaint if the Commissioner has exercised his discretion in distributing the seeds in a manner so eminently satisfactory to members? Their argument is in favor of the incorporation of a restrictive provision, to limit the distribution of the seeds. But, Mr. Chairman, if under the law when there was no restriction all the seeds were given to members, what complaint can there be when all the seeds are given under a law with a limitation?

Now, by retaining this provision we will have the guarantee that each member on this floor, be he a partisan of the Commissioner—a member of the same political stripe—or not, or be he a favorite or not, or whether he be a member of influence or not upon this floor, he will have at all events the satisfaction and consolation of knowing one thing at least, and that is, sir, that the law is being applied, and that he will get one-half of the seeds to be distributed.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to correct what seems to be an erroneous impression here, in supposing that members on this floor who represent business localities, or "bricks and mortar," as it has been expressed here, have no interest in the distribution of these seeds. This is a mistake. In my own district, and I have no doubt that the same applies in many other city districts, we have large numbers of experimental farmers who spend considerable sums of money in growing new seeds, in cultivation of the soil, and in bringing out from the soil the largest possible product; and I have myself no difficulty in distributing all the seeds that I can get. On the contrary, I have large numbers of applicants, although I represent a city district. There are many people in Philadelphia who own farms just outside of the city; and certainly they ought not to be forgotten. I do not doubt the fact that Philadelphia, New York, and Boston, and other large cities, are in exactly the same condition. I have heard an estimate made that there were 20,000 people in the city of New York who own farms outside of the city.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I wish to ask the gentleman if the members representing the districts where the farms are located do not distribute the seed?

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection whatever to your having as many seed as you wish or can secure under the law; but I have a decided objection to your saying that we shall not have any.

Why, according to the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois, the seed are to be distributed according to the agricultural area of the respective districts. Now that is exactly the idea I wish to combat. I ask that the House shall be just in its distribution of the seeds and not leave us out without any, or fail to recoguize our right to them, notwithstanding our need.

Mr. HASELTINE. I am in favor of the present provision in the bill. I am in favor of allowing members who represent the people directly, and who are acquainted with their constituents much better than the Commissioner can be, to have a voice in the distribution of the seed among their constituents. We appropriated $80,000 for this purpose last year. Of that sum we are informed that about $41,000 was used for clerk hire, under the law allowing the Commissioner to distribute one-half of the seed. Now, I am fearful that if he has to distribute the other half, it will take the whole amount to pay for clerk hire. We would like to know what becomes of the seed which are supposed to be distributed to advance the agricultural interests of the country. As one member of the Committee on Agriculture, I believe that there was unanimous agreement upon that section as it stands. I hope it will be allowed to remain.

Mr. VALENTINE. The committee were unanimous on that section.

Mr. BLACK. I withdraw the formal amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. MONEY.]

Mr. VALENTINE. Let it be again reported.

The amendment was read.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. ATHERTON. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "therewith," in the one hundred and first line, insert:

"But provided the Commissioner of Agriculture shall exercise his discretion in selecting and crediting seeds, plants, and cuttings to members by giving to each, as near as may be, seeds, &c., of equal value, but so dividing them that each Senator, Representative, and Delegate shall receive those best fitted, in the opinion of the Commissioner, to the climate and locality he represents."

Mr. VALENTINE. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to line 93, if he will permit me. He will find that this provision is already covered now by the bill. It provides that these seed shall be distributed in localities adapted to their culture.

Mr. ATHERTON. Unless there is some such provision as this incorporated in the bill it seems to me that we will find ourselves, under the exact language of this provision, just as we are now; that is to say, we will find northern members getting cotton seeds and other seeds entirely useless to them. In other words, it is a mere waste of the appropriation.

Mr. VALENTINE. This has never been in the bill before, I will state to the gentleman from Ohio. It has only been put in this year.

Mr. ATHERTON. That is the only object I desire to accomplish, and if that is accomplished in the bill I am satisfied. I thought it unfortunate that those living in a northern climate should be charged with the distribution of cotton seeds which they have simply to hand over to other members, and at the same time they receive no greater proportion of other seeds than those members from the South receive.

Mr. VALENTINE. The committee have provided for that in the present bill.

Mr. ATHERTON. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. AIKEN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "supplied," in the ninety-sixth line, to the word "and," in the one hundred and fifth line, namely, these words:

"To Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, for distribution among their constituents, or shall, by their direction, be sent to their constituents; and the persons receiving such seeds shall inform the Department of the results of the experiments therewith: Provided, That all seeds, plants, and cuttings herein allotted to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution remaining uncalled for at the end of the fiscal year shall be distributed by the Commissioner of Agriculture."

And insert in lieu thereof:

"To the departments of agriculture of the respective States, for distribution among the farmers of the same."

Mr. VALENTINE. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. AIKEN. The only argument which has been urged against the distribution of the seeds by the Commissioner of Agriculture is that a large proportion of them do not reach their destination. I have obviated that in my amendment, by requiring the Commissioner to send the seeds to the departments of agriculture of the respective States, so that they may be distributed from that center to the farmers of each of the States.

Mr. HERBERT. Some of the States have not any department of agriculture.

Mr. AIKEN. Then I think if you will adopt my amendment you will soon find departments of agriculture established in those States. It is a reflection on any of the States that they have not an agricultural department. But if there are States which have no agricultural departments to which the seeds can be sent, there will be State agricultural societies or some committee or some organ recognized by the Legislature.

Mr. VALENTINE. I did not hear the amendment read at the time it was offered, on account of the confusion prevailing, but I reserved the point of order.

Mr. AIKEN. Let the amendment be again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. VALENTINE. I desire now to make the point of order against the amendment that it changes existing law. It makes provision for sending the seeds to parties that do not exist; for many of the States have no such departments.

Mr. AIKEN. I do not think there is any law existing as to the manner in which these seeds shall be distributed. We are enacting a law to-day; and on that account it seems to me the point of order would not hold. The present manner of distributing seeds is something that belongs to a law that expires on the 30th of June next; and if we were not to adopt some provision for the distribution in this law, the provision in the law now existing would not apply to this appropriation bill. I think, therefore, the point of order is not well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment, if adopted, would limit the discretion of the Commissioner, and would in that respect change existing law.

Mr. AIKEN. I submit if the bill passes as it is it limits the discretion of the Commissioner. It requires the Commissioner to distribute through a certain channel. My amendment does no more.

The CHAIRMAN. This question has been ruled on before. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. If there is no amendment pending I wish to offer one.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no amendment pending.

Mr. HOLMAN. The motion made to strike out the words "one-half," in the ninety-fifth line, and insert in lieu thereof "three-fourths" was defeated. I wish now to inquire whether it is not in order to move to strike out "one-half" and insert the words "two-thirds."

Mr. VALENTINE. I believe that is substantially the amendment which has been voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. It is a different amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move, then, to amend by striking out "one-half" and inserting "two-thirds."

I wish to say in behalf of that amendment, I think it is the true policy of the Government to act liberally to the Department of Agriculture, and I think in this bill reasonably fair appropriations have been made. For myself I should not object to an appropriation of even more than $80,000 for the purpose of purchasing seeds for distribution. It now and then occurs that a particular kind of seed goes into a given section where it is found to be very valuable and where it adds enormously to the local wealth. This has several times occurred, as is well known to all the members of the House. The effect of this distribution is to carry some seed into some sections of the country where it has not heretofore been known. But I think the members of the House, as a general rule, are better qualified to determine to what neighborhood the seeds should be sent than the Commissioner of Agriculture possibly can be. He has generally had in each county of each State a correspondent, and this correspondent generally, I think, has been a gentleman of cultivation and experience in agriculture, but he is not likely to be so well informed as to the particular reasons why seed should be sent as the member himself. I think our experience is that members of the House take a lively interest in bringing to the attention of their constituents the seeds which are furnished from the Agricultural Department, and I see no reason why the members of the House should not to a very considerable degree control the distribution of the seeds.

I think if you leave to the Commissioner one-third of the distribution, you enable him to supply all those gentlemen who are his correspondents. I think one-third is sufficient to be left at his disposal for that purpose, and that the other two-thirds should be distributed through members of the House and Senate.

One word more. I am speaking from a stand-point not common to the House, I believe, on this subject. I am speaking as a farmer, and there are comparatively few farmers here. I therefore feel the more hearty in speaking on this subject, inasmuch as I speak for the farmer and from the grange, as it were, as one familiar with the interests and wants of that great body of people whose industry is devoted to the production of our agricultural wealth.

Mr. VALENTINE. The usual diversity of opinion seems to prevail here to-day that always prevails when this subject is under consideration. One gentleman moves that we give all the seeds to the Commissioner of Agriculture, another that we take all or nearly all away from him. I think it safe to follow the rule that now prevails, and leave the matter as it has been for the last two or three years. I call for a vote on the amendment.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. HOLMAN; and upon a division there were—ayes 69, noes 44.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. VALENTINE called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

The amendment was accordingly agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina. I think the chief defect of this bill is that it does not appropriate a sufficient sum of money for the purchase and distribution of seeds.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no amendment pending.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina. I move to strike out of line 94 of the bill "$80,000" and insert "$100,000."

The question was taken upon the amendment; and upon a division there were—ayes 42, noes 62.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina, called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered, there being but 27 in the affirmative, not one-half of a quorum.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MONEY. I move to amend by striking out of line 94 "$80,000" and inserting "$125,000;" and I desire to say a few words on that amendment.

I do not believe that there is in the whole administration of this Government any equal sum of money so well expended as that which is expended for the purchase and distribution of seeds for experimental cultivation throughout the various sections of the country. And I would have the amount sufficiently large so that the Commissioner of Agriculture could send these seeds to every grange, to every agricultural association, to every practical farmer in the whole country, so that each farmer could have an opportunity himself to experiment on these things.

I think this House has no right to withhold its hand in this matter. We are here representing very large agricultural constituencies, constituencies which comprise two-thirds of all the working population of this country; yet they have received less at the hands of this Congress than any other portion of our people. Take out of calculation the expenditures by the Post-Office Department, and you will see that the people of this country are but beasts of burden to bear the load of government, to pay taxes to replenish our Treasury, to keep alive the manufactures of the country, its transportation companies, and its commercial companies.

I ask you now, in the name of the farmers of the country, to give the Commissioner of Agriculture an appropriation sufficient to enable him to furnish seeds to every farmer in every neighborhood of the country, and it will be for the benefit of the Government which they so largely support.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to say a word in opposition to the amendment offered by my friend from Mississippi, [Mr. MONEY.] In the bill we have an appropriation of $80,000 to provide seeds for experimental purposes. The gentleman from Mississippi proposes to add $45,000 to that sum, and suggests that it is in the interest of the farmers of the country and should be done for the benefit of the farmers.

Mr. Chairman, if I had the power to do it, in the interest of the farmers and for their benefit and their protection, I would strike out of this bill everything except such necessary seeds, plants, and cuttings as are essential for experiments. What sort of seeds do we now get to send to our constituents? The great bulk of them are common field seeds—field-corn, field-pease, field-beans, cabbage-seeds, beet-seeds, radish-seeds. And when you take into consideration the time and expense of obtaining these seeds and sending them to the people, the sum of money that is spent in the office here to prepare the seeds for sending, and the time spent in sending them out, it will be found that each paper of seed costs the tax-payer five times as much as it would cost him to go to a reliable seed store and buy the seeds for himself.

I do not think it is any benefit to a man to make him pay taxes five times in amount what the seeds would cost him at a reliable seed store in order to build up a sort of eleemosynary institution here in Washington at an enormous expense. I would give this bureau the duty to perform which it ought to perform, that of aiding the people by the collection and distribution of such novel and useful seeds as might benefit agriculture, such novel and useful plants and cuttings as might be desirable for experimental purposes. But when we make this Agricultural Department simply a competitor of the seed stores of the country in distributing the same sort of seeds at an enormous expense and far beyond their value we do not benefit the agricultural interest of the country. If I had known this question was to come up at this time I would have gone over this bill and added together the different items and estimated the value of the seeds to be sent out as I have done on former occasions, and I could have shown that I am not mistaken in saying that every paper of seed sent out from that Department costs five times more than it would cost to buy it at the seed stores. Therefore, I do not want to see this appropriation increased. If I could I would reduce it by stopping the sending out of ordinary seeds such as we find in seed stores, and prevent the Department from entering into competition with the seed merchants of the country.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. Although the Committee on Agriculture consented to the sum of $80,000 for this purpose as a compromise, I am glad, as a member of that committee, to see a disposition in this House to make an appropriation in this bill commensurate with the vast needs and great importance of the interest of agriculture—the great basis interest of the country. It is evidence of a growing appreciation of the just demands of that great industry which is the underlying source of our wonderful prosperity.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] has said that he would limit the distribution of plants and seeds to those which are rare and of great value. Mr. Chairman, it is impossible in many cases to determine in advance what seeds will be of special value. The distribution of Mediterranean wheat a few years ago through the Department of Agriculture has been the source of millions of dollars of profit to the agriculturists of this country. The distribution of sorghum seed by that Department has brought to the agriculture of this country a return greater than the whole amount which that Department has ever cost since its foundation. Yet it is only a few years since the distribution of sorghum was ridiculed.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. We on this side of the House desire greatly to hear the gentleman from Ohio and cannot do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. Yes, Mr. Chairman, this is not a political question; and many members of this House have not the same interest in agriculture that they would feel in a political question. But, as was well said by the gentleman from Mississippi, the people of this country have an interest in this question greater and higher than in most of our political discussions, and I am gratified to see a disposition in the House to make an appropriation for this great object commensurate with its interest and importance. Even $100,000, if appropriated for this purpose, would be but a fraction of a cent to each of the people of this country; and there are more than thirty million of your people engaged directly in this business of agriculture, besides all the rest dependent upon agricultural products for subsistence. It is our agricultural industry that has given us such a balance sheet as we now show the world, nine thousand millions, as the great aggregate of our agricultural products in this country during the last year. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that we shall make our appropriation, in some degree at least, commensurate with the needs of the country.

The committee was careful to keep the expenditure provided for by this bill down to the least amount that was really in the interest of a wise and real economy. Many items are much below the estimates, and the only item in which the matter of agricultural statistics is provided for. This is a matter of great interest and value to the agriculture of the country. It provides for a system of crop reports by which the producers of the country will be able at all times to know the state of the crops not only of this country but of the world. By this millions of dollars are saved to the real producers of the country. I believe every dollar appropriated by this bill will yield an abundant return by the aid and influence it brings to the various interests of agriculture.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, the remarks of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] if they apply to this clause of the bill, apply with equal force to the entire bill. If we are to have an Agricultural Department at all it is not for the purpose of ornamenting some square here in the city of Washington, not for the purpose of giving employment to a number of clerks in a magnificent building here, but it is to benefit the farmers of the country. If what the gentleman from Texas has said is true, then he has just grounds to introduce a resolution here calling for an investigation looking to the punishment of some of these officials who have not done their duty.

Mr. REAGAN. I stated nothing calling for any investigation.

Mr. WHITE. Then the gentleman certainly did not mean what he said.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman evidently does not know what I did say, or he would not say that.

Mr. WHITE. I have no desire to get into a colloquy with the gentleman from Texas; but when he says the Department sends out seeds that are not worth sending, that it sends out an inferior quality of seed, I understand him to mean what he says, and that he is making a charge against the Department——

Mr. REAGAN. I did not use either expression.

Mr. WHITE. The RECORD will show.

Mr. REAGAN. Very well.

Mr. WHITE. If the Department is sending out seeds of inferior quality, if it is failing to perform its duty, then we ought to put men in that Department who will perform their duty. I understand the vote a few moments ago to have been an indirect charge against this Department that it is making unfair discriminations. That may be true. The vote was to the effect that in the future we should reserve two-thirds of these cuttings and seeds in our hands to be distributed according to our own understanding of the needs of our constituents. Indirectly the insinuation is (it may be well founded) that the Agricultural Department has been showing favoritism—that it does not understand the wants of the people as we understand them.

Now, we have the Agricultural Department building; we have the clerks; we have the head of the Department; but we have no sufficient appropriation to comply with the demands of our constituents. Let us make the appropriation $125,000, as the gentleman fron Mississippi well suggests. Our constituents will stand by us. We appropriate tens of thousands, yes, millions, to ornament the city of Washington. We have our Horticultural Garden; we have our Agricultural Grounds beautifully decorated; but it is not for such objects that we are sent here; it is not for such objects that we propose to provide in this bill. We desire to supply a want on the part of our constituents for seeds, which in many cases they do not feel warranted in buying, to try the experiments necessary in order that the agricultural interest may make that progress which we desire to see made in all parts of this agricultural country.

Mr. VALENTINE. I move that the committee rise, for the purpose of limiting debate.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Iowa, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4466) making appropriations for the Agricultural Department of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. VALENTINE. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill; and, pending the motion, I move that all debate upon the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto be limited to one minute.

The motion to close debate was agreed to; and then the motion to go into committee.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Iowa, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee resumes the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill, and all debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto, by order of the House, has been closed in one minute.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. It only requires a part of the minute for me to remind the committee that an appropriation of $100,000 for this object is only one-fifth of a cent to each inhabitant of this country according to the enumeration by the last census.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. MONEY.]

Mr. HASELTINE. I wish to say I was in favor of a larger appropriation. We have the grounds, we have the buildings, we have the Commissioner with his large salary, we have a large number of clerks under him, and it appears to me the people of the country, the agriculturists who are to be benefited by the Department of Agriculture should have a larger appropriation for this purpose of the distribution of seeds, plants, and cuttings, by which they have heretofore reaped so much advantage.

Mr. LATHAM. I should like to remind the committee——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. LATHAM. I move to strike out the last word; and I would remind the committee that $80,000 was the appropriation last year for this purpose, while $40,000 was expended in the payment of clerks. They are provided for in this bill in another place, and this appropriation of $80,000 will all go for seeds.

Mr. VALENTINE. I must insist debate is out of order.

The question recurred on Mr. MONEY's amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 14, noes 27.

Mr. WHITE. No quorum has voted.

Mr. VALENTINE. Do not make that point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair appoints Mr. VALENTINE and Mr. MONEY as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 65, noes 71.

Mr. WHITE. No quorum.

Mr. MONEY. Let us have the yeas and nays on the amendment in the House.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. It has been lost.

Mr. VALENTINE. I cannot consent to a vote in the House.

Mr. WHITE. Then I insist no quorum has voted.

Mr. PAGE. They are not entitled to a vote in the House; the amendment has been defeated.

Mr. WHITE. We ask for a vote in the House. I should like to see some of these gentlemen put upon record.

The CHAIRMAN. The point has been made there is no quorum, and the tellers will resume their places.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 67, noes 82.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ATHERTON. I move again the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

And provided, however, That the Commissioner shall not distribute to any Senator, Representative, or Delegate seeds entirely unfit for the climate and locality he represents, but shall distribute the same so that each member may have seed of equal value as near as may be best adapted to the locality he represents.

Mr. VALENTINE. I do not see any objection to that.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

For experiments in connection with the culture and manufacture of tea, in the discretion of the Commissioner of Agriculture, $5,000.

Mr. JOYCE. I move the following amendment to that paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expense of machinery, apparatus, labor, &c., to continue experiments in the manufacture of sugar from sorghum and other sugar-producing plants, $25,000; to be made available immediately; and out of the above sum the Commissioner of Agriculture is hereby authorized to pay the chief chemist $1,000 as compensation for the next fiscal year for continuation of experiments in connection with the manufacture of sugar from beets and for the cultivation of beets for that purpose, $10,000.

Mr. PAGE. I shall have to demand a separate vote on each branch of that amendment.

Mr. VALENTINE. I hope not. I see no objection to this, as it is in precisely the language of the last appropriation bill. Nothing was submitted this year on this subject in the Book of Estimates, and therefore no action was taken on it by the committee.

Mr. JOYCE. It is the same provision as was included in the preceding agricultural appropriation bill.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXAMINATION OF WOOLS AND ANIMAL FIBERS.

To complete the work now in progress of testing the fineness, textile strength, and other peculiarities of wools and other animal fibers, and for the study of the physical properties of cotton fibers produced under different conditions of climate and culture, and for the preparation of reports thereon, which shall be available immediately, $10,000.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. Chairman, I shall move a pro forma amendment for the purpose of making a brief statement. Now, that paragraph furnishes no information of how that money is expended. In order that I might know what was done with it during this present fiscal year, and what is intended to be done with it during the next year, I prepared some interrogatories and addressed them to the Department of Agriculture. I am satisfied from the replies I have received it is all right and should be agreed to. For the information of members I ask the questions and replies be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

They are as follows:

Question. Was not the first appropriation under this head for a special purpose, and has not that purpose ended?

Answer. The original act providing for the examination of wools directed the testing by scientific examination the fineness, textile strength, and felting properties of the wools and other animal fibers exhibited at the international exhibition of sheep, wool, and wool products, held in Philadelphia in September, in 1880. The same act also provided for the expenditure of $4,000 by the Commissioner of Agriculture in visiting the exhibition, making a report thereon, collecting the material to be examined according to the above direction, and in making the required examination. This amount was largely consumed in the payment of the traveling and other expenses of the Commissioner and his assistants in visiting the exhibition and collecting data for the report and material for examination. Over five hundred samples of wool were secured, and each one was accompanied by a complete history of the animal from which it was taken.

Q. From what fund were the salaries paid to those who examined these wools?

A. No special appropriation was made for salaries to be paid for carrying out these special provisions of the act, or for the purchase of apparatus and material to be employed in the examination proposed, but the work was begun with the funds remaining in the balance unexpended after meeting the expenses just mentioned.

Q. What was known previously of the character of the work required under this appropriation?

A. The work required was almost entirely new to scientific investigation, and being altogether physical in character it was necessary to devise special apparatus to carry it on. Any one acquainted with mechanical work will readily appreciate the large amount of patient study and experiment this requires. Not only must all sources of error be eliminated, but the apparatus must be, as far as possible, automatic in its functions and rapid in its work, so as to remove to a maximum extent the need for human judgment in the determination of results, and, since large numbers of tests must be made, to reduce the time to be consumed to a minimum as well.

Q. What amount was asked for to continue these experiments?

A. We ask for $10,000, which we sincerely believe would be necessary to carry on these experiments to the close of the present fiscal year, and we received but $5,000, and of this amount $500 were set apart to pay for a special report on sheep husbandry, made by Dr. John L. Hayes, of Boston.

Q. Are you continuing your work?

A. The work has been vigorously pushed forward with the means at command. To carry it on with advantage the services of four persons were necessary, and this number has been employed during the present fiscal year; and they have been paid at the rate of $2,000 per annum for one, $1,200 per annum for two, and $900 for one. These salaries were all paid from the sum of $4,500 appropriated for the work, and it is easy to estimate how long it would last at these rates when expensive apparatus were bought from the same fund. This work requires a higher standard of knowledge and education than ordinary clerical work; and although we endeavored to make the money go as far as possible, two men were necessarily dismissed in January, and apparatus absolutely needed to complete the investigation has not been purchased from lack of funds. Had we received the $10,000 asked for our work would not have been crippled and better results would have been shown. As it is we have made one hundred thousand separate measurements of the fineness of wools, and ten thousand measurements of the tensile strength of the fibers.

Q. This work is entirely physical. Is it laborious?

A. The strain, both mental and physical, is so peculiar that no one can continue it through many hours consecutively without great fatigue, especially to the eyes. At first this was not recognized by the persons employed, and considerable suffering has been the consequence. If the ordinary clerical force of the Department could be utilized for the work the expense would be materially reduced. But it cannot. Skilled labor must be employed, which is expensive.

Q. Do you require a peculiar kind of apparatus or instruments?

A. Special apparatus is necessary. Application was made to the American Watch Tool Company, at Waltham, Massachusetts, for the construction of a dynamometer for testing single wool fibers, and they would set no price upon so delicate an instrument, nor would they say that they could make it. They offered us one of their workmen at $5 per day, but they would not agree to make it for any fixed price. This shows how difficult it is to secure the instruments needed for such an investigation.

Q. Have you published any of the results of your labors?

A. Results have been tabulated, and are ready for publication; but it has been considered wiser to withhold them until the investigation is completed. Twenty-five thousand separate mathematical calculations have been necessary to reduce these results to standards and terms intelligible to breeders and manufacturers.

Q. Have you completed any of your investigations?

A. The measurement of fineness is nearly completed. The measurement of tensile strength has but fairly begun. More than ten thousand tests of the latter have been made, but ten times that number will be necessary to make the investigation satisfactory. We have but recently secured the instrument for testing the felting properties of these fibers, and now we hope to push forward rapidly this most difficult part of the work.

Q. Will any of your investigations prove valuable to farmers who grow sheep?

A. The results will show conclusively how different qualities of wools may be produced, and what are the conditions causing the production of bad qualities. To examine satisfactorily the grades of wools sold in our largest wool markets would continue the work through the coming year.

Q. Do you intend to confine your examinations to wool?

A. It is proposed to examine cotton and other vegetable fibers. We propose to study, first, the physical properties of various cottons produced under known conditions of seed, soil, climate, and culture, and, secondly, the physical properties of the cottons of the different commercial grades. To conclusively and ultimately determine the agricultural value of the seed and the commercial and industrial value of the fiber, at least three hundred thousand separate tests will have to be made. These values have heretofore been fixed by empirical rules, but the results obtained by these investigations will determine these values upon fixed and rational bases.

Q. In what way will the results obtained in these investigations practically benefit the farmer; and will they benefit also the manufacturer?

A. We anticipate that the producer will be able to formulate reliable rules to guide him in the selection of seeds for cultivation and in the methods of culture by which his crop should be treated to produce any desired quality. On the other hand, they will to the same extent enable the manufacturer to better select the qualities of staple required for any desired fabric. Already some preliminary examinations of cottons have been made, principally with a view to the selection of seed for distribution from the Department, and even the limited results that have thus far been obtained in measurement of length, strength, and fineness, and in the study of the form, structure, and color of the fiber, amply confirm these expectations. Some of the results lead to conclusions that are diametrically opposed to many of the prevailing views now held by leading authorities relative to the fiber, and these conclusions are important and should be confirmed by further investigation.

Q. Do you expect to make a report soon?

A. All these results will be presented in a preliminary report on the subject now being prepared and soon to be submitted.

Q. Has Congress ever made similar appropriations for other industries?

A. Other industries have been encouraged in a similar manner from time to time. It is notorious, I think, that from $70,000 to $100,000 have been repeatedly appropriated for the scientific study of iron and steel. And even in this Congress, if I mistake not, $50,000 is asked for, to test the physical properties of steel, and this is as it should be, for the knowledge obtained is necessary to the advancement of the great interests involved. This scientific knowledge increases our national wealth by improving the character and value of our productions without increasing the labor to obtain them.

Q. You then are simply claiming equality of recognition for the farmer and his interests, are you?

A. What we contend for is this: that these great agricultural productions whose value depends entirely upon their physical properties should receive the same encouragement from scientific investigation that the products of the mines and furnaces have, so that the industries dependent upon them may receive the same measure of advancement. Investigations in these branches have never received heretofore any substantial support from the Government, and hence the work that we are doing has never been done upon cotton or wool.

Q. What appropriation do you ask for?

A. We asked for $20,000 to complete the investigation of wools, and to study the physical property of cottons. The small sum heretofore appropriated is about exhausted, and the work for which this appropriation is asked will cover a period of about fifteen months. It is at this time impossible to furnish complete details of all the special needs that will arise. They grow as the work progresses, and many of them cannot be foretold. But the reasons already presented must be sufficient to show the advantages of the work, while others may readily be furnished from the enthusiasm expressed by practical men in their examination of the results obtained.

The Clerk read as follows:

RECLAMATION OF ARID AND WASTE LANDS.

For the reclamation of arid and waste lands lying in certain Western States and Territories, $20,000, to be immediately available: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended in experiments upon the lands of individuals or corporations, but only upon the lands belonging to the United States: Provided also, That a sum not to exceed $1,000 may be used by the Commissioner of Agriculture for payment of expenses already incurred.

Mr. WHITE. I move to strike out that section in regard to the reclamation of arid and waste lands.

Mr. VALENTINE. I would like to hear some reason for the motion.

Mr. WHITE. I should like to hear some reason for retaining it.

Mr. PAGE. It is one of the most important sections of the bill.

Mr. WHITE. I do not see any good reason for it. I admit that there is good reason why we should appropriate $10,000 for sorghum; why we should have appropriated $5,000, as we did a few moments ago, for the culture of tea, and $10,000 for the culture of beet sugar. We have a great deal of sugar to buy, as this country uses a vast quantity of it, and we have also to buy a great many barrels of molasses, as we use a great deal of it. I believe in cultivating such articles here if possible, instead of bringing them from foreign countries; but I do not understand the object for wanting to spend $20,000 to experiment with arid and waste lands in the western country when there is already in the State of Tennessee and in the State of Kentucky thousands and tens of thousands of acres of land covered with fine timber and underlaid with coal, iron, and salt which the immigrants have not yet discovered. It will be ample time twenty years hence to appropriate money for the reclamation of waste and arid lands. It is an appropriation entirely uncalled for. People living out there may not like the country, that is true. It seems that there are a great many people in California who do not like the heathen, as I infer from legislation that is going on in this Capitol upon the subject.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, in a like appropriation bill last year a provision was made, I believe, appropriating $20,000 for the purpose of sinking artesian wells——

Mr. WHITE. I will gladly yield the floor to the gentleman from Texas for a question.

Mr. REAGAN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I thought he had concluded his remarks.

Mr. WHITE. I have not yet concluded. I simply rose, Mr. Chairman, to ask that some explanation should be given by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture having charge of this bill as to the necessity for this item. Instead of answering he has undertaken to laugh it down. If any gentleman will explain it to me I shall be very glad to listen. I have already said that I see no objection to appropriating as we have done $10,000 for experiments with sorghum. That was done without objection. Ten thousand dollars, I believe, appropriated for beet sugar without objection, and without our hearing it even; and $5,000 for the cultivation of tea. Now we are told here that $20,000 is required by way of experiment for the reclamation of arid and waste lands, when we have thousands upon thousands of acres that can be had for from $1.25 to $1.50, and from that on to two and three dollars an acre, lands already adapted to cultivation and well supplied with mineral wealth, such as coal, iron, &c.

Mr. VALENTINE. Are they agricultural lands?

Mr. WHITE. They are good for grazing purposes. I suppose the gentleman now feels the necessity for giving some explanation of this provision, and therefore I will yield the floor, as I would like to know the reason for it.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, we passed an appropriation last year, as I have stated, for the sinking of artesian wells in this western country. It is altogether proper that the gentleman should inquire why this appropriation is made.

It is well known that we have vast arid plains in our western country, containing many millions of acres of lands heretofore regarded as practically unproductive; but in recent years some of these lands have been irrigated and settled upon and found to be highly productive. These are mostly settled by stock-men, raising cattle and sheep. This land in many places is not supplied with surface water, springs, and running streams. The lands cannot be brought into production without irrigation, but it has been ascertained that it can be fructified by the use of water.

The object here was to enable the Government to determine whether in these vast plains water can be obtained by boring these artesian wells. If these experiments prove successful, within the limits of a reasonable expense, no one can well calculate the value of the experiment, nor can any one estimate the value which will be added to that vast domain of the Government. In the judgment of the House last year it was deemed advisable to make this experiment by sinking two artesian wells, and we may well appropriate such a small sum of money when the results likely to follow are so promising. I hope the motion to strike out will not be adopted.

The motion was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

FORESTRY.

For the purpose of enabling the Commissioner of Agriculture to continue an investigation and report upon the subject of forestry, $5,000.

Mr. DUNNELL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "five," in line 195, and insert the word "seven;" so that it will read: "For the purpose of enabling the Commissioner of Agriculture to continue an investigation and report upon the subject of forestry, $7,000."

Mr. DUNNELL. The estimate of the Agricultural Department was for $8,000; my amendment calls for $7,000. The Committee on Agriculture has seen fit to report $5,000. I think it was in the Forty-fourth Congress that an amendment was on my motion made to an appropriation bill that provided for the payment of a commissioner to investigate the question of timber, its production, consumption, and the amount exported. I will not occupy the time of the committee to have that amendment read. Other amendments to appropriation bills were from time to time incorporated, until finally the provision has become permanently fixed in the law, so that there is attached to the Department of Agriculture a bureau of forestry.

I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that the census reports taken in 1880 and now being prepared, will disclose some very interesting facts concerning the quantity of growing timber in the country, and there are sections in the country that have long been denominated pine-growing sections where it now becomes evident the supply will be entirely exhausted within the next ten, twelve, or fourteen years. The census reports will suggest various matters to be investigated by the Department.

Under the original and first amendment a distinguished citizen of New York, Dr. F. B. Hough, was appointed by the Commissioner of Agriculture, at that time Mr. Watts, of Pennsylvania, who prepared a report. That report was printed in quite large numbers, so that each member had thirty, or forty, or fifty copies. That report attracted the attention not only of the agricultural and the lumber-producing sections of this country but the attention of other countries. It was called for in all the countries of Europe, and is now in all the libraries and schools of forestry in Switzerland, Italy, Germany, and throughout the continent. This report not only did much to dignify the Agricultural Department, but it reflected honor and credit on the country. The next report was of a statistical nature, and was consequently less attractive, and a few copies only of it were printed. A third report is now in the hands of the Commissioner of Agriculture ready to be submitted to Congress. And I respectfully suggest, Mr. Chairman, that there ought not to be just now a reduction in the amount appropriated for this very interesting class of investigation provided for in this bill. The time is not far off when the question of lumber supply will become a practical question, affecting very many of the material interests of the country.

A MEMBER. Why do you not make the amount $8,000?

Mr. DUNNELL. I thought I would compromise on $7,000. [Here the hammer fell.] I ask unanimous consent to print some matter in the RECORD with respect to this subject of forestry.

There was no objection. [See Appendix.]

The question being taken on Mr. DUNNELL's amendment, there were—ayes 75, noes 18.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was adopted.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. VALENTINE. I move that the committee rise and report the bill back with the amendments.

Mr. BRUMM. Before that motion is put I should like to submit an amendment, or rather a modification of an amendment already adopted. I offer this modification with the consent of the mover of the amendment.

Mr. VALENTINE. It is too late. I cannot consent to that.

Mr. BRUMM. The amendment as adopted is entirely inadequate for the purpose intended by the mover. I ask permission to read this modification of it.

Mr. VALENTINE. I cannot agree to that. It is too late.

Mr. BRUMM. I ask leave to have the amendment printed.

There was no objection.

The amendment which Mr. BRUMM desired to offer is as follows:

Amend by inserting, in the eighty-sixth line, after the word available:

"Said reports shall give a full statement monthly showing the fluctuations and discriminations in the freight charges of the principal agricultural products upon the main lines of railroads and river routes to the principal markets in the United States."

EULOGIES UPON THE LATE M. P. O'CONNOR.

Mr. EVINS. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole shall now take up the joint resolution for printing the eulogies on my late colleague, Mr. O'Connor. The joint resolution was referred to the Committee of the Whole this morning.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was read, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 140) to print certain eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Michael P. O'Connor.

Resolved, &c., That there be printed of the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Michael P. O'Connor, a member-elect to the Forty-seventh Congress from the State of South Carolina, 12,000 copies, of which 3,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 9,000 for the use of the House of Representatives; and the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to have printed a portrait of the said Michael P. O'Connor to accompany said eulogies; and for the purpose of engraving and printing said portrait the sum of $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. EVINS. I move that the joint resolution be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VALENTINE. I renew my motion that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Iowa, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the joint resolution (H. R. No. 140) to print certain eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Michael P. O'Connor, and had directed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that it do pass. He further reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4466) making appropriations for the Agricultural Department of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

EULOGIES UPON THE LATE M. P. O'CONNOR.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 140) to print certain eulogies delivered in Congress on the late Michael P. O'Connor, reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with a favorable recommendation.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EVINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resotion was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The bill (H. R. No. 4466) making appropriations for the Agricultural Department of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, has been reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with sundry amendments. The question is on the amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection to voting on these amendments in gross?

There was no objection; and, the question being taken on the amendments, they were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill. Under the rule, this being a general appropriation bill, the question will be taken by yeas and nays.

Mr. VALENTINE. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the call of the yeas and nays.

Objection was made.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 190, nay 1, not voting 101; as follows:

Mr. MCLANE with Mr. URNER.

Mr. HARMER with Mr. ELLIS.

Mr. DE MOTTE with Mr. WELLBORN.

Mr. HOUK. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. WHITTHORNE, but believing that he would have voted for this bill if present, I have voted for it.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. I move that the House now adjourn.

Pending the motion to adjourn,

THEODORE VOCKEY.

Mr. KASSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5015) for the relief of Theodore Vockey; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DAVID J. GARRETT.

Mr. KASSON also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5016) for the relief of David J. Garrett; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM O. MADISON.

Mr. KASSON also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5017) for the relief of William O. Madison; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ELIZABETH F. RICE.

Mr. KASSON also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5018) granting a pension to Elizabeth F. Rice; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

NEW LONDON NAVY-YARD.

Mr. WAIT, by unanimous consent, presented the following, which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

GENERAL ASSEMBLY,
January Session, A. D. 1882.

Senate joint resolution No. 57, concerning the navy-yard on the Thames.

Whereas the State of Connecticut, at the instance of the Congress of the United States, in the year 1868, presented by deed of gift to the Federal Government eighty-three acres of land with one mile of available water front on the river Thames, to be held by the United States in trust for naval purposes; and

Whereas this site has been recommended and approved as possessing superior advantages for a great navy-yard by a board of competent officers selected by the Secretary of the Navy, by the Naval Committee of the House of Representatives, by a large number of distinguished naval officers, and finally by the Navy Department itself: Therefore,

Resolved by the Assembly, That the site upon the river Thames was presented to the United States in view of the great advantages which would result to the United States and incidentally to this State by the establishment of a navy-yard thereat upon a scale commensurate with its superior advantages and the wants of the country.

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives from this State are requested to urge upon Congress and the naval authorities the duty and propriety of making such necessary appropriations as will utilize the site for the purposes for which it was originally donated.

Resolved, That the General Assembly deems this subject of such importance to this State and to the General Government that his excellency the governor is hereby authorized and requested to appoint a commission on the part of the State to present the views of the State to the authorities at Washington; and a sum not exceeding $1,000 is hereby appropriated, to be expended under the authority of such commission for the purposes of this resolution; and that his excellency the governor be requested to cause to be sent to each Senator and Representative from this State at Washington a copy of these resolutions.

House of representatives passed February 22, 1882.
Senate concurred February 23, 1882.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT, ss:
Office of Secretary of State:

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of record in this office.
In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said State, at Hartford, this 1st day of March, A. D. 1882.
[SEAL.] CHARLES E. SEARLE,
Secretary of State.

OFFICIAL RECORDS OF THE REBELLION.

Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Printing, submitted a report in writing upon the joint resolution (H. R. No. 150) concerning the publication and distribution of the official records of the rebellion; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted.

SARAH WALLACE.

Mr. BREWER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5019) granting a pension to Sarah Wallace; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF NAVIGATION OF MISSOURI RIVER.

Mr. HEPBURN, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, asking Congress to aid by an appropriation of money the navigation of the Missouri River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SETTLERS ON DES MOINES RIVER.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask consent also to present at this time a memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, asking Congress to pass an act giving to certain settlers along the Des Moines River in that State the right to have their claims to certain lands in Iowa determined in the Federal courts; and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Several resolutions of a similar character have gone to the Committee on the Judiciary, and I move that this be referred to that committee.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection it will be so referred.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask that the last resolution which I presented be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I object.

Mr. DUNNELL. I do not think the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] understood that the resolution which he last presented was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HEPBURN. The subject is now pending before the Committee on the Public Lands, and they have under consideration a bill for this purpose.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. That very memorial has been presented here before, and been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and is now before that committee. The gentleman has offered it again——

Mr. HEPBURN. No, sir; I have not offered it again. I think it should go to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was at first of the opinion that it should go to the Committee on the Public Lands, but on the suggestion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] that the subject was now before the Committee on the Judiciary the Chair was willing that the reference should be made to that committee.

Mr. HEPBURN. The Chair was under a misapprehension. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. On that motion I wish to be heard. Mr. Chairman, this whole subject was before the Forty-sixth Congress. In the Senate of the United States it was referred to the Judiciary Committee and reported against unanimously. There is nothing in it but a simple question of law.

The SPEAKER. The motion to refer is not debatable. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa to refer this resolution of the Legislature of the State of Iowa to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I rise to a point of order. My motion to refer to the Judiciary Committee has priority. It was first made, and is first in order.

The SPEAKER. In the first place, the Chair stated that this resolution would go to the Committee on the Public Lands, but at the suggestion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] who presented the resolution moves that the reference be changed to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move as an amendment that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to amend the motion of the gentleman from Iowa so as to refer this resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. VAN VOORHIS, there were—ayes 1, noes 19.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. No quorum.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. There is more than half a million dollars pending on this thing; and I propose to have it go, if I can, to the right committee.

Mr. HEPBURN. I withdraw the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is withdrawn.

RECORD OF A VOTE.

Mr. WHEELER. If there be no objection I would like to have my vote recorded in favor of the passage of the agricultural appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The rule prohibits consent.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 130) for the relief of Paulina Jones, widow of Alexander Jones, deceased, late of Company E, Second North Carolina Infantry;

An act (S. No. 143) for the relief of Charles Collins;

An act (S. No. 242) for the relief of S. Rosenfeld & Co.;

An act (S. No. 266) for the relief of George W. Wicks & Co., of Louisville, Kentucky;

An act (S. No. 271) for the relief of Frank D. Yates, and others;

An act (S. No. 387) directing the Secretary of War to pay over to the Society of the Army of the Cumberland $7,500, to aid in the erection of a statue or monument to General James A. Garfield;

An act (S. No. 491) for the relief of Henry P. Rolfe;

An act (S. No. 494) directing the issue of a duplicate check to William J. Anthony, a pensioner of the United States;

An act (S. No. 788) granting a pension to Olive Stephenson; and

An act (S. No. 1092) authorizing and directing the purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the public use, of the property known as the Freedman's Bank, and the real estate and parcels of ground adjacent thereto, belonging to the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and located on Pennsylvania avenue between Fifteenth and Fifteenth-and-a-half streets, Washington, District of Columbia.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. MURCH, by unanimous consent, obtained leave for withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of C. C. Roberts.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ELLIS, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for ten days from Saturday next, on account of important business.

METRIC SYSTEM.

Mr. CONVERSE. I have in my hand a memorial in opposition to the French metric system, praying that it shall not be made legal in any Government transactions. This memorial is signed by Mr. George T. Chapman, a member of the Ohio Senate, and 80 others, members of the Legislature and officers of the State of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent that the body of the petition, without the signatures, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD. It is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives
of the United States in Congress assembled:

The undersigned, members of the International Institute for Preserving and Perfecting Weights and Measures, and others, citizens of the United States, beg leave respectfully to represent:

That Congress in 1866 without, it is believed, any public expression or demand for such a law, passed an act permitting the use, in ordinary business transactions, of a system of weights and measures, commonly called the French metric system.

That for many years, originally under the direction of an engineer of foreign birth and education, the United States Coast and Geodetic Surveys have been made after the French system—"the meter being used as the unit of measure"—the charts, maps, and records being figured in both the French and United States systems.

That the surveys of our northern lakes, rivers, and harbors, under the direction of the War Department, have also been conducted in a similar manner.

That by the use of said foreign system of measures the labors of the officers, engineers, and mathematicians of those bureaus have been largely increased as well as complicated by the necessity of making all calculations by two separate and nonconcordant systems of measurement, whereby the liability to error is largely increased, and the maps, charts, and records of both these Departments confused by two sets of scales and figures; and that such evils will be constantly augmented so long as the use of two conflicting systems is permitted.

That it is currently reported that the Medical Purveyor of the Navy is about to or has directed the medical staff of the Navy that, after a certain date, all the medicines and supplies of that Department shall be dispensed in terms of the French metric system, thereby entailing a heavy expense on the Government for an entire new outfit of scales, weights, and measures; that the use of such adverse system must imperil the lives of the officers and men in that arm of the service is clearly shown and proven by the late report of the Surgeon-General of the Army to Congress, in which he says: "The gravest inconvenience would immediately result from the attempt to render obligatory upon Government officers the use of a system of weights and measures which are so entirely different from those which have heretofore been and would then continue to be in general use among the people. * * * The change, therefore, would be fraught with the most unfortunate consequences. * * * Its enforced introduction would be a great public wrong."

That owing to the impossibility of transposing the English measures into those of France and vice versa the French into English without a string of interminable fractions, the proposed change of systems bears no possible relation to any advantages to be derived therefrom, while it is utterly incompatible for the Government to introduce or to use a system of weights and measures which it will be impossible for the people ever to adopt.

In view of these facts the undersigned, your petitioners, pray that your honorable bodies will take the necessary measures to cause our coast, lake, harbor, and geodetic surveys to be made, mapped, and recorded in only one system of measures, and that the one known and used by the people of the United States.

We also pray that Congress will direct that hereafter no weights or measures other than the Anglo-Saxon—as modified and defined by the United States statutes—shall be used in any branch of the public service whatever until otherwise ordered by act of Congress.

In fixing the values of metals we desire to strongly protest against the use of any other than Anglo-Saxon terms; and we especially object to the use of the word gramme instead of our own term, grain.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

SETTLERS ON DES MOINES RIVER.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I understood the Speaker to say that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] withdrew the motion to refer his resolution. Now the gentleman claims that he has withdrawn the resolution. To that I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's objection comes very late.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. The resolution had been referred, I understand.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is withdrawn.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. But I object to that. The resolution had been received and referred, and the gentleman made a motion to change the reference. He cannot withdraw the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he has done so.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have it in my pocket. [Laughter.]

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Then there is some sort of parliamentary legerdemain about it that I do not understand.

The SPEAKER. That may be.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio, that the House adjourn, it was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 10, 1882.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

On motion of Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourn to-day, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 4466) making appropriations for the Agricultural Department of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 140) to print certain eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Michael P. O'Connor.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of January 9, 1882, information as to the additional works necessary at the Falls of the Ohio River to complete the improvements thereof; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports from Captain A. N. Damrell, Corps of Engineers, of examinations and surveys made in compliance with the requirements in the river and harbor act of March 3, 1881, at certain localities in the States of Florida and Mississippi; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports from the United States engineer officers showing the maintenance of the channel at South Pass, Mississippi River, during the four quarters ending February 13, 1882; which was referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and Tributaries, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF SAVANNAH HARBOR.

Mr. BROWN. I present a petition of a number of the leading bankers, merchants, and other prominent citizens of the city of Atlanta, Georgia, praying that an adequate appropriation be made for the improvement of the harbor of Savannah. I ask the indulgence of the Senate while I submit a few remarks in connection with the petition.

A few days since I presented the petition of William M. Wadley, president of the Central Railroad and Banking Company of Georgia, and a number of the prominent citizens of the city of Savannah, asking for the appropriation that is asked for in this instance by the prominent citizens of the city of Atlanta.

Savannah, as is well known, I suppose to all Senators, is the second cotton port in the Union. There is a vast amount of naval stores, rice, hides, wool, and other productions, in addition to the cotton that passes out of the country through the port of Savannah. It is not only a very important port to the South, but also important to the West.

Our railroad system is so constructed through the South that there are several prominent lines of railroad all centering toward the port of Savannah. First, the Central Railroad system of that State embraces some six or seven hundred miles of road under one control, and, taking it in connection with its control of the Georgia road, more than that. That is all worked in connection with the exportation of productions at Savannah. The Louisville and Nashville system, which is very prominent and controls probably some two thousand miles of road, or more, works in harmony with the Central. That combination of roads naturally looks to Savannah as an outlet for a great deal of the produce that is shipped over its lines. There is then the line by way of the Georgia and Central, through Atlanta over the State Road, as it is called, by the Nashville, Chattanooga and Saint Louis, also connecting with the Louisville and Nashville Road to the western cities. There are the same connections up to Chattanooga and then connecting with the Cincinnati Southern, all pointing to the same object. There is also the line from Chattanooga to Memphis, Tennessee, connecting the Mississippi River with the same lines of road. In addition to that, there is what is called the Cole-Seney Syndicate, which now controls over two thousand miles of road, including its connection with the roads of what is called the Norfolk and Western. That is building two additional links, one from Rome, Georgia, to Atlanta, and the other from Atlanta to Macon, which will soon be completed, and gives them a direct connection both with Savannah and Brunswick, Georgia. All of these connections by rail point to the port of Savannah as an outlet. Hence it is that there is such a large collection of the cotton of the South, running up to seven or eight hundred thousand bales a year, and going out through the port of Savannah.

This presents the Southern view of the subject, but the great Western States are almost as much interested in that port as we are of the South. During several months of winter, when the canals are frozen over, the Western States are dependent, as matters now stand, almost exclusively upon the three great trunk lines for the transportation of all the productions of the West that seek an outlet through the eastern cities; and many a time it happens that those three trunk lines are not able to transport the productions anything like as fast as it is desired by shippers that they should be transported.

These railroad connections which I have just mentioned form another grand outlet for the western productions and for goods going from New York to the West through the port of Savannah, either to foreign ports or to New York, as near from the West as the trunk lines are to New York from the West. When I say "as near" I mean as near, calculating it as we calculate on transportation lines, connecting land and water lines together. In other words, count your miles of railroad, and then count on the ocean (where the road is built by nature and you only have to put on the rolling stock, so to speak, or the steamers) four miles of ocean for one of rail, and you have from the city of Memphis, from the city of Saint Louis, from the city of Louisville, and from the city of Cincinnati a line to New York through Savannah as near and for some one or two of the cities mentioned nearer than the trunk lines I have mentioned by which the productions of the West are usually shipped to New York. Hence the opening of the harbor of Savannah, so as to make the channel deep enough that ships of large size can go in and out, opens for the West another great competing line equal to either of the three great trunk lines for the exportation of the commerce of the West not only to foreign ports but directly through New York. This is a very great matter to the West as well as to the South.

What would it cost to do it? The port of Savannah is a peculiar one. The water on the bar is twenty-six feet in depth at high tide. It needs no improvement. There are twenty miles of river, however, between the bar and the city. At the close of the war they had all been obstructed by timber and sail vessels sunk in it so as to keep out the gunboats. That obstruction had to be removed. After it was removed and a system of improvement of the harbor had been commenced, it was found that there were only about thirteen or fourteen feet of water there. The engineers adopted a system of improvement of the channel, which with the meager appropriations heretofore made has increased the depth to from eighteen to nineteen feet at high tide.

In the river and harbor act of last year the Engineer Corps was instructed to make a further survey with a view to deepening the channel to twenty-two feet, which would let in large vessels. That survey has been made with great care, and the report is that the channel for the twenty miles from the city of Savannah down to the bar, which bar is deep enough, can be made twenty-two feet deep for $700,000; and the engineers' report earnestly urges that $350,000 of that amount be appropriated this year for the opening of that important harbor to the teeming productions which would pass out through it.

This improvement involves consequences so great, both to the South and the West, that it seems to me I am justified in taking the time of the Senate to call the attention of Senators to the facts I have just stated, in connection with the presentation of the petition of the citizens of Atlanta, and in connection with the one presented a few days since from the citizens of Savannah. I beg especially that the Committee on Commerce will take this matter under their serious consideration. I desire this morning, when we reach that order of business, to introduce a bill appropriating the amount asked for this year for the improvement of the harbor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. JONAS presented the petition of George W. Morse, praying that he be compensated for benefits derived by the Government from the use of his breech-loading fire-arms and ammunition; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. FERRY presented a petition of Norton Fitch and other citizens of Lisbon, Michigan, praying for legislation regulating charges for railroad transportation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HALE presented the petition of N. B. Nutt and other citizens of Maine, praying for an appropriation to be used in removing a ledge in Eastport Harbor in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MORRILL presented two memorials of importers, dealers, and brokers in tea and coffee of the city of New York, remonstrating against the removal of the differential duty on tea and coffee between the United States and the possessions of Holland; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have had under consideration the bill (S. No. 1424) to authorize the Postmaster-General to supply fourth-class post-offices with post-marking and other necessary implements, and report an amendment to the Post-Office appropriation bill and recommend that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be indefinitely postponed, and the amendment will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

Mr. DAWES. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3208) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, to report it without amendment. As there is no amendment there is no occasion to reprint the bill; and I shall at an early day next week call it up for consideration.

NICARAGUAN CLAIMS CONVENTION.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported the following concurrent resolution; which was read:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the President be requested to bring to the attention of the Government of Nicaragua the necessity of arranging by a convention for the final settlement of all unadjusted claims existing between the Government of the United States and the Government of Nicaragua, and claims of citizens of the United States against the Government of Nicaragua.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution. It will only take a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is before the Senate, if there be no objection.

Mr. MORRILL. I had supposed that nearly all the former unadjusted claims had been settled with that government. I desire to know from the Senator from Alabama what are the facts in relation to the amount of existing claims which are yet unsettled between the two countries?

Mr. MORGAN. They range somewhere between five and six million dollars in favor of citizens of the United States. There are also some counter claims in favor of citizens of Nicaragua, which of course the resolution does not take into consideration. The object is to bring the fact to the attention of the Nicaraguan Government that these claims exist.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE MISSISSIPPI OVERFLOW.

Mr. VEST asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 47) authorizing the Secretary of War to use Government vessels for the transportation and distribution of rations furnished by the United States to the sufferers by the Mississippi overflow; which was read the first time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the Secretary of War be directed to use the steamers and other boats and vessels belonging to the Government upon the Mississippi River and its tributaries, or so many thereof as may be necessary, in the transportation and distribution of the rations and supplies furnished by the United States, or individuals, to the sufferers by the recent overflow of said rivers, the expense of manning, equipping, and navigating such steamers and boats to be defrayed out of the funds belonging to the Engineer Corps.

Mr. VEST. I ask for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should be glad to have the Senator explain the reason why he provides that the expense of transportation shall be paid from the appropriations for the Engineer Corps. Has there been consultation upon that point?

Mr. VEST. I was about proceeding to explain it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the joint resolution be read again.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length.

Mr. VEST. I will state that day before yesterday the Secretary of War called the attention of my colleague [Mr. COCKRELL] and myself to the fact that while Congress had appropriated $100,000 for the purchase of rations for the sufferers by the overflow of the Mississippi and its tributaries, $25,000, or one-fourth of the whole amount, would be required for the transportation of supplies, leaving the amount for the actual purchase of provisions at $75,000. My colleague and myself immediately telegraphed to the president of the Merchants' Exchange at Saint Louis, Mr. Slayback, to know if the lines of steamers on the Mississippi River would not transport these supplies free of charge. We received a dispatch from him yesterday stating that the boat-owners declined to carry the freights except at cost rates; that they would carry free the agents of the Government but not the supplies.

This morning Mr. Holliday, who is at the head of the largest transporting house at the West, at Cairo, called upon me with the suggestion that there were five Government boats and some fifty-odd launches and yawls now at Mound City and Cairo unemployed, and which could not be employed on account of the high state of the water in the Mississippi River and its tributaries in work upon rivers and harbors.

I called upon Secretary Lincoln, and drew his attention to the fact that the necessity was immediate, and that these boats might be used. The difficulty is that the supplies are landed by steamers on high points on the bank of the Mississippi River, but cannot be transported to the interior, to the people who are now upon the ridges. Upon one ridge in Southeast Missouri there are 2,500 people to-day subsisting upon such supplies as may be carried to them in dug-outs, flat-bottomed scows, and the improvised boats which the people in the vicinity can bring into employment. When I called upon Mr. Lincoln he suggested that the only difficulty was that these boats are under the control of the Engineer Department; that Congress had made a specific appropriation or appropriations for the Engineer Corps, and that a resolution of Congress would be necessary in order to empower him to use these vessels at once.

I ask the Chief Clerk to read the communication which the Secretary of War has been kind enough to send to me. I presume there can be no doubt about the necessity for this action.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri give way?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not rise to make any opposition to the joint resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I reserve the right to object to its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana wish to make his remarks before the letter is read?

Mr. HARRISON. No, sir; I would be glad to have the letter read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, March 10, 1882.

SIR: Referring to your verbal inquiries this morning, I have to advise you that the Government owns on the Mississippi River a number of steamboats and some launches and accompanying row-boats of various sizes, which could be used for the purpose of assisting in the distribution of subsistence stores, except for the fact that their officers and crews are paid out of river and harbor appropriations for specific works, and without authority from Congress I would not feel authorized to employ these crews on any work not contemplated by the special appropriations out of which they are paid.

The Mississippi River commission also has several boats engaged in the performance of the work for which appropriations have been made, to be expended by it. There is no other objection than that which I have mentioned to the use of these boats to assist in distributing subsistence stores, as they are not now actually being used in the river and harbor works on account of the high stage of water on the Mississippi River.

Very respectfully, yours,

ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

Hon. G. G. VEST, U. S. Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. I only rose to correct what I thought was a misconception on the part of the Senator from Missouri as to the probable cost of the transportation of these supplies. The Commissary-General of the Army, as I am informed, at first provisionally set apart $25,000 against the expense of the transportation of the supplies, of course being entirely without information as to the actual cost of distribution. I since learn, however, that the cost of forwarding the supplies to the places where they have been deposited for distribution has been only a little over a thousand dollars; so that the first expectation of the Commissary-General and the Secretary of War as to the probable cost of transportation to the general points of distribution was greatly an overestimate.

Mr. VEST. I will state to the Senator from Indiana that I had a conference this morning with the Commissary-General, the Secretary of War, and the Chief of the Engineer Corps, having just come from the War Department. The Commissary-General stated that the bulk of the supplies had been forwarded to Memphis, and 26,000 rations had been sent to Southeast Missouri—5,000 sent to one point, 5,000 to another, and then 8,000 to one point and 8,000 to another. But the difficulty, as I said before, is simply in this, as any western man who knows that country will at once recognize: there is no trouble in forwarding these supplies to places like Memphis or to New Madrid, Missouri, or to Baton Rouge, Louisiana; but the trouble is then in getting the supplies to the interior, to the people who are on the ridges, the only portions of the country which have escaped from this overflow. Small boats have to be used. As the Commissary-General himself says, possibly only two steamers would be necessary. These steamers draw from five to eight feet of water when loaded, and they cannot go outside of the main channel of the Mississippi River. It is the smaller boats that we want to use.

When I applied to the Secretary of War, while he recognized the necessity, as the letter states, and made no opposition, he still brought in the objection in regard to the funds out of which the payment was to be made, and suggested that if Congress would authorize it he would immediately use these boats for this purpose.

The people of Saint Louis are doing all they can; individuals are paying liberally; the Merchants' Exchange is contributing, as are men voluntarily all over the western country so far as I am informed, I know in my own State, because hundreds of people are upon the point of starvation beyond any sort of exaggeration. I give no coloring to it. All we ask now is simply to use these boats if necessary, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, to give immediate relief. I cannot conceive how any man can object to it.

Mr. HOAR. I was about to suggest to put in the words "authorized in his discretion," instead of the language used.

Mr. VEST. I have no objection to that. I have the fullest confidence in the Secretary of War.

Mr. HOAR. That phrase was used in the recent measure regarding the issue of tents to these sufferers.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the telegram from the Merchants' Exchange of Saint Louis be read. It shows what they are doing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The telegram will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, March 8, 1882.

To F. M. COCKRELL and G. G. VEST, Washington, D. C.:

Your telegram received. We cannot get free transportation, but the companies are disposed to be very liberal, being willing to charge cost rates; besides this are contributing their portion of supplies and are doing much to relieve sufferers along the river free of charge. Reports continue to come in of a very discouraging nature and our people are anxious to do their portion to relieve sufferers, but the demand is so great the Government must continue a generous assistance. We feel gratified at the interest manifested by yourselves for the people in this valley.

CHARLES E. SLAYBACK,
President Merchants' Exchange.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the joint resolution read for information.

The joint resolution was read at length.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish the Secretary would be kind enough to read the form of that resolution, the enacting clause. Is it a joint resolution or a concurrent resolution?

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now will the Secretary please read again the description of the vessels to be employed?

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

To use the steamers and other boats and vessels belonging to the Government upon the Mississippi River and its tributaries.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The question that occurred to my mind was whether that description would cover the particular kind of boat that is necessary for this purpose. Are there not boats that do not belong to the United States but which are employed by the United States in the river and harbor business and by the Mississippi River commission, chartered vessels that are under our control but are not the property of the Government?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be made, "belonging to or employed by the Government."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am merely inquiring, because if we are going to do this thing we want to do it properly. "Belonging to or employed by," I think would be better.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that amendment will be made.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to hear the last clause of the resolution read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

The expense of manning, equipping, and navigating such steamers and boats to be defrayed out of the funds belonging to the Engineer Corps.

Mr. FERRY. I would suggest that the words "now employed" or "already employed" be used, so as not to cover any steamers that might be employed by the Government; that is broad authority.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Insert "now" after "or," so as to read "or now employed." That will make it safe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That modification will be made.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to ask the Senator from Missouri whether this resolution was prepared at the War Office.

Mr. VEST. I wrote the resolution after receiving the letter of the Secretary.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think the resolution accomplishes the purpose intended. There are no funds, I will say, at the disposal of the Engineer Corps proper. If the expense of these vessels is to be paid out of the funds appropriated for rivers and harbors, it should be so stated; but there ought to be still a more specific statement, because it would be difficult to say out of what appropriations for rivers and harbors the money was to come. It might be paid out of the current appropriations for the improvement of the Mississippi River, and I think that would be the best appropriation to take it out of.

Mr. VEST. I drew the joint resolution in accordance with the suggestion of General Wright, of the Engineer Corps. He states that he has money in hand with which to man and equip these boats. These boats have been used by the Engineer Corps in certain river and harbor improvements.

Mr. ALLISON. So I understand.

Mr. VEST. And there are certain appropriations which are set aside by the War Department for the Engineer Corps. Therefore I have inserted the words as they are. But if the Senator from Iowa can suggest any words which will more aptly express my meaning and object, I shall accept them.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know that I can suggest better words, but I only call the attention of the Senator to the fact that as a matter of law there are no funds belonging to the Engineer Corps, so that I think that language will not enable him to employ these vessels.

Mr. VEST. Very good. Then I will say "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated," and that will cover it. Let the resolution be amended in that way.

Mr. CONGER. Then there should be added: "which amount is hereby appropriated for that purpose."

Mr. VEST. Let those words be added.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the amendments just suggested? The Chair hears none, and they are agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. FERRY. Let the resolution be read as it stands.

Mr. ALLISON. It should be "the necessary sum is hereby appropriated."

The Acting Secretary read the joint resolution as amended, as follows:

That the Secretary of War be authorized, in his discretion, to use the steamers and other boats and vessels belonging to or now employed by the Government upon the Mississippi River and its tributaries, or as many thereof as may be necessary, in the transportation and distribution of the rations and supplies furnished by the United States, or individuals, to the sufferers by the recent overflow of said rivers, the expenses of manning, equipping, and navigating such steamers and boats to be defrayed out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which necessary sum is hereby appropriated for that purpose.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. JACKSON (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1438) to equalize the pay of the officers of the Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PLATT asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1439) granting a pension to Lydia Smith; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1440) relating to the registration of trade-marks; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. McDILL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1441) to provide for a postal card with flexible cover to conceal the message written thereon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. HOAR (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1442) providing for the purchase of Forbes's historical art collection; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HOAR. This bill is a bill to purchase a collection of illustrations of various battle-fields; a very remarkable collection, I am informed by the gentleman who requests me to present the bill, which are very important as illustrating the military history of the late war. I think, therefore, this bill should go to the Committee on Military Affairs and not to the Committee on the Library. I move its reference to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1443) to appropriate $350,000 for the improvement of the harbor of Savannah; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committtee on Commerce.

Mr. VOORHEES (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1444) to aid in the construction of the Maryland and Delaware Ship-Canal, and to secure to all vessels of the United States service for all time the right of navigation through said canal free of tolls and charges; which was read twice by its title, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.

Mr. HALE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1445) granting additional pension to John F. Chase; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TELLER (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1446) for the relief of Nicholas White; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. TELLER. I know nothing about the bill, nor about the claim, nor Nicholas White himself. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MAHONE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1447) granting a pension to David W. Combs; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HARRIS (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1448) for the relief of the estate of Thomas Jones, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the papers on file in the case, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GEORGE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1449) to provide for the investigation and settlement of claims against the United States which in justice and good conscience ought to be paid by them; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. VOORHEES asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1450) for the improvement of the Wabash River, Indiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1451) for the improvement of the outer and inner harbors of Michigan City, Indiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DAWES asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1452) granting a pension to Catharine Louisa Benton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOAR asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1453) for the relief of Francis S. Davidson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JONAS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1454) relating to the regulation of the water supply in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

Mr. GROOME. Mr. President, some time since sundry reports were made by the Committee on Pensions to the Senate, some of them unfavorable, and at the time of making the reports the papers upon which those reports were made were brought into the Senate and placed upon the files of the Senate. Those papers belong in the Pension Bureau, and with a view to enabling the committee to obtain control of those papers and to restore them to their proper custody I offer the following orders and ask their adoption:

Ordered, That the papers in the case of James Morgan, belonging to the Pension Office, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Ordered, That the papers in the case of Mary A. Davis, belonging to the Pension Office, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Ordered, That the papers in the case of Ann Smith, belonging to the Pension Office, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Ordered, That the papers in the case of Henry Williams, belonging to the Pension Office, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HARRIS. Are those cases in which there have been adverse reports from the Committee on Pensions?

Mr. GROOME. There certainly have been in some of them, as I stated to the Senate, but the papers belong to the Pension Bureau.

Mr. HARRIS. They are withdrawn for the purpose of returning them?

Mr. GROOME. They are withdrawn and referred to the committee with a view of having them returned to their proper custody in the Pension Bureau, where they belong.

The orders were agreed to.

OUTLETS OF RED RIVER.

Mr. JONAS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to transmit to the Senate an estimate of the expense of permanently closing what are known as Alban's, Hervey's, Sale & Murphy's, and Kountz's Canals, being outlets of the Red River above Shreveport, Louisiana, the estimate of the expense of closing each to be exhibited separately.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 4754) to admit free of duty certain steam-plow machinery now at the port of San Francisco; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 161) making an appropriation to enable the Light-House Board to meet the extraordinary expenses consequent upon the flood in the Mississippi River.

The message also announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. No. 47) authorizing the Secretary of War to use Government vessels for the transportation and distribution of rations furnished by the United States to the sufferers by the Mississippi overflow.

ALCOHOLIC LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of one o'clock has arrived. The first business in order is Senate bill No. 861.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 861) to provide for a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. INGALLS, after the word "taxation," in line 10, to strike out "and its general economic, criminal, moral, and scientific aspects in connection with pauperism, crime, social vice, the public health, and general welfare of the people," and insert in lieu thereof "and society;" so as to make the clause read:

And it shall be their duty to investigate the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to revenue and taxation and society.

The question being put a division was called for, and the ayes were 26.

Mr. CONGER. I think this of importance enough to ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to say a word upon the amendment. Almost the entire body of the petitions and memorials representing the wishes of those who desire this investigation to be made have used this language. I followed it in the bill. It seems to be the direction which the judgment of those who have petitioned Congress takes in this matter. Now, why should there be left out the relations of the alcoholic liquor traffic to the "general, economic, criminal, moral, and scientific aspects in connection with pauperism, crime, social vice, the public health, and general welfare of the people?" Why should there be substituted for this direction of investigation the simple question of its relations to "society?" What possible object can there be for the friends of this measure to vote to leave it in that general, uncertain condition of investigation?

As I said before, if the desire of the Senate is to eliminate from this bill all that is valuable, to take out of the bill all that is petitioned for, we are approaching that condition with great celerity by these various amendments. In my judgment a change in the respect now proposed will make this bill comparatively useless for the purpose of the investigation which so many hundred thousand people have demanded Congress should provide for. You take away from this bill its efficiency and its value by taking away the direction of the investigation and the subjects which are to be investigated.

I consider this one of the most important bills for the welfare and prosperity and peace of society, and of the people of the United States, of any that has been or will be presented in this Congress. Hundreds of thousands of intelligent people and many benevolent societies have petitioned Congress for the little investigation which is required here; and if gentlemen desire to make that investigation valuable they should strengthen this bill rather than weaken it. I do not myself understand why a bill of this kind should have eliminated from it all these directions suggested for the investigation which the friends of temperance through the country desire. You might better refuse to pass it, better lay it on the table, better tell these hundreds of thousands of petitioners that this Senate has not the moral courage to pass a bill granting their request, for that is what it means.

The roll was called.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. JACKSON] has left the Chamber because of indisposition. Upon general questions he is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CAMERON.] I do not consider this a question that the Senator is bound to be paired with him upon.

Mr. CAMERON of Wisconsin. I did not understand that my pair extended to this and consequently voted. I thought he and I would agree on this amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I did not know whether the Senator had voted or not; but it is perfectly correct for the Senator to vote if he deems it proper to do so.

Mr. FERRY, (after having voted in the negative.) Since voting it occurs to me that I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] on all questions. Therefore I withdraw my vote. I see he is not present in the Chamber.

Mr. GROOME, (after having voted in the affirmative.) There is a general understanding between myself and the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] that we are paired upon political questions. I am informed that the Senator from New York is absent from the Chamber, and that he would vote "nay" upon this question if he were here. I therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Allison,	Coke,	Harris,	Slater,
Bayard,	Davis of Illinois,	Jonas,	Teller,
Beck,	Edmunds,	Jones of Florida,	Vance,
Brown,	Garland,	Morrill,	Van Wyck,
Cameron of Wis.,	Gorman,	Pugh,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Ransom,	Walker.

NAYS—25.

Aldrich,	Hawley,	Miller of Cal.,	Sewell,
Blair,	Hoar,	Mitchell,	Sherman,
Conger,	Kellogg,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Frye,	Lapham,	Platt,	Windom.
George,	McDill,	Rollins,
Hale,	McMillan,	Saunders,
Harrison,	Maxey,	Sawyer,

ABSENT—27.

Anthony,	Fair,	Ingalls,	Mahone,
Butler,	Farley,	Jackson,	Miller of N. Y.,
Call,	Ferry,	Johnston,	Pendleton,
Camden,	Groome,	Jones of Nevada,	Plumb,
Cameron of Pa.,	Grover,	Lamar,	Saulsbury,
Davis of W. Va.,	Hill of Colorado,	Logan,	Williams.
Dawes,	Hill of Georgia,	McPherson,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAYARD. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of section 1:

And shall also inquire and report upon the extent of the use of opium and other substitutes for alcoholic stimulants, and whether prohibition of the use of alcoholic beverages has been accompanied by an increased consumption of opium and other intoxicating drugs.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We had better have a separate commission for that, Mr. President.

Mr. CONGER. I see personally no objection to the amendment if the subject is not embraced in the general scope of the inquiry.

Mr. ALLISON. The time ought to be extended, I think, if that inquiry is to be gone into.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The opium question will require another year.

Mr. FRYE. I hope the amendment will be voted down. It has nothing to do with the subject which these petitioners have presented to Congress, and I hope no blow will be given to this bill underhand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I do not know all that may be included by this bill. In the first place, if it is intended to inquire only into what is called in this bill "the alcoholic liquor traffic," the information is amply and abundantly furnished to-day by the reports of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The tax laid upon the production of alcohol from grain is the heaviest known to our system; and that is saying a great deal. Upon every twenty-five cents' worth of corn from which liquor is distilled the Government gains $3.35 of tax. Corn is produced in every county in every State of this Union, and in every place where it is produced and subjected to the process of distillation it is taxed in the egregious manner which I have stated. A system so thoroughly artificial is necessarily thoroughly guarded, and therefore if the intent of this bill be information upon that subject with a view to framing a tax law by Congress in relation to this commodity, I submit to the common sense and the knowledge of every man who hears me whether the information here to-day is not ample and complete without creating a commission to find it. I do not think any gentleman will rise in his place and deny that fact, that the information and the means of information are perfect and complete. What then is wanted else? To find other aspects of the liquor traffic, "the alcoholic liquor traffic," as it is called here. What are they? It is hard to say what they are not, because the Senate has, as I understand by its vote, decided to keep in the words "criminal, moral, and scientific aspects," whatever they may be, in its relations to "pauperism, crime, social vice, the public health, and the general welfare." If it is the intention to examine this question from all these various and important points of view, then I submit it is not dealing with the question sincerely when you overlook the fact which is referred to by this amendment, which is alleged, and I have seen it alleged from the most reputable sources, that pari passu with your arbitrary prohibition of the use of alcoholic drinks in this country you have the substitution of other excitants. I have seen it stated over and over again, and I have seen legislation based upon such statements——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Delaware is up. ["Go on!"]

Mr. BAYARD. A five-minute rule is not the rule for discussing a question of this size under.

Mr. COCKRELL. There will be no objection to the Senator proceeding, I hope.

Mr. BAYARD. May I say just one word? I never am in favor, and I never have since I have been a member of this body been in favor of a professed delay for the purpose of defeating a measure. I am perfectly willing to have the issue fairly framed and to meet it just as soon as it can be met; and I do not want my friend from Michigan, who seems to have this bill very much at heart, to suppose that because I have offered amendments and because I do not want this bill to pass, I am disposed merely to delay it or make dilatory motions about it. I believe that I care just as much for temperance and for the results of temperance and abhor intemperance and its results as much as any man in the Senate——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senate grant unanimous consent to the Senator from Delaware to proceed? ["Yes?"] If there be no objection the Senator will proceed.

Mr. CONGER. If the Senator desires to close the statement he was making, I hope he will have a brief time to finish it. I should like very well that he should have an opportunity to show that he is not opposed to this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senate consent that the Senator from Delaware may proceed? The Senate is acting under a five-minute rule, and some Senators have told the Chair that it is not properly administered. The Chair wants to administer it; that is all. If the Senate chooses to give permission to any Senator to proceed beyond the rule, the Chair is satisfied.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire a few minutes in reply, but I shall not object.

Mr. BAYARD. Within five minutes the regular order will be demanded. It is not my fault that this bill has come up under a five-minute rule or that we are to be stopped upon it at the end of a short time.

The subject is of great importance. I do not think Congress has any right under the Constitution to deal with the question in the way that this bill seems to infer that it is to be dealt with. What has the Congress of the United States to do with the license systems of the States? You cannot change them. What have you to do with pauperism in the States? You cannot avoid it. These are questions of local interest and local police; and what is to be the practical effect of such a measure as this is? Simply to obtain information or opinion, and when you have got it you are powerless to act upon it.

I think the question is too serious to be dealt with in this light way; there are too many sides to it; and the amendment that I have offered I regard as a wise and a proper one. It is thoroughly germane to the professed objects of this bill; and there is no physician in the country, no man who practices medicine, especially among the poor, but will tell you that when you do suppress by arbitrary laws the use of alcoholic stimulants you do increase the resort to opiates and drugs that take their place, that you have a substitution, and a most grievous and a most disastrous one. I have heard many earnest and honest people, who were most earnest advocates of the cause of temperance, detail to me the dangers of having in a community no place where pure and unadulterated alcoholic drinks could be obtained, and that in lieu thereof all sorts of wretched substitutes were taken, opium, paregoric, and God knows what.

So I say if you are to treat this question in some one of the thousand aspects the bill refers to, it is proper you should consider the absolute propriety of adopting the amendment.

Mr. CONGER. Now I hope we may have a vote. I do not rise to speak, but to request that we have a vote if gentlemen have no further remarks to make.

Mr. HARRIS. The consideration of this bill has consumed the morning hour for three successive mornings. It is too large a question, as stated by the Senator from Delaware, to be considered under the five-minute rule. I see no reason why it may not consume the morning hour for a week more, in view of which fact I object to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I move that the Senate continue the consideration of this bill until it is disposed of.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator can get a speedy vote on the bill, I shall withdraw the objection; but if a vote is not obtainable at once I will adhere to the objection.

Mr. CONGER. I will modify my motion at the suggestion of those who know the rules better than I do. I move to lay aside all prior orders and proceed with the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate is acting under the Anthony rule. It is not now quite half past one.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to occupy that time with a few remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CONGER. Does the Chair decide that I have not the right to make my motion now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair decides that under the Anthony rule he can move, notwithstanding the objection, to proceed with its consideration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the motion.

Mr. CONGER. That is my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan moves to proceed with the consideration of this bill notwithstanding the objection that is made.

Mr. BAYARD. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BAYARD. I desire to say that the time has now arrived for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not quite half past one.

Mr. BAYARD. Yesterday at the time of the adjournment I made a motion to take up for consideration the tariff-commission bill. I propose——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will inform the Senator that half past one has not quite arrived.

Mr. BAYARD. It is about here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of half past one has not quite arrived.

Mr. BAYARD. If it has not, pending the arrival of that time, I propose to show why this bill ought not to go on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has a right to the floor.

Mr. BAYARD. I insist, sir——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of half past one has arrived, and the bill goes over until to-morrow.

Mr. CONGER. Now I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the alcoholic liquor traffic bill, all other orders being laid aside.

Mr. MORGAN. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no regular order.

Mr. HARRIS. The regular order must certainly be the Calendar of orders.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The motion is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At the arrival of half past one, by an understanding last night, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] was to have the floor to move to take up the Japanese indemnity bill.

Mr. FERRY. But that was not the pending question when the Senate adjourned yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no unfinished business for to-day.

Mr. FERRY. There was no pending question when the Senate adjourned yesterday. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] has called attention to the fact that we go to the Calendar; but that is under a rule of the Senate where there is no pending question. Therefore the motion of my colleague is perfectly correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair decides that the motion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] is in order, inasmuch as he made it before the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] got the floor. The Chair has no right to recognize the Senator from Alabama as entitled to make his motion, as he had not claimed the floor up to half past one, though in point of fact the Chair said yesterday he would. The question is now on the motion of the Senator from Michigan to take up the alcoholic liquor traffic bill.

Mr. CONGER. The bill (S. No. 861) to provide for a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic.

Mr. BAYARD. Now I ask the attention of the Chair, with all due respect, to the proceedings last night at the time of our adjournment. There was at that time an endeavor on the part of my friend from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] to bring forward the Japanese indemnity bill and I endeavored to procure the assent of the Senate to take up the tariff commission bill. A request was made that an adjournment should be had, and this occurred:

Mr. MORGAN. With the understanding that I have the floor on that motion to-morrow I yield for that purpose.

Mr. TELLER. I move an adjournment.

Mr. BAYARD. I give notice that I shall antagonize the motion to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore—

I call the attention of the Chair—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Alabama to-morrow to make his motion and the Senator from Delaware to antagonize it.

And on that remark the Senate adjourned. I suppose, therefore, that the Senator from Alabama is now entitled to the floor to make his motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair undoubtedly said what the Senator has read, but before what he intimated would be done was done the Senator from Michigan made his motion.

Mr. MORGAN. I had called for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. SHERMAN. The motion of the Senator from Alabama fell with the adjournment last night, even if it was pending then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would prefer to recognize the Senator from Alabama according to what was said last evening, but there is objection to it, and inasmuch as the Senator from Michigan really, in point of fact, addressed the Chair first, it seems to the Chair that the Senator from Michigan is in order. The Chair, who is not as familar with parliamentary rules as the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS,] called him to the desk to see if the Chair was right, and the Senator from Tennessee thought the Chair was right in this ruling.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Chair is bound by the rules to recognize the Senator who first addresses the Chair, and the Senator from Michigan certainly did first address the Chair, and the Chair cannot help it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would have been very glad to recognize the Senator from Alabama as it was understood there were to be two propositions before the Senate to-day, one by the Senator from Alabama and the other by the Senator from Delaware. If the Senate chooses it can vote down this proposition and then receive the other.

Mr. BAYARD. What is the question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan to take up the bill proposed by him.

Mr. BAYARD. Pending that motion I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 22) to provide for the appointment of a commission to investigate the question of the tariff and internal-revenue laws. I understand that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. SLATER] was prepared several days ago to address the Senate on this subject and is prepared now, and I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of that measure.

Mr. FERRY. That motion is not in order. The motion of my colleague is to take up the bill which he has named, and that motion cannot be amended. Until a vote is taken on that, the Senator from Delaware cannot make his motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. After a vote is taken on the proposition of the Senator from Michigan, if rejected, the other motion will be in order.

Mr. BAYARD. I am doing that which I now do under the instruction of the Committee on Finance of which the Senator from Michigan is a member. I was directed to bring this bill in, and I have done so, and to press it to consideration, and I am doing so.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman will permit me to say that I am not a member of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BAYARD. But there are two Senators from Michigan.

Mr. FERRY. I did not hear the observation of my colleague on the committee. What was it? What did the Senator from Delaware remark?

Mr. BAYARD. I said that I was pressing on the consideration of the Senate the bill to create a tariff commission, and that I did that by the direction of the Committee on Finance, of which the honorable Senator now questioning me is a member.

Mr. FERRY. But I am more interested in the question of temperance just now than I am in the question of finance.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I am very anxious to vote to give the Senator from Michigan full opportunity to have the bill in his charge discussed and acted on by the Senate. There is some objection on this side to taking it up now, and so I venture to make this suggestion to him: I will vote for any proper motion that he may make to make it a special order for Monday at half past one o'clock, and then take it up and dispose of it. I feel constrained, from deference to certain gentlemen on this side of the Chamber, to vote against taking it up now.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to say that I expect to vote for the bill of the Senator from Michigan, when it comes up, according to my present convictions, in order that we may have the benefit of the inquiries that may be made by this commission; but this bill has come into the Senate very early; it has never been to a committee. In some way or other it got on the Calendar upon the first reading, I suppose because of the inattention of the Senate to the subject. Thereupon the Senator from Delaware moved to have it referred to the Committee on Finance, the course which should have been taken on a bill of this magnitude. That motion was voted down by the Senate, and the Senator was allowed to make the effort to pass the bill in the morning hour. Other bills which have been under consideration for months and for years by committees of this body, and in which not only our own country but people abroad are concerned, it seems to me ought not to be crowded out by a bill which has been thrust in thus suddenly.

The likelihood is that this sumptuary question will involve a debate that will have a very wide range. I have never known it to be touched either in society or in any legislative tribunal, that it did not elicit a great deal of discussion. There is a strong division of opinion as to the powers of Congress to touch this subject in any respect whatever, and still perhaps a stronger division of opinion as to whether we are not violating the authority which the people have conferred upon us under the Constitution by raising an outside commission to consider this question. The Congress of the United States it seems is now about to give most of its powers and authorities into the hands of foreign and outside committees. It seems to be unwilling to take the responsibility which belongs to Senators and Representatives. So we find that extraordinary commissions are being appointed continually to do part of our duties. The truth is that all this outside commission business means simply that Congress is not willing to do its duty according to the just mandates of the Constitution.

Now, I think the Senator from Michigan will act wisely and the Senate will act wisely by allowing this bill to remain in the morning hour, and permitting us to complete it in the morning hour, even under the five-minute rule. It is true that any man may debate it for an hour if he thinks proper; the convictions of every man on this subject are based on his own personal information and his intercourse with society; but every member of the Senate is to-day as well informed upon every topic connected with this bill as he will be after a dozen commissions have reported. There is nothing obscure in respect to any matter connected with this whole measure. There is not an argument that can be made against it or for it that is not equally well known in point of fact in the mind of every Senator here. Why, therefore, should we consume so much time in undertaking to get information from a commission which, after we have obtained it, will instruct nobody?

I insist that in order to conduct the public business of this country in an orderly way, and in the way in which we have heretofore conducted it, we should not have measures which have not been referred for the action of committees and have not been discussed there with reference to their bearing on the finances of the country for instance, as this measure has very important bearing on that subject, passed upon in this extraordinary way.

I do not propose to antagonize the bill which I have the honor to represent, by the direction of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and which they have instructed me to invite the attention of the Senate to, against any bill in this body of general public utility or one which concerns the general welfare of the people; but I am bound to antagonize it to a measure which is much more sentimental than otherwise, which has for its purpose nothing else than the mere gathering of information which every man in this Senate is as fully in possession of to-day as he will be after it has been tabulated in a statistical form by this commission.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall so vote on this question as to expedite the public business. This bill in regard to the liquor traffic has stood in the way of all the Calendar for three or four days. It has prevented the passage probably of twenty or thirty bills. It is not a new bill. It is a bill upon which every Senator has made up his mind to vote for or against it. It is backed by the moral support of thousands of good people who believe that it will furnish a valuable document at least in aid of the cause of temperance. Now, why not give them the bill, and why not remove this obstruction from the Calendar? If it is postponed to-day and not acted on now, it will be taken up to-morrow, and so for day after day it will stand in the way of the ordinary business of the country. I am anxious to vote to take up the bill proposed by the Senator from Delaware; but why not take up and finish this now so that we shall not every day renew the argument upon it over and over again? I think that the time of the Senate and the public convenience will be husbanded by taking up the bill represented by the Senator from Michigan and disposing of it. It ought not to consume an hour, probably not half an hour, and then we shall be prepared to take up other bills in their order; but until it is disposed of we cannot displace it from its lead on the Calendar of public business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.]

Mr. BAYARD called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. JACKSON.]

Mr. FERRY, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GROOME, (when his name was called.) Upon all questions connected with this bill I am paired with the Senator from New York, [Mr. MILLER.]

Mr. VAN WYCK, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. GROVER.]

Mr. WINDOM, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS.] If I were not paired, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 26, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Lapham,	Rollins,
Allison,	Hale,	McDill,	Saunders,
Blair,	Harrison,	McMillan,	Sawyer,
Conger,	Hawley,	Mahone,	Sewell,
Davis of Illinois,	Hill of Colorado,	Maxey,	Sherman.
Dawes,	Hoar,	Mitchell,
Edmunds,	Kellogg,	Platt,

NAYS—24.

Bayard,	Garland,	Jones of Florida,	Ransom,
Beck,	George,	McPherson,	Slater,
Brown,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Vance,
Call,	Hampton,	Morrill,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Pendleton,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Jonas,	Pugh,	Walker.

ABSENT—26.

Anthony,	Farley,	Johnston,	Saulsbury,
Butler,	Ferry,	Jones of Nevada,	Teller,
Camden,	Groome,	Lamar,	Van Wyck,
Cameron of Pa.,	Grover,	Logan,	Williams,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hill of Georgia,	Miller of Cal.,	Windom.
Davis of W. Va.,	Ingalls,	Miller of N. Y.,
Fair,	Jackson,	Plumb,

So the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (S. No. 861) to provide for a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.]

Mr. CALL. Mr. President——

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida gave notice that to-day at half past one he would ask the indulgence of the Senate to submit certain remarks upon a resolution offered by him some days since, and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. SLATER] also, the Chair thinks, gave a similar notice in relation to the tariff-commission bill.

Mr. ROLLINS. I also gave notice yesterday that I should call up a bill to-day and submit some remarks upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not with a view of passing the bill. It is under the courtesy of the Senate that the Senator from Florida claims the floor. The Senator from Michigan is informed that by the courtesy of the Senate any Senator can at any time make remarks upon a bill not with a view of urging the immediate passage of the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I do not desire, of course, to interfere with the wish of any Senator who relies on the usages of the Senate; but I would ask the Senator from Florida if he will not permit a vote to be taken on this bill. As far as I am concerned, I hope it may be taken without discussion and that we may very soon dispose of it and leave the field open for such remarks as gentlemen wish to make.

Mr. CALL. Then I give notice that on Monday morning I shall ask leave of the Senate to take up the resolution I have submitted, for the purpose of submitting some remarks, and I now yield to my friend from Oregon, who wishes to be heard.

Mr. SLATER. I dislike to antagonize the expressed wish of the Senate, and I will wait and see how soon a vote can be taken on the pending bill, and if I can get an opportunity to-day I may claim the privilege of being heard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire share the feelings of these other Senators?

Mr. ROLLINS. Entirely, Mr. President, but I think mine is an exceptional case. I propose to compromise, and instead of submitting any remarks I ask the Senate to pass a little bill of four or five lines giving additional accommodations for the Pension Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not now. I object.

Mr. ROLLINS. We have made appropriation for additional Pension Office clerks, but we have no place to put the clerks.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object. Regular order!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont objects. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] to the bill (S. No. 861) to provide for a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the opium amendment.

The Acting Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FERRY, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY.]

Mr. GROOME. I again announce that I am paired with the Senator from New York, [Mr. MILLER.]

Mr. VAN WYCK, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. GROVER.]

Mr. WINDOM, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS,] and therefore do not vote.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 24, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Bayard,	Coke,	Harris,	Ransom,
Beck,	Davis of Illinois,	Jonas,	Slater,
Brown,	Garland,	Jones of Florida,	Vance,
Call,	George,	McPherson,	Vest,
Cameron of Wis.,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Pugh,	Walker.

NAYS—25.

Aldrich,	Hale,	McDill,	Saunders,
Allison,	Harrison,	McMillan,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Hawley,	Mahone,	Sherman,
Conger,	Hill of Colorado,	Mitchell,	Teller.
Dawes,	Hoar,	Morrill,
Edmunds,	Kellogg,	Platt,
Frye,	Lapham,	Rollins,

ABSENT—27.

Anthony,	Ferry,	Jones of Nevada,	Plumb,
Butler,	Groome,	Lamar,	Saulsbury,
Camden,	Grover,	Logan,	Sewell,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hill of Georgia,	Maxey,	Van Wyck,
Davis of W. Va.,	Ingalls,	Miller of Cal.,	Williams,
Fair,	Jackson,	Miller of N. Y.,	Windom.
Farley,	Johnston,	Pendleton,

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I am at a loss, Mr. President, to discover our authority under the Constitution for going into this extended investigation, for really the terms of this bill authorize the investigation of the business of everybody connected with the liquor traffic. I am aware that very large strides have already been made in the direction of assuming all powers of government in the central authority. No one will go any further than I will to maintain the just authority of the Union——

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator a question in the line of his argument. The objection stated by him is a doubt as to the constitutional power of Congress to gather this information. I ask him if it is not perfectly competent for Congress to gather this information to aid Congress in legislating for the District of Columbia and for the Territories of the United States?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. If the provisions of the bill were confined to the District of Columbia, I would certainly say there could be no valid objection to it; but in all legislation of Congress intended to be limited by the jurisdiction of this District the fact usually appears upon the face of the bill. This bill has no such restrictions about it. It is intended, and the framers and supporters of it will not deny that it is intended to ramify the entire Union, that it is intended to authorize a commission to be appointed to inquire into the private business of every man in every State, not with a view of ascertaining how much tax this business will bear, but with a view of ascertaining its relations "to crime, to pauperism, to social evils and the public health, and the general welfare of the people," and with a view of taking testimony "as to the practical results of license and prohibitory legislation for the prevention of intemperance in the several States of the Union." There is no "District of Columbia" there. "In the several States of the Union."

Now, sir, I say that I am as ready as any one to sustain at all times the full authority of the Constitution, with the limitations surrounding it as therein written; but I can find no authority in the Constitution for this sweeping measure, and bound as I am by my oath to observe it, I shall not vote for the bill.

Sir, the framers of this sacred instrument never contemplated such a power as this. They never intended to give to the Government of the Union the regulation of the morals of the people of the United States. They never intended to give to the Legislature of the Union the jurisdiction over the question of education, or anything of that kind. On the face of the Constitution we have, I think, seventeen distinct grants of power, conferring upon Congress the authority and jurisdiction which it was intended to bestow upon the Government of the Union, and I would ask the supporters of this bill under what clause in the delegated powers does this authority emanate from? Where is the power to regulate this subject? It is no part of commerce, no part of the war power. Nothing here can be found to justify, in my opinion, the adoption of a measure which will enable a commission created by Congress to enter into the State and pry into the private business of the individuals who are doing business there under the authority of the respective communities.

If it was confined to the question of taxation and revenue it might be apparently justifiable; but it is intended to go far beyond that. We have gone far enough, I think, in this direction; and if we keep on, after a time there will be no powers of government left to the respective States of this Union, but everything will be swallowed up by this gigantic system of centralization which will destroy the very genius of our institutions. Judge Marshall himself in the great case of Gibbons vs. Ogden said, when speaking with regard to the health laws of the States, that the power of the Union did not extend to them and that the framers of the Constitution never intended to give to the General Government any jurisdiction or authority whatever over the health of the people of the several States; and I am sure there was no jurist in this country who ever went any further than he did in giving to the Constitution the full extent of all the power intended by its framers. If we had no authority, according to that decision, to go to such lengths as we have, surely there can be none found here to authorize a roving commission to parade the entire Union and pry into the private business of the people of the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I rose this morning to reply briefly to the Senator from Delaware, and I intended to make the few remarks I proposed to submit entirely on this question of the constitutional power of Congress, because years ago, when this bill was first introduced while I was a member of the Senate and had charge of it, that question was the only one that made the slightest impression on my mind. I think a moment's consideration will satisfy any Senator that there is no foundation whatever for any objection to this bill on the ground of a want of the constitutional power of Congress to get this information.

This bill does not propose to legislate as to the interior affairs of any State. It does not propose to decide for Delaware or Ohio whether it shall prohibit the sale of liquor, whether it shall license the sale of liquor, but simply institutes an inquiry into the best mode of dealing with the acknowledged evils that grow out of the sale of intoxicating liquors. Any State in this Union might pass this bill with the same authority that the Congress of the United States can pass it; any State is at liberty to gain its information from any quarter it chooses.

Now, Mr. President, the reason why this bill may be passed by Congress is that Congress undoubtedly has the right to legislate upon this subject as to the District of Columbia and as to the Territories of the United States. It has a right to seek this information so far as the question of taxation is concerned, so far as the question of revenue is concerned, and also it may deal with the question in its broader view as it affects the public morals, as it affects the good order of society in this District, and in any Territory of the United States. This bill might be passed with perfect propriety by any State in the Union. Why not, then, leave it to the States? The answer is this, that no State can institute an inquiry as broadly, as efficiently, and as effectively as the Congress of the United States. It is not right to put upon any State the cost of inquiry that is proposed by this bill.

What will be the use of this report? it may be said. Why gather all this information? It is because the people of all the States are interested in it, the Legislature of every State is interested in obtaining this information. The people of Ohio are now debating year by year the best mode of dealing with the acknowledged evils growing out of the sale of spirituous liquors. All political parties have participated in that kind of legislation; the framers of all the constitutions in the United States have dealt with this question, and they have always dealt with it upon imperfect information, upon insufficient and partial information. This bill is intended merely to supply that needed information. It is an honest effort made by good temperance people and some who are not so temperate to get all the information that can be had in regard to this subject-matter.

It may be said that this information will be mainly gathered from the laws of the several States, from the constitutions of the several States, from the public documents of the several States; but there are also phases of this question which cannot be reached by that kind of inquiry. I think, therefore, it was wrong to strike from this bill the provision that authorized the taking of testimony. It is true the language here was not broad enough to confer the power to administer oaths, but it ought to be. I can see that in some aspects of this temperance question it may be very important to take the testimony of scientific men. The science of chemistry would be very useful when considering the question of the sale of intoxicating liquors. It is a subject as broad as this country, as broad as the world, and probably no man but will admit that the improper use of intoxicating liquors has inflicted more evil, more crime, more poverty, more ill upon the human race than any other single cause whatever.

Now, sir, to institute an inquiry into the best mode of dealing with this question is not only beneficial for the people of this District, for whom we legislate, and for the people of the Territories, but for the people of every State. I have been somewhat amazed at the opposition to this bill. I regard it as an honest effort for a good purpose, liable to no constitutional objection, and certainly it ought not to meet any party opposition. I freely admit that the Senator from Delaware and every Senator on that side is just as anxious to prevent the evils that naturally grow out of the sale and use of intoxicating liquors as I am. Neither of us is very extreme in our opinions on that subject; both of us, I hope, can drink if necessary in moderation without injury to ourselves personally, but yet from the observation of all of us, from our experience among men, from seeing the chosen companions of our boyhood, of our manhood, and of our older years, fall victims to the habit of intoxication, we have seen and appreciate the evil that has been inflicted upon society and upon mankind by the use and abuse of spirituous liquor, and, certainly, we ought to do our utmost as legislators to check the evil, and, if possible, to devise a preventive or cure for it.

One of the benefits that may arise from the passage of this bill will be to enable the States, each for itself, to deal with this subject in its own way. I can see that the information collected, if properly collected by a proper commission, may be useful to the Legislature of every State; and while we are furnishing information to enable us to deal with the people of the District and also with the people of the Territories, we may very properly furnish the people of the several States with the same information.

Why, sir, I regard the question of prohibition, or the attempt to prohibit the sale of spirituous liquors, and the question of license or of taxation, and other modes of dealing with this liquor question, as the most difficult problems of political economy now pending. I am among those who have thought that the attempt to absolutely prohibit the sale of spirituous liquors would be a failure wherever tried. One of the objects of this investigation is to ascertain whether or not in the State of Maine and some of the other States where prohibitory laws have been passed they have been effective, whether they have prevented intemperance, whether they have been a proper remedy for this great evil. On the other hand, it has been proposed by a wise system of taxation to limit and restrain the evils growing out of the sale of spirituous liquors, and in some cases that has been tested, and it is found to work very well. My opinion, if I were called upon to express an opinion, would be that by wise tax laws passed by the several States, each for itself, this subject may be best dealt with.

Others are in favor of a license law, a limited license law, in the nature of a tax law, somewhat different. Some propose to regulate this subject by submitting it to each city or town, called a local-option law, and in many other ways and forms, as by limiting the amount of sales, prohibiting the sale by retail at places where it would be drunk, and requiring it to be sold only in quantities of not less than a quart. The number of measures by which it has been proposed to deal with this question is indefinite, and it is very important to ascertain in a definite form the experience of the people of this country and of different States so as to enable the Legislatures to pass upon the question.

Why therefore refuse to expend $10,000 to assist the people who have started out for the purpose of providing a remedy for an acknowledged evil? I never could see the cause of the extent of the opposition to this bill. It is an old measure; it has been here for six or eight years. I know that it was here when I was a member of the Senate formerly, at least five years ago, and it is here now, being constantly renewed by the people who look to the evils growing out of the sale of intoxicating liquors as the great evil to society.

I think it is right and proper that the general assent of Congress should be given so that an investigation may be had into the cause of the evil, and the remedy, and how best to deal with it. I shall vote for the bill with great pleasure, and I see no point either of a constitutional character, of an economic character, or of any other kind, against the passage of the bill.

It is a sufficient answer to the constitutional objection to say that Congress wants this information for the purpose of legislating for the people of this District and for the people of the Territories. It wants this information also in order to teach us how to deal with the revenue laws of the United States, how far we are to reduce the tax on whisky, or whether we should increase it, whether we should encourage the use of beer or discourage the use of beer by a tax. All these various questions it is proper for us to consider.

If you once show a single constitutional purpose and object in the passage of a law, as a matter of course you answer the constitutional argument. Because we cannot deal with this question in all the States is not any reason why we should not deal with it wisely in this District and the Territories and obtain the requisite information for that purpose. If we have the right to obtain this information for any purpose, it is constitutional and legal for us to do so, even although the States and other communities may or may not avail themselves of the information.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I believe that I would be as far from voting for a measure which I regarded as trenching upon the constitutional reserved powers of the States and people as any Senator on this floor, but it is impossible for me to comprehend wherein this bill in any respect trenches upon the constitutional reserved rights of the States or of the people, as the Senator from Florida would seem to think.

What is the object of this measure? It is merely an inquiry, an inquiry instituted for the purpose of investigating the alcoholic liquor traffic in its relations to revenue and taxation. When by the internal-revenue law we place a vast amount of tax upon the American people for the manufacture and sale of ardent spirits, have we not a right to appoint a commission to investigate that subject as much as we have a right to appoint a commission to look into the customs duties, as much as we have a right to investigate the habitat, &c., of the locust and the grasshopper, as we did a few years ago?

The purpose of the commission is to gather information. Is it proposed to interfere with the laws of any State or to dictate to any State what its laws shall be? Not in the slightest degree. Congress has the power to legislate for the District of Columbia and for the Territories, and in legislating for this District and for the Territories Congress has a right to gain all the information it can from every source in order the more intelligently to legislate to the extent it has a right to legislate; and if in gathering this information the inquiry goes to the States, can that properly be regarded as trenching upon the reserved rights of the States?

Suppose a State like mine is endeavoring to-day to gather information in respect to railroad legislation. We send inquiries in every direction to ascertain what other States of the Union are doing in that regard. We get the reports of railroad commissioners in other States in order to ascertain what they are doing elsewhere. For what object? To enable us the more intelligently to legislate for the benefit of our own people. Is there anything wrong in doing that?

This is simply to be an inquiry, and let the inquiry be made boldly and squarely. If the liquor traffic is a moral, social, and political evil, as I believe, and as a great many other men in this country believe, if it is an evil that the States to the extent of their powers should legislate against, and that the Federal Government to the extent of its power, in so far as it has any power of legislation in this direction, should legislate against, which as I say is the opinion of good men all over this land, ought there to be any objection by anybody to raising a commission to inquire into it?

Here are two systems. One is the system of prohibition. Is that the best? Another is the system of license. Is that the best? Or is it better to let every man sell whisky who sees proper to sell it, without any regard to license laws, prohibitory laws, or anything else? What is the best plan? Those who favor this bill say, "let the commission be composed of men who represent all these various views, and let them get this information and present it to Congress." Thus we shall be the better enabled to determine the question, for it may be that that inquiry will have an effect upon legislation here. It may be that the internal-revenue laws upon the question of whisky will be affected by the inquiry. If so, have we not the right to make the inquiry? If you start out with the right to gather this information for any purpose whatever, the information once gained, then, as was said by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] the States may well apply the information thus gathered where it is applicable to their own affairs. Is that any objection to our getting the information?

Therefore, so far as the constitutional question is concerned, I am wholly unable to see wherein this bill in the slightest degree trenches upon the Constitution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole?

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. PLUMB. Is the bill still subject to amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in the Senate, and still open to amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 4 I move to strike out the word "five" and insert "seven" before "persons;" so that the commission shall consist of seven persons.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. PLUMB. I want to say one word upon the amendment I have offered. I move the amendment because the bill has been so limited on the motion of the Senator from Delaware that it seems to me the commission to be appointed will not embrace the persons representing sufficiently the diverse sentiments which finally go to make up public opinion on this very important question. I want the report of this commission, when once made, not only to be satisfactory in its terms and results, but by reason of the constitution of the commission to convey an appearance of entire fairness, so that the result as disclosed may be accepted without hesitation throughout the entire country. I think, therefore, that the commission ought to be larger than is provided by the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. In order to have the bill correspond in spirit with the provision just adopted, in line 5 "three" should be stricken out and "four" inserted; so as to read:

> Not more than four of whom shall be of the same political party nor be advocates of prohibition.

I move that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARLAND. I call the attention of the Senator from Michigan to the fact that it will probably be necessary to increase the appropriation for the expenses of the commission, since the number has been increased.

Mr. CONGER. The bill provides that the commissioners shall serve without salary.

Mr. GARLAND. That is true, but their expenses are to be paid.

Mr. CONGER. I am willing myself that the bill shall pass as it is, with the amount of expenses specified. If hereafter it may seem necessary to make another appropriation, and if it is the judgment of Congress that the appropriation is necessary, it can be made then.

Mr. CALL. I suggest to the Senator from Michigan why not strike out so much of the bill as relates to suggestions in reference to prohibitory legislation in the States, or the effect of intemperance in the States? It strikes me that this is clearly a subject over which Congress has no kind of power, and it is an objection in the minds of some persons in voting for the bill. I cannot see that it would in any way advantage the bill.

Congress certainly has power so far as revenue and taxation are concerned, and I suppose there would be no particular objections to inquire relating to the general subject; but the bill suggests that it shall be with a view to the "prevention of intemperance in the several States." There can be no doubt that Congress has no rightful power to make any suggestion, and if it should exert any power upon that subject it would be to subvert the government as it is under the Constitution as it now exists.

I think the position my colleague takes on that subject is very forcible. While I would be glad to vote for the bill and glad to find any proper measure, whatever it may be, by which the evils of intemperance might be taken away, I scarcely think the question is grave enough to subvert our whole system of government. The authority of the States over this question is exclusive, and it is not necessary to subvert that authority in order that the bill might be passed. I submit to the Senator from Michigan the suggestion that the bill would not be hurt by striking out as much of it as suggests the idea of preventing intemperance in the States. As to the incidental effect it may have in that direction, that would be without objection.

Mr. CONGER. The inquiry, as specified in the bill, is not as to the prevention of intemperance in the several States of the Union, but it is as to the practical results of license and prohibitory legislation in the prevention of intemperance in the States. There is no place where such legislation has been had except in the States. The bill is merely descriptive of the place and manner of conducting the inquiry. I think we might make the same inquiry——

Mr. CALL. I will ask the honorable Senator if he thinks there is any constitutional power given to Congress to interfere by suggestion or in any other manner whatever with the States in the exercise of the sovereign powers which are reserved to them in the Constitution?

Mr. CONGER. I do not know. The constitutional power of Congress to go into the States has increased so much lately, and by my friends on the other side of the Chamber too, that I have not yet looked over the ground to see how far this power had been extended beyond the old suggestions. All my friends on the other side, I think, voted for the extension of the power of a board or commission in regard to quarantine.

Mr. FRYE. Yellow fever.

Mr. CONGER. Yes, yellow fever.

Mr. FRYE. And locusts.

Mr. BLAIR. And the National Board of Health.

Mr. CONGER. The constitutional objection seems to me to be as strong in those cases as any one possibly could make it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Even in the case of the Mississippi River overflow.

Mr. CONGER. My friends either did not see the objection then, or permitted it to pass unnoticed. I might ask what power there is to extend relief to the sufferers by the overflow of the Mississippi? There is a damage done to a few thousand individuals by the overflow of that river, by the destruction of homes, of property, of life; but does any one stop to ask whether this Government has strict power to relieve a body of its people dying for want of aid? Our humanity forbids that inquiry in such a case. Here is a subject which concerns the welfare, the life, the happiness of millions of people, and yet the question of constitutional construction rises up before the minds of gentlemen to prevent our inquiring to get information, to get statistics, and to prevent an inquiry merely. The States are not meddled with, their power is not assumed to be controlled or infringed upon. If the States do not want this information they need not use it. The people want the information, Congress wants the information for its legislation upon legitimate subjects and constitutional subjects.

It has seemed to me sometimes as if, when all other arguments fail, in opposing some measure before Congress, and men are driven to the very last resort, they shelter themselves under constitutional objections and questions. I should myself, I have no doubt, if I were driven to the extremity, oppose many propositions here on constitutional grounds. That is a good shelter sometimes. I do not say that it is in this case, but when all other objections are swept away the mantle of the Constitution covers a host of delinquencies.

Mr. CALL. I merely desire to say that the Senator from Michigan does not meet the suggestion. No one was opposing, at least I was not opposing, the purpose of his bill. I merely suggested that there were persons here who regarded the Constitution as prohibiting Congress from legislating upon the subject of intemperance in the States, considering that there is an express reservation of that power to the several States.

The Senator from Michigan says we voted for a health law, for the establishment of a national quarantine, for a National Board of Health. I will not go into that argument, but I wish to say that there is no kind of analogy in the cases. He cites the case also of the joint resolution granting relief to the Mississippi overflow sufferers. The difference between that case and this is manifest. That was an act of the appropriation of public money for the relief of individual suffering. Whether there was any express power in the Constitution to do it or not, it differs from this case in that it looked to no legislation. This bill declares that the purpose of this information is to prevent intemperance in the States, and there can be no intention except an exercise of power by an act of Congress. When the bill declares that the object is to prevent a certain purpose it declares the right to use legislative means for the prevention of that purpose, not moral means, and that is the view which is held here.

I should be very glad to vote for the general bill; I am not of that class of people who see a constitutional objection to everything; but I think it would be wise and it would be only a fair concession to the opinions of gentlemen upon this subject who entertain constitutional scruples, that the language of the bill should be made to suit their ideas when it can be done without injuring the efficiency of the bill.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, since I have been in the Senate I have voted for a good many resolutions of inquiry, and for some bills of inquiry also, as to matters in the States with which at the time I could not see that Congress had anything to do. I was once put upon a committee, under the leadership of the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. TELLER,] to look into the elections in some of the Southern States. I did not see exactly what Congress could do with that information when it received it. On the contrary, in the face of two express decisions of the Supreme Court, I was of the opinion that Congress could do nothing. Yet I voted for the inquiry, and performed the duty that was assigned to me upon that committee to the best of my capacity. I might cite several other instances in which inquiries like this have been directed without any particular or special purpose and object in the passage of the bill, or resolutions providing for the inquiries, as to what Congress would or could do afterward with them.

This is an inquiry into a large and comprehensive subject. It relates to information upon all branches of that subject as far as the commission may be able to obtain it. I think the inquiry would be incomplete unless the clause which is objected to by the honorable Senator from Florida were in the bill, because the States having jurisdiction as heretofore to pass laws and control this matter within themselves, it is important, if we are to know any thing about it as the law-making power of the United States that we should know what has been the effect of the State laws. I cannot see how the inquiry would be complete and full without that examination. There is nothing said now as to what Congress will do with the information when we have it. That will be an after-inquiry; it will be an after-question. If it comes as a mere matter of information, and Congress determines that it can do nothing with it, it will be simply a matter that we have been informed about but upon which we cannot legislate. If it is determined that Congress can do something with it, then Congress will have the information before it upon which to act.

There is another suggestion which I wish to make to the Senate. There are now upon the table a number of resolutions touching this matter, among them one or two or probably more providing for a constitutional amendment to prevent the alcoholic liquor traffic. I believe the honorable Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] has introduced once or twice a resolution providing for the submission of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit this traffic. In view of the fact that propositions are before Congress to amend the Constitution in this respect, this information would not only be important but it would be absolutely necessary. We could not proceed to legislate in reference to an amendment of the Constitution upon this subject without that information with any proper degree of intelligence. I know I am not mistaken when I say that the Senator from New Hampshire has introduced such a proposition twice, and probably other Senators have done so, but I am not sure.

As a matter of information, looking to future legislation, whether through the organic law or through the statutory law, you cannot deprive Congress of the power to resort to this as a means by which the information can be secured. That is the overriding argument with me. I am not saying now that I am in favor of such a constitutional amendment; I am not saying that such an amendment would be proper; but a great many persons have said it would be proper. A great many other persons have said it would not be proper. It is a very debatable question. It is that kind of a question about which gentlemen may very well differ. But one thing is sure, that before I am brought to legislate upon that question I should like to have this information, since we are going to establish a commission, to see in what direction such legislation should be had, if it is determined that it must be had.

That is the reason why I think this matter is properly in the bill. I have favored the reference of the bill to a committee, because all other propositions looking to this same matter upon the table should be referred to some committee; but as the Senate has seen proper to pass upon the bill without such a reference, I am in favor of the bill, and I am in favor, for the reasons just given, of this particular clause in the bill.

Mr. CALL. I should like my friend, the Senator from Arkansas, to allow me to ask him a question.

Mr. GARLAND. Certainly.

Mr. CALL. I think his argument is a very correct one and a very conclusive one; it establishes the pertinency of this information to the question of a change of the Constitution. In that respect certainly the information is valuable. I ask my learned friend, however, whether such an amendment to the Constitution would not be an entire subversion of our system of government, the Constitution giving to the States power over their domestic affairs, and to the National Government as now constituted only certain specific powers?

Mr. GARLAND. To give the Senator what is termed a categorical answer, probably I am not now prepared to do; but I will say that it would look that way very much to me at this time. As I said a few minutes since, this is a very debatable question. If upon proper discussion and investigation of it, with all the facts before us, I should be of that opinion, I should vote against such a constitutional amendment. That is as definite as I can be now upon that proposition. I am of the opinion that this is a matter within State control; but upon further investigation I may possibly change that opinion. I was of opinion at one time, after reading the decision in Gibbons vs. Ogden, in 9 Wheaton, that we could not establish a health board, but upon a further investigation of that matter I changed my opinion and made a speech of some length in the Senate to show the country that Congress could establish such a board, and Congress did establish it. If it should prove upon investigation and upon this information that I should be of the opinion that such an amendment of the Constitution would be subversive of the rights of the States, I should most certainly vote against it.

Mr. FRYE. I do not know whether it is in order to move an amendment to an amendment already made, but I desire to say that there is a limitation put upon the time within which the report of the commission shall be made to one year from the passage of the act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will inform the Senator from Maine that an amendment is in order.

Mr. FRYE. Then I move to extend the one year to eighteen months, so as to read:

Within eighteen months after the passage of this act.

The inquiry is very broad; the commission has been enlarged; there will be difficulty in getting the members together, especially where they work without pay; and in my judgment they will need the whole of eighteen months. I ask the Senate to consent to that amendment. I accepted the amendment making the time one year, and now I ask that the time may be extended six months longer, making it eighteen months.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. FRYE,] making the time in which the commission shall report eighteen months instead of one year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read the third time in full.

The bill was read the third time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a commission of seven persons, not more than four of whom shall be of the same political party nor be advocates of prohibition, who shall be selected solely with reference to personal fitness and capacity for an honest, impartial, and thorough investigation, and who shall hold office until their duties shall be accomplished, but not to exceed two years. It shall be their duty to investigate the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to revenue and taxation, and its general economic, criminal, moral, and scientific aspects in connection with pauperism, crime, social vice, the public health, and general welfare of the people; and also to inquire as to the practical results of license and prohibitory legislation for the prevention of intemperance in the several States of the Union.

SEC. 2. That the said commissioners shall serve without salary; that the necessary expenses incidental to said investigation, not exceeding $10,000, shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, upon vouchers to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, and for this purpose the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. It shall be the further duty of said commissioners to report the result of their investigation, with such suggestions and recommendations as they may see fit to make, and the expenses attending the same, to the President, within eighteen months after the passage of this act, to be transmitted by him to Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. PUGH and Mr. VEST called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. RANSOM, (when Mr. BROWN'S name was called.) I am requested by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] to state to the Senate that he is paired on this question with the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. SAUNDERS.]

Mr. FARLEY, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. KELLOGG.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLUMB, (when the name of Mr. WILLIAMS was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] but I have arranged with his colleague so as to transfer the pair to the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. JONES.] If the Senator from Kentucky were present, I presume he would vote "nay." I vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. WINDOM. I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] on all political questions. I understand he would vote "nay" on this question, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. FERRY. I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] on all political questions, but I believe this is not a political question; therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I am paired upon the question of the passage of the bill with the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. JACKSON.] If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. ALDRICH. My colleague [Mr. ANTHONY] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. CAMDEN.] If present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT. I was paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON] upon the Chinese bill. I understand that he is sick. I do not think he understands that I am paired with him on any thing but the Chinese bill.

Mr. TELLER. I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON] on political questions.

Mr. PLATT. Therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. GROOME. Upon questions connected with this bill on which the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] and myself disagree, I am paired with him; but if he were present, he would vote "yea" upon the passage of the bill. I therefore vote "yea," in accordance with my own convictions.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—34.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Lapham,	Plumb,
Allison,	Garland,	McDill,	Rollins,
Blair,	George,	McMillan,	Sawyer,

So the bill was passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 9th instant approved and signed the following bills:

An act (S. No. 1233) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the construction of a marine hospital in the city of Memphis, Tennessee;" and

An act (S. No. 892) for the relief of Warren Hall.

The message also announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following act and joint resolution:

An act (S. No. 578) to authorize the erection of a statue of Chief-Justice Marshall; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 45) to authorize the Secretary of War to use hospital tents for the relief of sufferers from the overflow of the Mississippi River.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (S. R. No. 47) authorizing the Secretary of War to use Government vessels for the transportation and distribution of rations furnished by the United States to the sufferers by the Mississippi overflow; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 4466) making appropriations for the Agricultural Department of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (H. R. No. 4754) to admit free of duty certain steam-plow machinery now at the port of San Francisco was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 161) making an appropriation to enable the Light-House Board to meet the extraordinary expenses consequent upon the flood in the Mississippi River was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 140) to print certain eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Michael P. O'Connor was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1052) in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund.

Mr. BAYARD. I merely submit to a vote of the Senate—I ask only for that—whether they will give precedence to the Japanese indemnity bill over the tariff-commission bill. It is proper I should state that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. SLATER] is prepared to address the Senate and has given notice that he intended to address the Senate on the tariff-commission bill to-day. I wish the Senate simply to understand that, without desiring to antagonize the bill of the honorable Senator from Alabama. On the contrary, I am disposed to yield my share of support to the bill he has in charge when it is brought before the Senate. It is a mere question of the priority of business. I hope the Senate will vote down the motion to take up the Japanese indemnity bill, and then proceed with the tariff-commission bill.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish merely to say that I am satisfied we can dispose of this House bill to-day without difficulty. There will be perhaps a very limited debate upon it. As far as I am concerned, I do not care to debate the bill extensively, because the report of the committee has endeavored to set forth all the facts in relation to the case and the grounds of action that this Government is expected to take. The bill of the honorable Senator from Delaware will probably take some time. The honorable Senator from Massachusetts said yesterday he thought it would take a month. We can get this House bill out of the way to-day without any difficulty, and then have a free road to bring forward any of the other more important measures.

The House has passed this bill I may say unanimously and sent it to us, and I think in a short time comparatively we can dispose of it. It has been so much discussed and is so well understood by the Senate and by the people of the country who have paid any attention to it, that I think we shall economize time greatly by taking up the bill this afternoon and closing the week with it. I hope therefore the Senate will allow the bill to be taken up now.

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to make a suggestion which I think will suit all around. Let the Senator from Alabama get up his bill and then let it be laid aside informally for the purpose of allowing the Senator from Oregon to address the Senate upon the tariff-commission bill.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection at all to that course.

Mr. GARLAND. That will accommodate all sides, I think. I have merely made the suggestion as a means of accommodating all.

Mr. HOAR. That does not seem to me to be quite a fair suggestion in reference to other matters. Here is the tariff-commission bill, and it is to be taken up very soon. It does not seem to me that it is quite fair to take up another bill and lay it aside informally to permit debate on the tariff-commission bill, unless there is some special reason affecting the convenience of the Senator from Oregon why he should prefer to debate that bill when it is not pending rather than when it is. I hope that the Presidential-count bill will be taken up and disposed of.

I desire to move the Senate to take up the bill providing for the Presidential count. That is a very important matter, and it is a matter which can be settled now probably in a very short period, for the time is auspicious. In the existing condition of political parties in this country, I do not think any ingenuity will be likely to suggest that it will affect favorably or unfavorably the fortunes of either political party in the country. It is a bill which has commanded the assent of gentlemen of both parties; and in addition to that consideration this is a time of profound political quiet. Probably there is less earnest political feeling, less political antagonism or bitterness in the country at this moment than has existed before within the memory of living man. While the parties of course differ in regard to policies and in regard to persons, yet in the public measures, in regard to all the public questions now prominent before the country, the division does not run upon party lines or upon sectional lines. The sections, parties, persons, engaged in political affairs, are in a condition of good feeling toward one another which has not been equaled in this country since James Monroe came to the Presidency. This is a time to fix a rule which shall provide as far as we possibly can for the settlement of the great and delicate question of the Presidential election, which will not be likely soon to arrive again.

I think the Presidential-count bill could be passed within a very short time, possibly without debate, certainly with very brief debate. I shall, therefore, very earnestly claim that we should not enter upon the long and difficult question of a tariff commission until we devote the very brief time necessary for settling this matter and sending it to the House. It is important that it should be settled there this session, and to be settled in the other House this session it must go there before the appropriation bills get ripe and before the business which presses upon the House after the warm weather begins claims attention there.

Mr. MORRILL. If whenever the tariff-commission question comes up every Senator rises here with a bill that he has in charge from some committee and proposes to antagonize it, it gives rise to the indefinite postponement of all action. The bill suggested by the Senator from Alabama and the bill suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts will not suffer in the least if they are postponed for a day or two or for a week. The idea that the debate on the tariff-commission bill will be prolonged for an indefinite period is without foundation. I know of only a single speech that is to be made; possibly there may be two or three; but whatever number of speeches are to be made should be listened to and the bill for a tariff commission should be disposed of, so that we may give a sufficient time for the commission to act if they are to report at the next session of Congress.

I trust, therefore, that all those who are in favor of the tariff commission will vote down every other proposition until that is taken up. When that bill is taken up, I will say to the Senator from Alabama for one, at the heel of to-day's session perhaps, I would be perfectly willing that it should be laid aside temporarily for action upon his bill; but I hope that the tariff-commission bill will be taken up and become the regular order.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Vermont appeals only to those who are friends of the tariff commission to vote to take up the bill. He will meet with a very earnest support from some of us who are very much opposed to his tariff commission. We desire to take it up, because we think the Senate and the House ought to deal promptly with that question, unless the postponement of all reform in tariff taxation, which I think is desired by the men who are now protected, is to be granted.

Mr. McPHERSON. The question as to what bill is to be considered is likely to occupy the attention of the Senate during the rest of the day, and no progress will be made. Therefore, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. ["No!" "No!"] There are matters, as is well known, which we ought to consider in executive session.

The motion was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 9, noes not counted.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to say just a word in reply to the suggestion made by the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK.] For myself, I am anxious to take up the bill for a tariff commission, having no objection whatever to the two bills that are contesting for precedence. I presume I shall vote for both of them. I am quite sure I shall vote for the bill moved by the Senator from Alabama.

The Senator from Kentucky is very greatly mistaken in saying now as he has said, or some others of the same belief have said before, that those who are now protected are opposed to action on the tariff. It has been intimated that the New England influence was in that direction. I speak for a part of New England. My constituents and friends who are interested in manufactures and to some extent in protection, who are regarded by the Senator from Kentucky as being the special advocates of protection, are earnestly in favor of a careful revision of the tariff, and desire that it shall begin as soon as possible.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BECK. Have those gentlemen in New England any reason to doubt that their Senators and Represenatives are able to deal with this question?

Mr. HAWLEY. That is another question. It is a question of policy as to the manner of taking up the matter of tariff revision. Whether we shall have a commission is merely an incidental question. I am in favor of it now, not because I suppose that a tariff commission will relieve us of any responsibility whatever, as to the details or principles of a bill, but it would bring in, or it should bring in a finding of facts that would be very valuable and very instructive. However, if the tariff-commission bill is to linger in the way it has been lingering, I for one am ready to let the whole subject drop, and call upon our friends in the other House, or urge them so far as we may constitutionally, to take the subject up and call upon the Treasury Department for the draft of a reasonable, a sensible bill, and the Treasury Department could lay one before us that would overcome many of the irregularities and dispose of many of the crudities of the present system, and that the House should then take up the subject and go to work upon it.

I will vote in any direction to bring about a resolute attempt to give us a revision of the tariff. I say that as representing a protective constituency. I do not desire to enter upon the general merits of the whole protective question, although I have very decided opinions upon it; but I will merely suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that the time may come when he will find that the most violent or extreme friends of protection are not to be found in New England. If there is to be a general attempt to break down that wholesome doctrine and throw us over to what is falsely styled free trade, we shall see to it; and we know that New England will not be the greatest sufferer. I am for resolute, direct, immediate action in the direction of a wise revision of the tariff, whether by a commission or by the usual mode.

One single word more. I am inclined to believe that the opposition to this measure comes from the opposite side. We are both inclined to charge each other with delaying this measure. I saw in a leading journal, a metropolitan journal published in New York City, a while ago a suggestion that it was not wise to undertake a revision of the tariff now because it was convenient to keep the irregularities, crudities, and misfortunes of the present tariff prominent before the public as furnishing arguments in favor of free trade.

The gradual change in business in many directions, the changes in processes of manufacture, the cheapening of production, and a hundred things that I need not specify, have brought it to pass that the present tariff is a machine very much out of gear. It hurts American manufactures in some things, favoring the foreign manufacturers. In short, it is inevitable, it is to be seen without argument, that in the progress of the country a tariff, no matter how wisely drawn, must require revision. My friends and my constituents interested in business desire peace. While the tariff stands as it is now, it is a subject of continual agitation and irritation. We should be able to know, if we can, five or ten years ahead what we may depend upon from the American Congress. We know the tariff ought to be revised, and we believe there is a general sentiment for it. I say there is among the men called the protected classes.

Mr. BECK. I have only to say that I know nothing about the metropolitan press or the wishes of these great organs; but there is not an organ that is owned by the protectionists (I use the word "owned" because some of them admit that they are directly in the pay of the Bessemer steel and other combinations) which is not clamoring for a commission. The Constitution of the United States requires Congress to pass upon all subjects relative to taxation, and all I ask is that we shall have prompt action. When the Senator from Vermont called upon the friends of the commission to stand by the bill I took occasion to say that as one very much opposed to his commission I would vote with him now and at all times to settle this question and have it determined promptly by the Senate so that some change can, as I hope, be had in the tariff, which will give relief to the people.

Mr. MORGAN. We see now, from the little skirmish that has occurred here this evening, that there is going to be a very protracted debate before the tariff-commission bill can be disposed of. I called up the Japanese indemnity bill this afternoon because it seemed to have no enemies in the Senate. It passed the House, as I stated, almost unanimously, or indeed by a unanimous vote, I believe, and I called it up this afternoon because I thought we could get through with it and have it out of the way; and then those gentlemen who are anxious to antagonize each other on the tariff question can have a fair chance and there will be nothing left for the Senate to do but to consider that question.

The Senate of the United States, after having dealt with one eastern nation yesterday in what I am compelled to admit is a harsh way, I hope will on this day signalize a disposition to do an act of justice which everybody considers ought to be done. I pledge the Senate that I will occupy a very small portion of time in the advocacy of the bill, only sufficient to bring the merits of the bill clearly before the Senate in the simplest form. I hope, therefore, the Senate will indulge the Committee on Foreign Relations in taking up the Japanese indemnity bill this afternoon.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I have but a word to say. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] should take notice of the fact that all delay in the revision of the tariff has come from the Senator from Kentucky himself and those who take the position he takes. It is now near two years since the Senator from Kentucky began this opposition to a commission to revise the tariff, a commission bill introduced from his side of the Chamber, urging the reasons he has urged to-day, including that which he has repeated to-day, that all the protection men are desirous of delay, while his opposition and the opposition of those who hold to the doctrines and talk as he does prevented the passage of a law a year ago which contained in it a provision that the commission should report by last December.

The Senator opposed that bill, and opposed it claiming all the time that those who advocated it wanted delay. He has caused delay in the passage of the commission bill by that opposition up to this time, while on the other hand he has done nothing himself, nor have those who advocate the opposition to this commission done anything, toward any other revision of the tariff. He has contented himself with talking as he has to-day about the journals that are owned by protectionists (for many of them, he says, confess that they are in the pay of protectionists) that want delay in the revision of the tariff. I do not know any journal of that kind. If the Senator knows a journal that confesses itself to be in the pay of the protectionists, and advocates a delay in the revision of the tariff, he should name it here. Any method that will produce a fair and intelligent revision of the tariff, and the most fair and most intelligent revision, is the one which all those gentlemen here in this body and the other and all those interests outside, which the Senator from Kentucky daily denounces, are anxious for; and it is only because it appears to them that a more intelligent and more fair and honest revision of the tariff will be worked out through such a commission as this bill proposes that they desire it. It is only that which they want. It is not because they are apprehensive that the principle of protection will suffer in this body or in any other.

The day has passed and gone when any of the arguments such as the Senator from Kentucky, shutting his eyes to every thing else, clings to with the tenacity of despair will have any appreciable effect. The day has gone for any considerable portion of the American people or their legislators to listen to such arguments. It is only a method, and the most intelligent and most practical method that is desired to approach this subject. I do not care whether it be a commission or any other method, but the experience of the Senator, as well as my own experience, leads me to believe that the Senator cannot doubt that any attempt to revise the tariff by the old method must result in the old result—a new bill changed in this respect and changed in that respect, but in the whole as unequal, as unwise, as complicated, and requiring as intelligent revision after it is through as before.

Mr. President, I despair of any such thing as a rational, intelligent, and proper revision of the tariff through the old methods of legislation without the help and without the guidance which will come from expert examination of this subject in its various relations one with another. It has come to be understood now that no particular branch of industry can be affected without affecting the whole, and it is only that mind which can contemplate the whole and the relations of any particular duty in a tariff bill to all the industries and all the revenues of the Government that can bring out an intelligent result which will abide.

I hope, therefore, that the Senator from Kentucky, anxious as he seems to be, dying as he seems to be to have a revision of the tariff, will not throw himself across every attempt to work out that result as he has for the last two years.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, the last statement of the Senator from Massachusetts is a fair illustration of the want of sincerity of the whole proposition. He says I am anxious, indeed I have been dying for two years, to prevent a revision of the tariff; that I have been endeavoring for a long time to continue the privilege to a few men in Massachusetts and elsewhere to take 50 or 60 per cent. profit more than what is decent or honest out of the pockets of all the people of the United States as a subsidy; that I have been making a struggle to prevent the people from obtaining any relief from the present tariff. That is about as fair a statement as that which the Senator and his friends made in 1875, when, under the pretense that the sinking fund was in danger, they added 10 per cent. to the then tariff by restoring the 10 per cent. taken off in 1872. He then pledged himself to obtain from the change he proposed and carried $38,000,000 more revenue to protect the so-called sacred sinking fund. Instead of that the result was to take $29,000,000 from the revenue from tariff taxation while adding 10 per cent. to the burden imposed by existing tariff rates. And now, because I oppose a commission which I have always believed and yet believe will bend all its energies solely to maintain the existing condition of things whereby forty-five million people are taxed 50 per cent. on everything they wear, on everything they use, from their cradle to their coffin, to put money into the pockets of a few protected monopolists, and because I demand that the two Houses of Congress shall agree at once to proceed without a commission of irresponsible outsiders and without delay to remedy those evils, he says that I am dying in order to obtain delay so as to perpetuate the present condition of things! That is, as I said, a fair illustration of the sincerity of all professions and intimations of that sort.

If the Senator from Vermont on the day when this commission was proposed by him had said to the Senate and through us to the House of Representatives that the tariff needed revision, that we begged the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives to proceed at once to grant relief, something would have been done ere now; and if that committee had laid anything before us, bills could have been passed by this time whereby hundreds of millions of taxation could have been removed from labor of the country and every man in it would have been benefited.

The bill provides for a commission to make a report next December or January, when only three months of this Congress will remain; and this is said to be in the interest of a removal of burdens; and that nine men are to be picked by the President having more intelligence than the Senators and Representatives on the respective floors of this Congress, who are by the Constitution intrusted with the consideration of these questions. I deny that any outsiders are better fitted to do this work than the Senators and Representatives chosen by the people. The commission will be made up of men responsible to nobody, men who can call whom they please, men who may be, certainly can be, packed jurors, paid to support their employers; and, if the leading organs of the protectionist party can be relied upon, men are to be selected because they are in favor of particular interests, and men who oppose protection are assumed to be no more fitted to sit upon that commission than men who cannot take the oath required would be fit to sit in this Hall.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator seems to have more confidence in a Republican House of Representatives than he has had in a Democratic House.

Mr. BECK. Not a bit more; not half as much.

Mr. MORRILL. The House of Representatives for six years, I believe, has been Democratic, and they have utterly failed to pass upon the tariff question. Now, from his position I would rather argue that he has more confidence in a Republican House than he has had in a Democratic House.

Mr. BECK. Not at all, but I have some faith that the people of the country are becoming advised as to the extent of extortion and iniquity imposed upon them by the Senator from Vermont and his colleagues in maintaining the existing tariff, and in the so-called temporary legislation which he clamored for during the war, which he assured the people was to be removed as soon as the onerous burdens of internal taxation were removed, and as soon as those infant pets of his were able to stand upon their feet; certainly it was to be done as soon as they had procured machinery with which they could compete with other people; then we would have our own ships, and we would no longer seek to tax all other industries to support a few. But now they have become so helpless, so hopelessly helpless, that the Senator from Massachusetts has to rise in his place in the Senate and say that there are only a few crazy people, of whom I am one, who have any hope or belief that the idea of protection will ever be abandoned; that it has now found a lodgment in the American mind and must be maintained at all hazards. There is to be no such thing tolerable as any manufacture without a subsidy, and without taxing forty-five millions of people in order to put money into the pockets of about five hundred thousand, and a man is a lunatic who dares to assert that any respectable number of the American people believe that it is not honest legislation to tax every man who works on a farm, every man who follows his profession, every man who is a mechanic in all the great arts of life, unless he is rich enough to own machinery to be run by Chinese labor, over which we have struggled so long, provided he can get them for 10 per cent. or 20 per cent. or 50 per cent. cheaper than he can hire the American labor; for that seems to have been the struggle of the Senators from Massachusetts for the last two days, although it was done under the guise of great concern for humanity and religion and moral ideas.

We understand how easy it is to say that. If they can only get protection for machinery and Chinese labor with the machinery that they now have, which is equal in producing power to all the human labor in the world, and make the American people pay them 50 per cent. more than their products are worth, and make the unprotected farmer send his product abroad to compete with the so-called pauper in Europe in the sale of his goods, and furnish the country with all the means to keep up what is called the balance of trade, which goes into the pockets of the manufacturers; if the Senator can only get a commission to say that all these facts, discriminations, and oppression of the masses which are so apparent are not true, and the President would make the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] president of that commission or some man he would select, I have no doubt we would get a white-washing report made that would be very valuable in sustaining the views he entertains, and in perpetuating the system of subsidies he so much desires to make permanent.

I propose action, prompt action, by the two Houses. I propose, if this Republican Congress does not give relief, to call upon the people to send men here who will; and if the Democratic House of Representatives did not give the relief that ought to have been given, and it is perhaps for that reason that they are in the minority now, if Democrats or those who call themselves Democrats are opposed to a tariff for revenue and are in favor of imposing a tariff for protection, regardless of revenue, then I hope the people will keep them at home and send other men who will look to the revenues of the country and not to enrich a few at the expense of all, and thus perform their constitutional duty.

Mr. MORGAN. I rise to a point of order. I desire to call the attention of the President pro tempore to Rule No. 8 which prohibits debate on the merits of a question on a motion to take it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point is well taken.

Mr. BECK. I will sit down if the point is well taken. I want to save time, but I do not want to be told I am dying to aid protection.

Mr. DAWES. I hope the Senate will indulge me a single moment. I want to know if there was ever anything more absurd in this world than the cry which the Senator from Kentucky——

Mr. HARRIS. I raise the question of order on the Senator from Massachusetts as it was raised on the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, does the eighth rule apply to anything but business in the morning hour?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will look at it.

Mr. DAWES. While the Chair is looking at it, if the Senate will allow me to say a word or two, my dying friend from Kentucky——

Mr. HARRIS. As the Senator from Kentucky was cut off before he had concluded, I object to the Senator from Massachusetts proceeding.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator from Tennessee is in favor of fair play, he will not cut me off until I get as far as the Senator from Kentucky did.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Massachusetts had been heard until he was satisfied at the hearing, and the Senator from Kentucky was cut off before he got through.

Mr. DAWES. Before he got satisfied.

Mr. HARRIS. Yes.

Mr. DAWES. That is no reason why I should not go on. I wish the Senate would allow me to say a word.

I want to call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky to the absurdity of his repeating for the hundredth time in the ears of the people of Kentucky and the country that there are people in Massachusetts pursuing a business that they can go into just when they please, and that Massachusetts people are receiving 50 or 60 per cent.——

Mr. HARRIS. I call the Senator from Massachusetts to order.

Mr. BECK. I said nothing about your per cent.——

Mr. HARRIS. Now I call the Senator from Kentucky to order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point is that it is against the rules of the Senate to discuss the merits on this motion. The Chair so decides.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Massachusetts has been in the habit of scolding so long here that he feels privileged.

Mr. DAWES. I was not discussing the merits. I was discussing the speech of the Senator from Kentucky; that was not the merits of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama, to take up the bill (H. R. No. 1052) in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 16, noes 24.

Mr. MORGAN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. VOORHEES. I beg the attention of the Senate for a single moment. I do not think this measure will take much time, and it is one of the very highest moment to our character for honor and good faith with a people not so strong as we are. We have their money which does not belong to us and which ought to be refunded, and on that point I believe there are no two opinions. I believe it is conceded by every one that we have money from the Japanese Government that does not belong to us; and that being the case, I——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President——

Mr. VOORHEES. I will except the Senator from Vermont if he desires to be excepted. I except the Senator from Vermont if he prefers to be classed in that way. With the exception of the Senator from Vermont, then, as far as heard from, I will say——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is discussing the merits of the bill. The Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Massachusetts were stopped a moment ago.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will submit to the rule in a moment. I merely desire, in the utmost good faith and respect to the Senate, to ask the Senate to consider this question. It is one which has been before my mind frequently, and I think good faith and self-respect require us to dispose of matters of this kind between us and foreign countries.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll on Mr. MORGAN's motion.

The call having been concluded,

Mr. McPHERSON, (after having voted in the affirmative.) I wish to change my vote. As I am of the committee that reported the tariff-commission bill, I vote "nay."

Mr. FERRY. I am paired on political questions, but this is not one, and I vote "nay."

Mr. FRYE. I am paired with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. HILL,] but under the arrangement, his colleague informs me, that there is no objection to my voting. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 37; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Brown,	George,	Miller of Cal.,	Van Wyck,
Call,	Harris,	Morgan,	Voorhees.
Davis of Illinois,	Hoar,	Pendleton,
Farley,	Jonas,	Pugh,

So the motion was not agreed to.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a communication from the Secretary of War of the 6th instant, and accompanying papers, recommending the passage of an act making certain debts incurred by soldiers a lien against their pay.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 10, 1882.

He also laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, with accompanying papers, asking, for reasons stated by him, that Congress may be requested to make a special appropriation for paving a portion of the roadway of Hanover street and curbing and paving the sidewalk of that street on the side next the Government property at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Maryland.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 10, 1882.

He also laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of the Interior of the 9th instant, submitting, with accompanying papers, an estimate of appropriation for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the Ute commission, appointed under section 2 of the act of June 15, 1880.

The matter is commended to the early action of Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 10, 1882.

MILITARY WARRANT LAND LOCATIONS.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask leave to call attention to the bill (S. No. 67) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain and certify the amount of land located with military warrants in the States described therein, and for other purposes, and I give notice that at an early period, some time next week, I shall ask the Senate to proceed to its consideration.

Mr. ALLISON. That is a very important and urgent bill.

TARIFF AND TAX COMMISSION.

Mr. BAYARD. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 22) to provide for the appointment of a commission to investigate the question of the tariff and internal-revenue laws.

The motion was agreed to; and the consideration of the bill was resumed as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SLATER. Mr. President——

Mr. PENDLETON. I ask the Senator from Oregon to yield to me for a moment. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up Senate bill No. 1415. It is a bill reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia for the purpose of closing an alley in the northern part of the city.

Mr. BAYARD. Let the regular order be laid aside informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there unanimous consent to laying aside the pending bill informally to take up the bill indicated by the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. PENDLETON. It will lead to no debate.

Mr. ROLLINS. I think there is no objection to the bill, but I desire to ask at the conclusion of it to take up the bill to which I have already called the attention of the Senate, which will occupy but a few moments.

ALLEY IN SQUARE NO. 195.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1415) to provide for the closing of an alley in square 195, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the bill ought to be explained.

Mr. PENDLETON. I will explain to the Senator from Iowa that it is a bill for the closing of an alley in the northern part of the city. All the owners of the abutting property and the adjacent property agree to it and have passed their deeds in accordance with the provisions of this bill, and it was supposed that the measure could be carried through without the assistance of the commissioners of the District, but they found some objection to doing it without authority, and they prepared this bill for the action of Congress.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the language of this bill. It is that "on the petition of all the owners of property abutting on a certain alley running north and south between Rhode Island avenue and O street, about one hundred feet east of Sixteenth street, in square 195, in the city of Washington, or any portion thereof," the commissioners are instructed "to declare said alley, or such portion thereof as may be included in said petition, closed." So that if the two owners at the outer end of the alley concur in wanting to shut it up the commissioners must close it under this bill, even if the owners further in, who cannot get to their property abutting on the alley without the use of the outer portion, do not agree. It seems to me the petition should be of all the owners of the land abutting on the alley, and then let the commissioners shut up "the alley or any portion thereof" as the petition may require.

Mr. PENDLETON. The owners of all the property abutting on the alley have consented that a certain portion of it shall be closed.

Mr. HOAR. Then strike out, in the eighth line, the words "or any portion thereof," and it does exactly that.

Mr. PENDLETON. The only trouble is that that may require anew their consent, which is already given, and which might be withdrawn, though I do not think it would be. I have no reason to apprehend it would be withdrawn. The alley that is provided for in lieu of the one to be closed, if the Senator will look at the plat which I have here, meets entirely the convenience of all the parties. The only effect of the bill is to remove an alley ten feet in a certain direction.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me if the Senator understands my point he will not object to the amendment. This bill provides that on the petition of all the owners of land abutting on a particular alley, or of the owners abutting on any part of the alley, such part of the alley shall be shut up; so that the owners of the outer end can, under this bill, cut off the interior owners without their consent.

Mr. PENDLETON. I consent to the amendment.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator consents to the amendment. I move, in the eighth line, to strike out the words "or any portion thereof."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT ACCOMMODATIONS.

Mr. McPHERSON. With the consent of the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. SLATER,] who is willing to postpone his remarks until the next sitting of the Senate, I move an executive session.

Mr. ROLLINS. I desire that the Senator will yield for two minutes. I ask the Senate to consider Senate bill No. 1361.

Mr. McPHERSON. What is it?

Mr. ROLLINS. I ask that it be read as part of my remarks.

Mr. BAYARD. Does the Senator propose to displace the regular order before the Senate?

Mr. ROLLINS. Only informally.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator from New Hampshire proposes a bill to give an opportunity to the Secretary of the Interior to rent or lease some building in order to afford room for the clerks already authorized for the Pension Bureau.

Mr. ROLLINS. We have appropriated the money to pay the clerks, but have no room for them to work in.

Mr. McPHERSON. I withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate lay aside the regular order temporarily and take up the bill indicated by the Senator from New Hampshire?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1361) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to rent for a term of years the building at the southwest corner of Pennsylvania avenue and Thirteenth street northwest, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the sum of $20,000 be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of enabling the Secretary of the Interior to rent or lease from year to year a suitable building or buildings for additional accommodations for the Pension Bureau.

Mr. ROLLINS. Before the question is put I desire to move an amendment to the amendment of the committee, after consultation with the committee and with the Secretary of the Interior. I move to strike out at the end of the amendment the two words "Pension Bureau" and insert "Department of the Interior," so as to enable the Secretary of the Interior to provide for the Land Office as well as the Pension Bureau.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read, "A bill to provide additional accommodations for the Department of the Interior."

OTOE AND MISSOURIA RESERVATION.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask that the pending order be informally laid aside for a few moments for the consideration of the bill, which I will explain.

Mr. BAYARD. If it does not displace the regular order, I shall not object.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I can readily explain the necessity of this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What bill does the Senator from Nebraska propose to take up?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Senate bill No. 930.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 930) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of the remainder of the reservation of the Confederated Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1881.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I propose a short amendment, which has been examined by the Committee on Indian Affairs, who reported this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are amendments of the Committee on Indian Affairs which are first to be acted on. They will be read.

The first amendment reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs was to fill the blank in line 17 of section 1 by inserting "five;" so as to read "for the period of five years."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 4.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask why that is stricken out? Why are the Indians prohibited from having a home and habitation?

Mr. DAWES. I do not think it ought to be stricken out myself if it is the section I have in my mind. The bill is in charge of the colleague of the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. SAUNDERS.] My own opinion about that section is such that I shall vote against striking it out.

Mr. TELLER. What is the section?

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Massachusetts does not concur in the recommendation of the committee to strike out that section?

Mr. DAWES. I do not.

Mr. TELLER. Let the section be read.

The Acting Secretary read section 4, as follows:

SEC. 4. That if any member of the said confederated tribes residing at the date of the aforesaid act of March 3, 1881, upon any of the lands authorized to be sold by said act, and who has made valuable improvements thereon, shall elect to remain on the lands now occupied by him or her, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause a patent to issue to the person so elected for one hundred and sixty acres of land, to include his or her improvements: Provided, That the lands acquired by any Indian under the provisions of this section shall not be subject to alienation, lease, or incumbrance, either by voluntary conveyance by the grantee or his heirs, or by the judgment, order, or decree of any court, or subject to taxation of any character, but shall remain inalienable and not subject to taxation, lien, or incumbrance for the period of —— years, which restriction shall be incorporated in the patent.

Mr. DAWES. I will state what I understand to be the reasons which controlled the committee in proposing to strike out that section. I shall vote against striking it out myself. The committee were of opinion that there were no Indians to whom it would apply. There was some division in the committee about exempting the land of Indians in severalty from taxation. There was considerable discussion in the committee about that, and the committee having been informed (whether correctly or not I do not know) that there were no Indians to whom this would apply, got around the difficulty by striking out the section.

Mr. TELLER. Have they not any improvements?

Mr. DAWES. No, there were no Indians that wanted to remain, it was said. That was the statement. Of course what transpired in committee I do not think it proper for me to state; but I did not see any harm in letting the section remain, and I did not see any difficulty in exempting the land of an Indian who is set up in severalty from taxation for a number of years, and therefore I was in favor of the section remaining because it could not be made absolutely certain that there would not be some of these Indians who desired to remain. But the section was stricken out by the committee for the reasons I have stated, unless I am mistaken.

Mr. COCKRELL. Did the committee inquire of these sundry Indians to know whether any of them wanted to remain or not?

Mr. DAWES. My recollection is that the committee took the statement of the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. SAUNDERS,] who is a member of the committee, to the fact that there were no Indians there of the character described in section 4.

Mr. COCKRELL. The committee made no further examination of that question?

Mr. DAWES. None so far as I recollect.

Mr. PLUMB. I was not aware of the fourth section of this bill having been stricken out, and in fact only knew about the general terms of it from the statement made to me by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as to the legislation that had been proposed; but I desire to say in regard to this section that I am satisfied that it is to the interest of the Indians that it should be stricken out. It is possible, and I think perhaps it may be probable, that at the time of the breaking up of this reservation some of the Indians would have liked to stay there on the land on which they had made homes, but after the remaining part of the tribe has been moved away from that reservation and to a remote point in the Indian Territory, it will undoubtedly result that that opinion or desire will change.

In the case of the Kickapoo Indians in my State a similar provision was incorporated in the original bill, under which their reservation was sold and lands were allotted to them, some portion of which had been improved by the Indians selecting the lands. The remainder of the tribe was moved to the Indian Territory, and the result was that the individual members, by reason of their attachments to the tribal relation and to the surroundings which had been created in the Indian Territory by the removal of the tribe thereto, abandoned their lands in Kansas and went to the Indian Territory, and their lands remain to-day in Kansas unimproved, unoccupied, untaxed, a burden to the community in which they are situated and of no benefit whatever to the Indians.

Now, I regard it as absolutely certain that if the main portion of the Otoe tribe of Indians are removed from Nebraska to the Indian country or any other point from there, the fragments of the tribe which may remain will undoubtedly and inevitably follow the main portion of the tribe and leave the State, and that, too, notwithstanding any inducement that may exist now by reason of the improvements that they may have placed on the land. I think myself that it would be better for the Indians that they should all go together.

I have no doubt this bill expresses, as the other legislation has expressed, fairly the desire of the majority of the Indians to remove from the location where they are now located; and if any of them should be induced to remain by reason of the attachment they have to the personal property they have gathered about them or to the piece of land on which they have labored, that attachment will be found to be weakened and in fact entirely destroyed whenever the bulk of the Indians are removed away from their present location.

Mr. VAN WYCK. My colleague, who is on the Indian Committee, as has been stated by the Senator from Massachusetts, is conversant with the actual condition of the Indians on this reservation; he was fully informed as to what was their condition, and this provision of the bill he induced the committee to strike out. I was so anxious, and the State of Nebraska and a portion of Kansas were so anxious that the bill should be passed that we were willing to accept it with almost any modification; but I am satisfied fully that the fourth section should be stricken out.

The truth is, as has been stated by the Senator from Massachusetts on the report of my colleague, that there are no Indians really remaining upon this reservation, and this clause is substantially for the benefit of only the white trader who may possibly remain there, the white trader who has been there for years and who has intermarried with the Indians, and the only Indian left probaby on that reservation is the wife of this Indian trader, unless possibly she may have some aunts or uncles or cousins that may step in and get a little benefit of the provisions of this bill.

The tribe have gone; they desired to go and have gone from this section; and there is no sort of reason why the constitution and laws of the State of Nebraska should be ignored and violated in regard to the lands included in this reservation. That constitution and those laws provide for no exemption from taxation of any property. There is no sort of reason why this provision should be here when the advantage of it inures only to the benefit of a white man, and possibly only one, who as I say has intermarried with some squaw.

Mr. DAWES. I ought to say in behalf of the Committee on Indian Affairs that at the last session a law was passed providing, as it was supposed by the framers of the law, for everything that was to be done in reference to these Indians and their removal to the Indian Territory and the disposal of their property. The purpose of this bill is merely to supply deficiencies, defects in that law.

Mr. TELLER. There must have been very large defects in it, judging from the size of this bill.

Mr. DAWES. So it appears; but the committee acted on the information that the tribe had all gone from Nebraska except those who were remaining to dispose of their interest in this land, that nobody desired to remain there, and, therefore, although this provision was in the bill in conformity with the ordinary legislation on the subject, the committee acted—whether upon sufficient evidence or not I do not know—but they acted upon the assurance that there were no Indians belonging to this tribe who desired to remain there. It was upon that ground that the majority of the committee struck out this section from the bill.

Mr. VAN WYCK. One sentence of the letter of the Secretary of the Interior transmitting this bill, as also a sentence from the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, will show really the omission in the act of 1881, which was sought to be covered by this bill. In the letter of transmittal of the Secretary of the Interior, dated January 16, 1882, he says:

The act noted—

Referring to the act of March 3, 1881—

which will be found upon page 380 of volume 21, United States Statutes, was deemed by me to be inoperative, inasmuch as it failed to provide for the necessary expenses incident to the carrying out of certain of its provisions.

That was the only omission in the act of 1881. The other sections have been drawn here to see possibly if they could find an Indian, or a white man or a white woman with a little Indian blood in his or her veins, who could be looked after and legislated for and protected by an additional amendment, and that is the reason and object of this section 4 which has been incorporated here.

Mr. TELLER. Who drew that amendment?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will tell you where it came from in a moment. That is all the Secretary really said was the object of introducing a new bill.

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs was requested to present such draft of proposed legislation as in his opinion might be necessary in the premises; and his letter of transmittal will be found herewith.

Now I will tell the Senator from Colorado. The letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs says:

SIR: Referring to Department letter of December 10, 1881, in the matter of the sale of the Otoe and Missouria reservation in Nebraska and Kansas, under the act of March 3 last, I have the honor to transmit herewith a draft of a bill providing for such amendment of the act referred to as the necessities of the case seem to demand.

No provision is made in said act for expenses incident thereto, nor for the appraisement and sale of the valuable improvements upon the said reservation belonging to the Government or to members of the confederated tribes who desire to remove with their tribe to their new home in the Indian Territory. Neither is there any proper protection provided for such as having in good faith made selection and location of lands on their reservation, and placed valuable improvements thereon, desire to remain in the enjoyment of them.

The amended bill, as submitted, provides for these requirements, and also for the sale by private entry of all lands remaining unsold at the expiration of one year from the approval of the appraisement thereof.

That is the history of the bill from its passage in 1881; and after the Indians had been removed, after the tribe had gone, an attempt was made to have the appraisers appointed provided for by the act, but the Secretary of the Interior discovered that the act had made no provision for their payment. Hence it was that the whole proceeding was stopped, and the only thing to be done that remainad undone was, as was supposed, provision to be made for the payment of the officers necessary to be appointed to execute the act. But then some suggestion was made to the Department of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that there was a trader who had a squaw wife, and hence it was necessary that all this other matter should be ingrafted in this bill; but, as I said before, we are willing to accept it even with this, although we believe it to be wrong. I think the fourth section should be stricken out. I see no reason why that Indian trader, if he takes land in severalty and becomes its owner should be exempt from the constitution and laws of Nebraska, which apply to every other man in the State, whatever be his color, who owns and occupies a farm upon its soil.

Mr. ALLISON. There are some other provisions in this bill that I do not quite understand besides that relating to these lands and their exemption from taxation. I see in the law of 1881 that these lands were to be sold to actual settlers only, so that there was some little care taken of the white man's interests in the law of 1881. This bill provides that the lands may be sold to any person.

Mr. VAN WYCK. After one year. When they have been held in the market for the objects of the act as originally passed, then after the expiration of one year the lands may be sold.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not so understand it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That is my understanding of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I think it very likely that this section 4 is intended to place this limitation with reference to the sale of these lands after one year; but there is another remarkable omission here. The law of 1881 provided that these lands should not be sold at less than their appraised value, and in no case at less than two and one-half dollars per acre. I see that is quietly omitted here, I do not know why.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I can explain to the Senator.

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose so; and I shall be glad to have that explained. Then I find that section 5 of the act of 1881 is amended in a very important particular. You provide there for the survey, appraisement, and sale, "excluding cost of survey, appraisement, and sale" of the new reservation that these Indians are to go to. Section 5 is a provision for a new reservation. Now it is amended so as to include the costs of survey, appraisement, and sale.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator from Iowa give way a single moment?

Mr. ALLISON. I will give way entirely. I was only asking a question for information.

Mr. HAWLEY. This bill is giving rise to discussion; I do not think we are satisfied with its present condition exactly, and I move an executive session.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I hope the Senator will hear us explain this bill. We can do it in five minutes' time, I think.

Mr. HAWLEY. It has been a long time before the Senate, and there seems to be no prospect of disposing of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Connecticut is not debatable.

The motion was agreed to.

TARIFF AND TAX COMMISSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before the doors are closed the Chair will lay before the Senate the regular order, being the bill (S. No. 22) to provide for the appointment of a commission to investigate the question of the tariff and internal-revenue laws; which will be the unfinished business at the next meeting of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 10, 1882.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

GENEVA AWARD.

Mr. REED. I desire by unanimous consent the passage of this resolution, and I desire to say it is agreed upon by all parties in the Judiciary Committee the time named therein for taking up the bill will be satisfactory on all hands, if it is to the House.

Mr. RANDALL. What bill?

Mr. REED. The Geneva award bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. No. 4197) re-establishing the court of commissioners of Alabama claims and for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award be taken from the Committee of the Whole and be considered in the House, as in committee, on the third Tuesday of March, and thence from day to day until finally disposed of, not to interfere with revenue and general appropriation bills.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I object to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. SCALES. And so do I object.

Mr. REED. It is the general consent of the members of the Judiciary Committee, both those against as well as for, to take that time for consideration. I hope the gentleman from New York will not object.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I think there are other questions before this Congress which should be considered before this bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I think that bill should have a time set for its consideration.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I object until those other bills are considered.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask by unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to print some remarks on the agricultural appropriation bill, as I was ill and unable to attend the session of the House yesterday.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly. [See Appendix.]

PROTECTION OF AMERICAN CITIZENS ABROAD.

Mr. CRAPO. I ask unanimous consent to introduce resolutions, which I send to the Clerk's desk, for reference to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and that they may be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The resolutions are as follows:

At a meeting of the specially-delegated representatives of the Land League and Irish-American societies of Fall River, in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved by the Land League and Irish American societies of Fall River, Massachusetts, That in view of the despotic incarceration of Irish-American citizens by the British Government, we believe the time has fully come for Congress and the Executive to demand the immediate trial by a jury of their peers of any and every native or naturalized citizen of the United States now incarcerated in British dungeons, or their immediate release.

Resolved, That we appeal to the American Congress and to the Executive to take such action as will vindicate American honor, protect American citizenship, and establish justice. To this end we pledge loyalty and united support.

Resolved, That, in the language of The Citizen, of Chicago, "Europe, not England, is the mother country of America," and that every citizen of the United States, be he American, Englishman, Irishman, Frenchman, German, Russian, Italian, Spaniard, or Turk, is personally interested in this demand.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to take from the Calendar the bill (H. R. No. 1992) for the relief of the Savings Bank of Santa Rosa, California.

Objection was made.

STEAM-PLOW MACHINERY.

Mr. PACHECO. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4754) to admit free of duty certain steam-plow machinery now at the port of San Francisco. In this case the Secretary of the Treasury has fixed the day for public sale, which is at the end of the next month, and action must be taken now if at all.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for, which is in the nature of an objection.

Mr. PACHECO. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection, as this is an urgent case.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw my objection, but give notice I will renew my demand when this has been disposed of.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all the steam-plow machinery ordered by M. C. Fisher, for his own use, prior to the expiration of the time limited by section 7 of the act approved June 6, 1872, and now in the public stores or bonded warehouse at San Francisco, shall be delivered to him free of duty, and subject only to the other charges provided by law.

Mr. PACHECO. This bill has been reported from the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will reserve objection until some explanation has been made.

Mr. PACHECO. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that this bill has been duly considered by the Committee on Ways and Means, and favorably reported. I do not suppose it is necessary to take up the time of the House by reading the report.

The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the bill; and it was read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PACHECO moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Iowa desires to submit a privileged report.

Mr. HAZELTON. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not insist upon the demand for the regular order for a moment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I must insist upon the call for the regular order.

DELEGATE FROM ALASKA.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on Elections, submitted the views of the minority of the committee, on the application of M. J. Ball for admission as Delegate from Alaska; which was ordered to be printed in connection with the report of the majority of said committee.

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires at this time to submit for reference certain executive communications, if there be no objection.

There was no objection.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, in response to a House resolution of February 28, 1882, directing him to inform the House why section 1204 of the Revised Statutes is not applied to lieutenants of the Army in lineal promotion; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

EXPENDITURES ON ACCOUNT OF MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, submitting a statement of expenditures of money appropriated for the contingent fund of the military establishment during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, and ordered to be printed.

LIGHT-HOUSES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Light-House Board, requesting Congress to add to the appropriation bills for maintaining the light-house establishment, and building light-house structures, a clause similar to that appended to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

POLYGAMY.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that it is in receipt of four memorials from citizens of the Territory of Utah, which it is requested to submit to the House, and in the absence of objection they will be submitted at this time.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER submitted a memorial to Congress signed by 10,966 young ladies of Utah Territory, for the suspension of further action on all bills relating to Utah, and for a commission of honorable, intelligent, and unprejudiced men and women, to inquire into and learn the true state of affairs in that Territory.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I ask why this petition cannot be submitted through the petition-box?

Mr. HAZELTON. It is too late now to object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the gentleman from New York as having objected to the presentation of the petitions in this manner. It has been done frequently in similar cases.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let us have the regular order.

The SPEAKER also submitted a memorial to Congress signed by 13,035 young men of the Territory of Utah, in favor of legislation for that Territory.

The SPEAKER also submitted a memorial to Congress of 15,001 women of the Territory of Utah, against hasty and reckless action in regard to the political disorganization of that Territory, and for a commission of honest men and women to investigate the true condition of the Mormon people of Utah.

Mr. CAMP. Would it be in order to call for the reading of the names?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

The SPEAKER also presented a memorial of 12,378 men, citizens of the Territory of Utah, for a commission of honorable and upright men to make a careful investigation of affairs in that Territory before any further action of a hasty character is taken.

The memorials were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONVERSE. I ask that the heading of these petitions be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been requested to ask that the heading of each of these petitions be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS and Mr. BAYNE objected.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent at this time to present in this same connection some resolutions which were passed by a large meeting of citizens of Union City, Michigan, and vicinity, in reference to the subject of polygamy, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause to be read the title of the resolutions, after which he will ask for objections to printing them in the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolutions in reference to Polygamy in the Territories, passed by a mass-meeting of the citizens of Union City and vicinity, and asking for the passage of the Edmund's bill.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the printing of the resolutions in the RECORD?

Mr. ATHERTON. I object.

Mr. CONVERSE. I would suggest to gentlemen on the other side that unanimous consent be given that the resolutions presented by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LACEY] and the memorials presented by the Chair be all printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CALKINS. I think they should all be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again ask unanimous consent that the headings of the several memorials, and also the resolutions presented by the gentleman from Michigan, be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I object.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from New York will withdraw his objection. The right of petition should be recognized.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I do not know any reason why the Mormons should have more privileges than other people. I do not see why they should have a preference in this House over everybody else. If my constituents petition this House their petitions go to the petition-box, but when the Mormons send petitions the chairman of the Committee on Elections asks that they be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state, in correction of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. VAN VOORHIS,] that there have been a large number of memorials and petitions presented during this session of Congress against polygamy which have been printed in the RECORD by unanimous consent.

Mr. HAZELTON. Let these be printed too.

Mr. CALKINS. I will say in reply to my excitable friend from New York, that the only way of knowing what these petitions contain is by reading them when they are printed in the RECORD, and this House having this subject under consideration ought to be informed, and the gentleman from New York ought to be informed what these people have to say upon this question.

Mr. CASSIDY. Those people have no representative here. While I am opposed to Mormonism and will vote against it whenever I have an opportunity, I am in favor of giving those people a hearing.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York withdraw his objection?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I do not.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. LORD said: I desire that the House shall once more be afforded an opportunity of giving unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the headings of those petitions from Utah.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] insisted on his objection. Does the gentleman from New York withdraw his objection to printing in the RECORD the memorials from Utah, and also the resolutions presented by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. LACEY?]

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York withdraws his objection. The Chair will again submit the question: Is there objection to printing the resolutions and memorials in the RECORD?

There was no objection.

The resolutions presented by Mr. LACEY are as follows:

Resolutions passed in Union City, Michigan, February 26, 1882.

The citizens of Union City and the surrounding district, in mass-meeting assembled, hereby sincerely protest against the further continuance of the present status of Mormonism, so far as the Federal power has a right to control that status. That the Federal Constitution and laws should be enforced as impartially and effectually in Utah as in any other portion of the Union. That this is imperative to the welfare and prosperity of our common country, and that we believe it to be the duty of all members of Congress to use all lawful means toward eradicating the licentious and other unlawful features of the Mormon Church. That the bill now pending before Congress, and popularly known as "the Edmunds bill," should, in our opinion, be supported by Congressional Representatives, and we trust, and hereby request, that Representative E. S. LACEY will aid to the best of his ability in the passage of that bill.

Further resolved, That Rev. H. H. Van Auken be requested to forward these resolutions to Mr. LACEY at once.

The memorials from Utah laid before the House by the Speaker are as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Whereas certain bills are now pending before your honorable body, which, if passed, will break up happy homes and families and produce untold misery, sorrow, and suffering; will deprive us of the kind, fostering care of honorable, upright, God-fearing fathers, and drive forth our precious, loving mothers as outcasts; as those who have no right to the honored name of wife, and also cast opprobrium upon many of us as illegitimate; and

Whereas the passage of such bills would deprive our fathers, mothers, and brothers (and ourselves, when properly qualified) of the right of franchise, and, in fact, of all the rights of American citizens, debarring us of the free exercise of our holy religion, which is dearer to us than life itself; and would be contrary to the spirit of the glorious Constitution of our country, which we have ever been taught to revere as an inspiration from Almighty God; for we have been taught, and conscientiously believe, that plural marriage is as much a part of our religion as are faith, repentance, and baptism; and

Whereas in our opinion the cause of the introduction of such bills has been the false representations of evil-disposed persons, who assert we are low, ignorant, degraded, and disloyal; and, feeling assured that, had your honorable body been truthfully advised in regard to the people of this Territory, such bills would never have obtained a hearing in the Congress of this mighty nation:

Now, therefore, we, the young ladies of Utah Territory, do most solemnly and truthfully declare that neither we nor our mothers are held in bondage, but that we enjoy the greatest possible freedom, socially and religiously; that our homes are happy ones, and we are neither low nor degraded; for the principles of purity, virtue, integrity, and loyalty to the Government of the United States have been instilled into our minds and hearts since our earliest childhood.

According to what we read and can learn from other sources, in no place in the world is female chastity and virtue guarded with more jealous care than by our people; for we have been taught and do understand that this is our greatest boon, far above jewels or wealth and more precious than life itself; and we therefore most respectfully memorialize your honorable body to suspend further action on all bills relating to Utah, and send a commission of honorable, intelligent, and unprejudiced men and women to inquire into and learn the true state of affairs in this Territory.

And as in duty bound your memorialists will ever pray.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Your petitioners, the young men of the Territory of Utah, respectfully represent: That our present interests and future prospects in life are dependent upon the undisturbed peace and prosperity of our Territory.

That we are the sons of parents who have braved the dangers and overcome the difficulties incident to pioneering and settling a new, sterile, and forbidding country; who have made human habitation in the valleys of the great Rocky Mountain basin a possibility; who have labored with untiring industry under many hardships to create homes for their families, in which we have been nurtured and cared for; who have denied themselves many comforts to educate and train their children in useful arts and industries; who have ever thrown around our paths in life the benign influences of home—there are no homeless children in Utah—of religion, of industry, of honor, of patriotism, and the broadest and kindest expressions of humanity; who have shielded us from the groveling forms of vice that tempt and allure to destruction the unprotected and disowned, who, without name or home, lie in the streets of the great cities and upon the highways of the outside world, a reproach to civilization and mankind.

Under the protection, wise legislation, and humane administration of our fathers, our Territory enjoys the blessings of peace and abundance, and we have been started upon the high-road of prosperity and success with bodies untainted by disease, with hearts in which faith and the consciousness of divine approval dwells, with minds open to conviction of truth and untrammeled by dogmas or superstitions that clog progressive thought and fill the soul with fear. We love and honor our parents, who have thus provided in our childhood for our welfare in active life.

Now, therefore, in duty to them and ourselves, having the continued peace and prosperity of our Territory at heart and valuing liberty and the rights of conscience above life, we, the young men of Utah, earnestly remonstrate against the calumnies and misrepresentations of unprincipled men, who would have the world believe that we are curtailed in the enjoyment of American freedom and fettered in chains forged by priestly fanatics.

We deny that undue influence is exercised by any authority over our thoughts or actions.

We deny that duty to our religion and to our country leads us in opposite directions, or that it can possibly do so while the charter of American liberty remains the supreme law.

We deny that the religious institution of plural marriage, as practiced by our parents, and to which many of us owe our existence, debases, pollutes, or in any way degrades those who enter into it. On the contrary we solemnly affirm, and challenge successful contradiction, that plural marriage is a sacred religious ordinance and that its practice has given to thousands honorable names and peaceful homes, where Christian precepts and virtuous practices have been uniformly inculcated and the spirit of human liberty and religious freedom fostered from the cradle to maturity.

In consideration of these facts, and in the name of justice, we hereby solemnly memorialize your honorable body to refrain from enacting laws that reflect upon the marital relations of our parents, and that, however specific the provisions to the contrary, stigmatize us in the opinion of the world; to refrain from enacting laws that will enslave a large proportion of the citizens of our Territory, that will gall and fret the spirit of liberty which we inherit and are bound to entertain, and that will take from us, for no offense, the privileges and blessings of local free government, so necessary to the happiness and well-being of an American community.

We ask you to secure to us the rights, the liberties, and the blessings of freemen, and to pause before foisting upon us an unrepublican government, placing strangers, by appointment, to rule over us, and sacrificing the interests, the feelings, the happiness, and freedom of the great majority of the citizens of our Territory to the greed and cupidity of a reckless minority.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

We, the women of Utah, view with deepest regret the bills that have been presented in Congress during the present session, asking for special legislation for our Territory; which, if carried into effect, will destroy the peace, tranquillity, and prosperity which have heretofore characterized our dearly loved homes. We were driven to these mountain vales by the cruel hand of persecution, while, on our journey as outcasts and exiles, our sons, husbands, and fathers were called upon by the nation to battle for American rule in this country, then a portion of Mexico, and after struggling through privation and hardship such as men, women, and children have seldom endured, your petitioners, many of them descendants of the Pilgrims of New England, with their fathers, husbands, brothers, and sons, found a barren desert, inhabited only by savage Indians and wild beasts; here we have labored with the courage and endurance born only of religious faith, in helping to establish homes for ourselves and our children, and have made it easy for those coming at a later period, who found these valleys blooming with beauty and teeming with plenty, to enjoy all the blessings which pertain to life and happiness.

And we most respectfully represent to your honorable body that the bills aforesaid, now pending in the Congress of the United States, are further calculated to destroy our birthright of liberty, the glorious heritage bequeathed by our noble ancestors.

And furthermore, we are well aware that the present excitement in the nation is the result of ignorance and misrepresentation, and that the aim of our enemies is to rob us of our hard-earned homes and to plunder the public Treasury. These schemes have been concocted by sectarian priests and political demagogues, and by women who are the tools of wicked and designing men, both men and women unscrupulous in their enmity and mendacious in their statements, although they have homes and houses of worship in Utah Territory, comprising nearly all religious denominations, and are protected in all their rights as citizens and as religious worshipers, without the least intrusion or molestation, and who, instead of reforming the morals of the community as they perfidiously pretend, have assisted in introducing and sustaining in our midst the most demoralizing institutions known in the world.

And moreover we, your petitioners, hereby testify that we are happy in our homes and satisfied with our marriage relations and desire no change. We are not the "oppressed and downtrodden women" we are represented to be, but enjoy more rights and freedom than women elsewhere in the nation, and we do know that our institutions are of such a nature as tends to purity of morals and elevation of character. And we most solemnly aver, before God and man, that our marital relations are most sacred, that they are divine, enjoining obligations and ties that pertain to time and reach into eternity. Were it not for the sacred and religious character of the institution of plural marriage we should never have entered upon the practice of a principle which is contrary to our early teachings, and in consequence of which our names are cast out as evil by the Christian world.

Therefore we most respectfully appeal to your honorable body to forbear hasty and reckless action in regard to so important a matter as the political disorganization of the most prosperous and flourishing Territory of which the nation can boast; and, before proceeding to radical changes, to do yourselves the justice to investigate, by a commission of honest and intelligent men and women, the true condition of the "Mormon" people of Utah Territory.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Whereas it is the undisputed right of every person enjoying the blessings of a free government and living under the protection of the American flag to petition the Government which exists by the will of the people; and

Whereas we, as citizens of the Territory of Utah, have been bitterly maligned by those whose reputations are such as will not bear inspection; and by others who, ignorant of the facts relative to Utah, have been fired to clamor for unreasonable and unconstitutional measures against our peace and liberty, to deprive us of the rights we now enjoy under the benign influences of the Constitution; and

Whereas in response to this unhallowed demand, Congress is now pressing special legislation against the inhabitants of this Territory; legislation which would paralyze the general business of the Territory; legislation which already is showing its effect in decreasing the value of real estate; which drives capital away; which will ruin the mining, industrial, and manufacturing interests of the entire Territory, and must ultimately result in financial wreck to all classes of citizens:

Therefore, we, as citizens of the United States, loyal to the flag for whose purity and justice our fathers fought and suffered, do ask that Congress pause before adopting measures which must result in such serious injury to one of the most thriving sections of the Union, and bring lasting disgrace upon a great and mighty nation. We do deny each and all of the charges made against us as a people. That we are not law-abiding is untrue; that we are the enemies of good government is a deliberate falsehood; that we are striving to gain ascendency and dominion at the expense of our country's sacred Constitution is a charge without the shadow of truth.

The facts are that the present prosperity of the Territory is without a parallel in all the years of its existence; that there has never been a period of better order or of better government; that while our population and industries and wealth are of remarkably rapid growth, crime and the vices which commonly follow in the wake of so-called civilization are tardy and come only when forced upon us by that civilization; that life and property are as absolutely and undeniably safe as in any place on the face of the earth, which is attested by the fact that those who are most industrious in maligning us have resided and do reside here, and some of them are the owners of property, which, were the charges against us true, they would soon dispose of; that the whole trouble arises from the bare-faced falsehoods of irresponsible persons who have not principle enough to live in peace, nor thrift enough to insure that industry which would bring prosperity and position. The object of these calumnies is the robbery of the vast majority of the people of Utah of their rights as citizens; and the design of unprincipled men in clamoring for a commission to control the affairs of government here is that by this means they themselves—men without moral character, some of whom are reputed defrauders of Government—may secure the government of the Territory, the result of which would be the persecution and robbery of the inhabitants of Utah, the utter ruin of her bright prospects, and ultimate anarchy and slavery, under the plea of suppressing polygamy.

Whatever of polygamy exists among the Mormons rests solely upon their religious convictions. It is unsupported by any Territorial legislative enactment, and its practice already exposes them to the penalties of Congressional law. And it is better to leave it to the legitimate operations of that law and the moral influences at work than to attempt to extirpate it by radical, oppressive, or revolutionary measures.

We would most respectfully represent to your honorable body that we cannot but consider it unjust for us to be fraudulently robbed of our franchise by a governor, the appointee of the Government of the United States, and then, without our rightful representation, while illegally and unconstitutionally disfranchised, for special legislation to be enacted against us, based on falsehood; and we do most solemnly protest against such action as being at variance with the spirit and genius of republican institutions, contrary to the provisions made in the organic act for this Territory, and in violation of the principles of human liberty and the Constitution of the United States.

Therefore your petitioners, by their conceded right, do petition and demand of Congress, before any further action of a hasty character shall be taken—such as is proposed—and before a similar error is committed to that of a former administration, which, listening to the voice of calumny, first sent an army to Utah to punish offenses, and afterward sent commissioners to ascertain whether or not such offenses had been committed, that a commission of honorable and upright men be sent to Utah to make a careful investigation of affairs here, confident that in the issue justice will prevail, and as confident that our maligners will oppose this, as they have opposed all other fair measures.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER FLOODS.

Mr. HISCOCK, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 161) making an appropriation to enable the Light-House Board to meet the extraordinary expenses consequent upon the flood in the Mississippi River; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection; and the joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the sum of $10,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Light-House Board to pay the extraordinary expenses consequent upon the flood in the Mississippi River, said sum to be immediately available.

Mr. HISCOCK. I send to the Clerk's desk a communication on this subject from the Light-House Board, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE LIGHT-HOUSE BOARD,
Washington, March 8, 1882.

SIR: The Light-House Board has the honor to state that the fifteenth light-house district extends on the Mississippi River from the head of navigation to New Orleans, and on the Missouri River from the head of navigation to its mouth, a distance of over 2,500 miles, and embraces all the aids to navigation within these limits, the number of lights maintained, including nine on the Red River, being over five hundred.

During the periodical inundations of the Mississippi River all bank landmarks disappear, when the lights, which are constantly maintained, prove of incalculable value to those engaged in the navigation of the river, this being the testimony of all steamboat men.

The regularity with which the lights are exhibited is due in a great measure to the faithfulness of the men employed in caring for them. During the floods, many of them who have lost everything are compelled to live in boats and on rafts surrounded by water, but notwithstanding this they have maintained their lights with the most satisfactory punctuality, and steamers have thus been enabled to pursue their course by night as well as by day.

The average compensation paid these keepers is less than $10 a month, a sum which is not considered to be a just equivalent for the services performed by them in the present emergency.

When the present flood subsides it will be necessary for the officer in charge of the district to make an extra inspection trip to rearrange the lights to meet the new conditions of the currents of the river, and to re-establish stations that have been swept away, involving, in addition to other expenses, the cost of running the steam tender and launch.

Recommendation is therefore respectfully made that Congress be asked to pass an act, to take immediate effect, appropriating the sum of $10,000 to enable the board to meet these extraordinary expenses.

Very respectfully,

JOHN RODGERS,
Rear-Admiral, United States Navy, Chairman.

The honorable THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TAYLOR. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the first business now in order is the calling of committees for reports of a private nature.

Mr. TAYLOR. I move that the morning hour for the call of committees be dispensed with.

Mr. STEPHENS. I hope not; it will not take long to call the committees.

The SPEAKER. This being Friday the only reports in order are reports of a private nature.

Mr. STEPHENS. Certainly, I understand that; but it will not take long to call over the committees.

The motion of Mr. TAYLOR was not agreed to.

WILLIAM S. HANSELL.

The call of committees was continued and concluded, no further reports being presented.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for two days.

CHARLES P. CHOUTEAU.

Mr. TAYLOR. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 911) for the relief of Charles P. Chouteau, on which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] is entitled to the floor, and has twenty-five minutes of his hour remaining.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, not believing that this bill would be reached on Friday, the 2d instant, I was not then prepared to speak of it accurately. The amount involved in this bill, near $200,000, other like bills pending here, and the millions involved in the principles connected with it, justify a restatement of the facts.

The committee will take notice that the House report on this bill, (Report No. 79,) made on the 26th of January, 1882, states that Senator HOAR reported on a bill for the same object on the 11th of January, 1882, and adopts that Senate report, copying its four pages and adding nothing thereto. That Senate report was a copy of another Senate report made by the same Senator on the 22d of December, 1880, (Senate Report 731,) and that Senate report was a copy of House Report No. 1434, made on the 12th of May, 1880, by Mr. Barber; and Mr. Barber's report stands upon these grounds:

First, that the final receipt was unknown to petitioners "before the day of the trial, (in Court of Claims,) and that they had no opportunity to rebut or explain it." The record of the cause, which I read last Friday, shows that that was not true; that counsel were notified of the receipt before the trial, that they were offered time and would not try to explain. The cause was argued on the 30th of October, 1873, and the amended pleadings and decision were on the 15th and 16th of December, 1873. And during all this time no effort was made to show anything in explanation.

The second ground for the report is that the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court both erred, because as the Barber report says, (and the others copy:)

> Both courts proceed seemingly upon the theory that McCord participated in or assented to the preparation of the voucher, and that his rights were therefore necessarily concluded by the receipt executed by his attorneys in fact.
> Your committee is unable to concur in this interpretation of the transaction. We are satisfied from our investigations that the preparation of the voucher was purely the act of the Government.

And this conclusion is based upon the letter of Mr. Easby, Chief of the Bureau of Construction, dated the 10th of April, 1880. It does not appear that he had anything to do with this business or knows anything about it except what he infers from inspecting the papers. Some portion of his letter seems to have been omitted, but I suppose it was irrelevant. The part of it published is this, namely:

> This bill came to the bureau in regular course, duly approved by the general inspector and by Rear-Admiral Gregory, who had the general superintendence and control of all classes of gunboats, and whose duty it was to make out, approve, and forward all bills connected with their construction to this bureau for its approval and final payment by the respective paymasters. The original and duplicate of this bill are in the Treasury Department and are duly receipted, &c. * * * All such bills were made out in the office of Rear-Admiral Gregory and forwarded to the Department for approval, and there is no substantial difference between this bill in question and hundreds of others received from that office during the construction of a large number of vessels which were built under his general superintendence.

There is not a word of conflict between this and the Court of Claims or the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court decision in 95 United States Reports, 61, already quoted, held, first, that the power of attorney was ample to authorize Gilman, Son & Co. to receipt in full, and that when they receipted for the $26,653.17 balance "in full of the within bill" they bound McCord, the contractor and their principal. But that court said further:

> But if we could be mistaken in this, the reasonable presumption is that Gilman, Son & Co. had nothing to do with obtaining this voucher from the Navy Department, but that it was obtained by McCord himself and forwarded by him to Gilman, Son & Co. for collection of the paymaster at New York. This is quite consistent with the fact that they were mere bankers. It is certainly fair to suppose that McCord presented his own statement of the account to the Navy officers, and the final approval of the Chief of the Bureau of Construction, at Washington, is dated April 26, 1866. The payment, as indorsed on that same voucher, by the paymaster at New York to Gilman, Son & Co., is dated May 11, 1866, which is just about a reasonable time for the voucher to have been received from Washington by McCord at Saint Louis, and by him forwarded to Gilman, Son & Co. at New York for collection. If this be the true history of the voucher, McCord is bound by his own actions, for the voucher while in his hands had in its face the clearest statement that the sum therein allowed was "the full and final payment on all extras, and in full for all claims and demands for that work," and if he forwarded it in this shape to his bankers to get the money on it, without protest, he must be bound by that statement in the voucher.

The voucher and receipt bear no other construction. Here they are:

Etlah.—Payment on account of extras.

NEW YORK, April 24, 1866.

United States Navy Department, to Charles W. McCord, Dr.

[Appropriation, "Construction and Repair."]

For work done to the light-draft monitor Etlah, which is extra to the contract dated June 24, 1863, being the full and final payment on all extras, and in full for all claims and demands for that work		$31,114 00
Less amount paid E. W. Barstow & Son, as per order	$605 65

GILMAN, SON & CO., Attorneys,
Per CHARLES W. McCORD.

In the report mentioned Mr. Barber said of the letter quoted above:

> The foregoing letter was furnished to your committee in response to an inquiry concerning the practice of the Department in regard to the preparation of the vouchers, and calling for any suggestions throwing light upon the preparation of the voucher in question. It is thus seen that it is possible that McCord never saw this voucher prior to its payment.

No question was asked except how the vouchers were prepared. Nobody had doubt about that. The question ought to have been whether McCord had seen this one, and without allusion to that question the report said:

> It is thus seen that it is possible that McCord never saw this voucher prior to its payment.

And strengthened by that possibility the report added:

> In fact, from the circumstances of the case and the situation of the parties, your committee is of the opinion that it is altogether probable that such was the fact.

No attention was called to the fact that the voucher was in favor of Charles W. McCord, dated 24th April, 1866, made in "triplicate" "for work done to the light-draft monitor Eltah, which is extra to the contract dated 24th June, 1863, being the full and final payment on all extras and in full for all claims and demands for that work, $31,114." No attention was called to the credits, "less amount paid E. W. Barstow & Son, as per order, $605.05;" nor to "outfits and equipments called for by the contract, but not furnished, $3,852.18," leaving the balance for which Gilman, Son & Co. receipted, as "in full of the within bill," on the 11th of May, 1866. And Senator HOAR, in 1880, copied all this and added nothing thereto, repeated the work in 1882, and a few days after it was repeated here. "Only this and nothing more."

The original contract price and the agreed prices for alterations are paid. McCord seems to have feared disagreement about extras for which only verbal directions had been given. On them he had receipted as before, on voucher of 12th April, 1865, for $20,000 on 20th May, 1865, and for $20,000 on 28th July, 1865, on voucher of 25th May, 1865. To quiet his apprehension, Charles Loring, chief engineer and United States naval inspector, wrote him on the subject on the 22d of August, 1865, concluding thus:

Whenever your claims for extra compensation are asked or acted upon you will find me ready to stand by every direction I have given.

After that we find the following:

GENERAL INSPECTOR'S OFFICE IRON-CLAD STEAMERS,
New York, October 19, 1865.

SIR: You will please ascertain and forward to me a memorandum of the maximum and minimum wages per day paid the different classes of workmen engaged in the construction of the light-draft monitors Shiloh and Etlah, the date of the same, and a general average of how long the wages run at these amounts.

This information is desired for the board of adjudication, that they may be advised in relation to the same when the accounts for extra work upon these vessels are brought before them for final settlement.

You will please endeavor to obtain the above information without advising the contractors in relation thereto.

Very respectfully,

ROBERT DANBY,
General Inspector.

D. G. WELLS, Esq., Local Inspector, Saint Louis.

SAINT LOUIS, October 28, 1865.

SIR: In reply to yours of the 19th instant I inclose the following memorandum of the maximum and minimum wages per day for the different classes of workmen engaged in the construction of the Shiloh and Etlah:

F. H. GREGORY, Rear-Admiral.

These figures could be for but one purpose. They were made expressly to adjust the account, and accordingly a voucher was made up on the 29th of December, 1865, stating the work and labor on extras at $85,000, and that $75,000 had been paid. That was approved by Admiral Gregory and Lenthall as usual, and the $10,000 balance "in full of above bill" paid to Gilman, Son & Co. on the 17th of January, 1866.

Finally, on the 18th of April, 1866, McCord wrote the Navy Bureau saying that his bankers, Gilman, Son & Co., were authorized to receive his money and papers as usual. On the 24th of April, 1866, the final voucher copied above was made up and approved by Danby and Admiral Gregory, and on the 26th of April, 1866, the bureau wrote McCord notifying him that a bill for extra work on the Etlah in full for all claims and demands had been approved for $26,653.17 and had been forwarded to Gilman, Son & Co., as requested, and on May 11 Gilman, Son & Co. gave the final receipt. From seeing this voucher and receipt only in print we might be led to conclude that it was a printed blank filled up, and therefore not scrutinized, but both are wholly in writing.

Mr. Chairman, it is far from my purpose to charge upon this Committee on Claims or any committee which so copies reports from the Senate then in session any violation of rules or any improper conduct by any member of the committees. This doubtless is merely to save labor and not to put the weight of the Senate in favor of bills by quoting reports made during the sitting Congress. But it seems, in spirit at least, obnoxious to the rule which makes it "a breach of order in debate to notice what has been said on the same subject in the other House, or the particular votes or majority on it there; because the opinion of each House should be left to its own independency, not to be influenced by the proceedings of the other; and a quoting of them might beget reflections leading to a misunderstanding between the two Houses." When committees of one House thus force the opinions of the other upon attention by adopting their language, we must comment thereon or be silent, and silence sometimes would be criminal.

Under the circumstances I may at least ask the members to examine the ten minutes' debate of this bill in the Senate on the 9th of February, 1882, before determining what weight to give to the fact thus forced upon our attention. Not only is this report a copy of a copy as to what it contains, it is also as to what it omits. There is in neither of them any notice of the Hazelton report and the minority report by four of its members in the Forty-third Congress, nor of the unanimously adverse report of Mr. Hanna, from the Committee on Claims in the Forty-fifth Congress, both quoted from by me on last Friday. There is but one orginal remark in this report, to wit:

A similar bill to the one here reported was favorably reported by the Committee on Claims of both Houses of the Forty-sixth Congress, but failed to pass for want of time.

And it cannot be known to be true. The bill was introduced on the 2d of February, 1880, and Mr. Barber's report was made on the 12th of May, 1880. It may be that the bill was not reached. But I do not believe any such bill would have passed had it been reached. Certainly while many other bills further down upon the calendars were passed, no mention of that one was made after the report.

These remarks are made with no other purpose than to satisfy this Committee of the Whole House that we are not acting upon a report of one of our committees made in the usual way, but upon that of Mr. Barber, who seems not to have thoroughly investigated the subject about which he wrote. For, of course, he would not have knowingly withheld information which the House should have had. No committee would withhold such facts. But any committee may be imposed upon by claimants. We are practically without a report, and must treat the case as we here see the surroundings.

To get at the truth let us go back a moment. On the 9th of July, 1863, Charles W. McCord contracted to build the Etlah for the United States at $386,000 in eight months from the 24th of June, 1863. For each month's speedier delivery he was to have $4,500 more, and for each month's delay he was to lose $4,500. The contract said:

SEC. 16. It is further agreed that the parties of the second part shall have the privilege of making alterations and additions to the plans and specifications at any time during the progress of the work as they may deem necessary and proper; and if said alterations and additions shall cause extra expense to the parties of the first part, they will pay for the same at fair and reasonable rates; and should such changes cause less work and expense to the parties of the first part a corresponding reduction to be made from the contract price, and in each case the cost of the alterations to be determined when the changes are directed to be made.

After the contract was made—

McCord made a sub-contract for the construction of the battery, with the firm of McCord & Co. (a firm in the iron-foundry and machine-building business, and of which he, McCord, was a member) and William A. Steel, by which sub-contract McCord & Co. secured a two-third interest, and Steel a one-third interest, in the original contract.

The Government ordered alterations and extra work. All payments were made to Gilman, Son & Co., bankers, under power of attorney from McCord. They received for him in eight payments the original price, $386,000, and in twelve other payments $203,458.82 for such alterations and extras. Chouteau, Harrison & Valle furnished McCord iron, &c., for the Etlah, and I stated on Friday last that McCord transferred his claim to them to secure $40,000 therefor. In that I was inaccurate. McCord went into voluntary bankruptcy in August, 1868. That record shows that on the 6th of February, 1868, McCord transferred his claim against the United States to Harrison, to secure Chouteau, Harrison & Valle for $11,674.84 which he owed them; that the total claim against the United States was for $139,500, and McCord's part of it $93,000. And the record further shows that this claim was sold by the assignee in bankruptcy on the 9th of September, 1869, in Saint Louis, Missouri, at public outcry, after advertisement, to the highest bidder, and knocked off to Chouteau, Harrison & Valle at $200. And the claim so conveyed is described in that record as a "claim against the Government of the United States for balance due for work and labor done and material furnished in building gunboat monitor Etlah for the Government, amounting to about ninety-three thousand dollars."

Note now the contract was with McCord alone, and the Government has never recognized any one else as its creditor on that account. However his contracts bound him to Steele and others, they bound not the United States, who was no party to them. On the 9th March, 1865, the Senate's resolution ordered an inquiry for its own information as to—

How much the vessels of war and steam machinery contracted for by the Department (Navy) in the years 1862 and 1863 cost the contractors over and above the contract price and allowance for extra work.

It will be observed that extra "cost" for any reason, though wholly due to the fault of the contractors, was to be estimated. With no other limit did the Selfridge board act. The forty-two contractors claimed $2,383,520.20, and the board found for them $2,267,627. It appeared that this was upon the ex parte statements of the contractors. Recoveries there were easy. One of the reports from which I quoted last Friday mentions this as an instance, namely: Alexander Swift & Co. presented there a claim for loss in building the Catawba and Oneota of $114,009.94 each. It was supported by an affidavit of Gustave Ricker, (who now owns that claim,) which covers less than half a page in print and nothing more, and the board allowed the exact amount claimed. That Selfridge board sat during the whole latter half of 1865, yet neither McCord nor any one for him presented any claim there. Upon like ex parte statements the Selfridge board found for every claimant about what he asked. For comparison I mention these:

Poole & Hunt	$44,015 84
Atlantic Works	20,513 73
Harrison Loring	63,745 41
William Perine	52,472 81
William Perine	36,533 44
William Perine	43,586 98
Z. and F. Secor	119,020 57
Z. and F. Secor	119,020 57
William Perine, Z. and F. Secor	119,020 57
Alexander Swift & Co., (Catawba)	114,009 54
Alexander Swift & Co., (Oneota)	114,009 54

No wonder Senator SHERMAN denounced the findings and the principles on which they were based. No wonder that the proposition of the committee was crippled in the Senate and could not travel in the House. The result was the act of 2d March, 1867. It required a board to—

Ascertain the additional cost which was necessarily incurred by each contractor in the completion of his work, by reason of any changes in the alteration in the plans and specifications required, and delays in the prosecution of the work occasioned by the Government which were not provided for in the original contract; but no allowance for any advance in the price of labor or material shall be considered unless such advance occurred during the prolonged time for completing the work rendered necessary by the delay resulting from the action of the Government aforesaid, and then only when such advance could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence on the part of the contractor, and from such additional cost, to be ascertained as aforesaid, there shall be deducted such sum as may have been paid each contractor for any reason heretofore over and above the contract price; and shall report to Congress a tabular statement of each case, which shall contain the name of the contractor, a description of the work, the contract price, the whole increased cost of the work over the contract price, and the amount of such increased cost caused by the delay and action of the Government as aforesaid, and the amount already paid the contractor over and above the contract price.

This allowed damages only for the fault of the Government, and covered all contracts for such vessels and machinery between 1st May, 1861, and January, 1864.

Under it the Marchand board was organized. It was composed of Commodore J. B. Marchand, Chief Engineer J. W. King, and Paymaster Edward Foster. Before that board were laid forty-five claims of as many contractors. The contract prices for their work aggregated $14,201,000 and they had received that and $5,302,847.91 extra for alterations, &c. They claimed before the board $10,184,529.50 more.

McCord's claim was presented there and was wholly disallowed. Alexander Swift & Co. presented claims for the Catawba and Oneota, the Klamath and Yuma, and were allowed nothing. Congress followed that by this, namely:

An act for the relief of certain Government contractors.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Secor & Co., and Perine, Secor & Co., the sum of $115,539.01; to Harrison Loring, $38,513; to the Atlantic Iron Works, of Boston, Massachusetts, $4,852.58; to Aquilla Adams, the sum of $4,852.58; to M. F. Merritt, the sum of $4,852.58; to Tomlinson, Harteepee & Co., $15,171; to Harlan and Hollingsworth, the sum of $38,513; and to Poole and Hunt, the sum of $3,694.81, being the amount found to be due to each of the parties herein respectively named by the Secretary of the Navy under an act of Congress entitled "An act for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels of war and steam machinery," approved March 2, 1867, which shall be in full discharge of all claims against the United States on account of the vessels upon which the board made the allowance, as per their report, under the act of March 2, 1867.

Approved July 13, 1868. (15, S. L. 379.)

Mark the contrast between these figures and those of the Selfridge board. These figures were those of a board finding only for loss by the fault of the Government, and the others of a board looking for losses without regard to whose fault caused them, and upon the ex parte statement of the claimants.

It is claimed that the parties did not have a fair showing before the Marchand board. But we need evidence before we should believe so unreasonable an assertion.

So when McCord made his assignment to Chouteau, Harrison & Valle, in 1868, to secure the balance of their debt, they acquired nothing, for the Department had decided his case and paid and took a receipt in full; before one special tribunal of review provided he made no claim, (showing that counsel for the United States rightly called this claim "an afterthought;") before another he did claim and had an adverse finding. They had collected all of their $40,000 claim on McCord before his bankruptcy, except $11,674.84, and perhaps much of that was paid between the assignment on the 2d of February, 1868, and the bankruptcy in the following August. Yet these petitioners bought this claim of "about $93,000" at bankrupt sale for $200 and joined the band for a raid upon the Treasury. They first tried to repeal the act of March 2, 1867, but President Grant's veto of February 7, 1871, said that the law must stand, because—

It prevents a contractor from receiving any allowance for an advance in the price of labor and material when he could avoid that advance by the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence, and the effect of the repeal will be to relieve contractors from the consequences of their own imprudence and negligence.

Then came the other struggles which I detailed last Friday. They begged to go to court, went to court and lost; and yet, not satisfied, they ask us to legislate for a new trial to let them explain a receipt which was always accessible to them and subject to explanation, which they did not ask time to explain, which they made no effort to explain, though the report says only a little letter from Mr. Easby in the Department explained it to the Committee on Claims.

What do they ask? Their bill is in the Senate and House identical, namely:

For the relief of Charles P. Chouteau.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Court of Claims be authorized to grant a rehearing in the case of Charles P. Chouteau, surviving partner of Chouteau, Harrison & Valle, and William A. Steele, against the United States, with jurisdiction to hear and determine the amount, if any, incurred under the contract for the construction of the iron-clad vessel Etlah by reason of the delays occasioned in such construction by the acts of the Government beyond the period specified in the contract and for extras beyond what was provided therein. If upon such rehearing a receipt dated April 24, 1866, shall be given in evidence, the court may give judgment for such sum as shall be justly and equitably due, notwithstanding such receipt.

The Committee on Claims report amendments substituting "due" for "incurred" in the first sentence, and substituting "upon the whole evidence, including said receipt and any explanation thereof," for "notwithstanding such receipt." Their report does not say they do that because it is right, but "in order that the House bill shall correspond in phraseology with the bill reported to the Senate."

The first sentence of the original bill looked like going back to the loose legislation which President Grant vetoed. It had not on it, or in it, the limitation put by Mr. Wells on his bill of 2d February, 1880, and repeated in Senator Vest's bill of February, 1880, to wit:

But no allowance shall be made for any advance in the prices of labor or material unless such advance occurred during such prolonged time so rendered necessary by the action of the Government as aforesaid, and then only when such advance could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence on the part of the contractor; and from the additional cost of such work, including the cost of the changes and alterations ordered by the Government, and the additional cost occasioned by such delays, there are to be deducted such sums as may have been paid the contractor for any reason whatever over and above the contract price.

And it is by no means clear that changing "incurred" into "due" defeats the seeming original purpose. I mean not the purpose of the gentlemen who introduced these bills, but of the persons interested. For as the bills are identically the same, it is inferable that they are not the product of the legislators, but were prepared to hand and introduced by them for their constituents.

The second and only remaining sentence of the bill as originally drawn required the court to act "notwithstanding such receipt." Possibly that might have legislated the receipt out of the way as evidence at all.

The bill as amended should not pass. It has in it the implied admission that the Government delayed the contractor wrongfully. The fact is otherwise. (See the contract already quoted and this language of the Supreme Court in this case, in 95 U. S. R., 61:)

It is very clear that both parties contemplated the probability that the work would not be completed at the precise period of eight months from the date of the contract. They also contemplated that changes would be made in the construction of the battery. They made such provision for these matters as they deemed necessary for the protection of each party. For the reasonable cost and expenses of the changes made in the construction payment was to be made, but for any increase in the cost of the work not changed no provision was made. There was a provision for delay, by which the contractor was to submit to pay $4,500 for every month of that delay. This provision, the only one on that subject, if strictly enforced, might have made him a still greater loser, but it seems to have been waived.

McCord was consulted in advance about the cost of principal change, and responded as follows:

SAINT LOUIS, July 27, 1864.

SIR: Propose to make the additions to light-draft monitor Etlah, building by me, according to the drawings and specifications furnished June, 1864, for the sum of $105,000.

The above includes raising the boilers.

Yours, respectfully,

CHARLES W. McCORD.

W. W. W. WOOD,
General Inspector of Steam Machinery, United States Navy.

Upon its receipt Lenthall wrote thus:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR.
September 8, 1864.

SIR: Your letters of the 3d have been submitted to the Department, and you are authorized to agree for the alterations to be made at the $90,000 recommended by the board having this matter in charge, graduating the price below the sum named, as, in your opinion, each case demands.

You can in each case settle up the account, retaining what you consider sufficient to insure a diligent and proper prosecution of the work, the Department being desirous of having the vessel as early as practicable and closing the matter up.

If there are any who refuse this arrangement, please state the course you would suggest to pursue with regard to them.

This letter covers the case of the Warsaw.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN LENTHALL,
Chief of Bureau.

Rear-Admiral F. H. GREGORY, New York.

That principal change was raising the deck twenty-two inches, which change was ordered on the 27th September, 1864, and on the 11th of November, 1864, a voucher was made in favor of McCord therefor for $55,000, in which it was stated that—

The materials and labor put upon the alterations of and additions to the vessel Etlah, now being built by Charles W. McCord, * * * are in all respects according to the contract for alterations named, and for which the sum of $82,500 has been agreed upon.

That was signed by William W. W. Wood, general inspector, and approved by Admiral Gregory. On the 12th of May, 1864, it was approved in triplicate by Joseph Smith for chief of bureau, and on the 3d of December following, Gilman, Son & Co., for McCord, received the $55,000 "in full of above bill." Of course (course of business) McCord was advised of this ad interim. Smaller changes had been made. Concerning them, this correspondence was had.

GENERAL INSPECTOR'S OFFICE IRON-CLAD STEAMERS,
256 Canal Street, New York, April 12, 1864.

ADMIRAL: Inclosed I send you a tabulated account of the changes which have been made in the light-draft monitors, as directed in the letter from the Bureau of Construction, in its letter to you of the 23d ultimo.

In giving the amounts, where they have not been settled beforehand, you will observe that I have put down those which the contractors of three of the vessels agreed with me that they would accept. These, however, have not been approved by the bureau, and amount, therefore, only to an estimate on my part.

I am, very respectfully,

ALBAN C. STIMERS,
General Inspector.

Rear-Admiral F. H. GREGORY, U. S. N.,
General Superintendent, New York.

Alterations and additions to light-draft monitors upon which the price has been agreed and approved by the bureau before the work was commenced.

Etlah	$1,547 52	$1,000 00	$270 00	$876 00

Accordingly, on the 10th of November, 1864, a voucher was prepared in favor of McCord for $25,000 for work "which is extra to the contract dated 24th June, 1863." It recited that this work and materials "are according to directions which have been given him (Mc-Cord) from time to time." It was approved like the last, except that John Lenthall, chief of bureau, acted instead of Joseph Smith, and paid "in full of the within bill" and in "duplicate receipt" on the 20th of January, 1865, to Gilman, Son & Co., for McCord.

Other work was added at agreed price of $5,300, which, added to the $82,500 already agreed upon, made $87,800. And so in the vouchers of March 18, 1865, for $7,500, the language was changed to "for which the sum of $87,800 has been agreed upon." That was paid, like the others, on the 18th of April, 1865. These are specimens of the vouchers and receipts. They were in the form of the final one quoted ante.

It is said, however, that McCord lost money by the alterations and extras allowed under the contract. What if he did? The answer of the Supreme Court was complete:

But we are very clear that without any such provision he must be held to have taken the risk of the prices of the labor and materials which he was bound to furnish, as every other contractor does who agrees to do a specified job at a fixed price. It is one of the elements which he takes into account when he makes his bargain, and he cannot expect the other party to guarantee him against unfavorable changes in those prices.

Possibly, probably the profit in the first contract price overbalanced the loss. He was entitled to the profit because he contracted for it, and he must suffer the loss because he contracted for that also. But it is not certain that he suffered any loss. I know the Court of Claims found that he did upon the evidence submitted. But that may have been only because the counsel for the United States staked his case upon the conclusiveness of the receipt and cared not what was proved as to loss, &c.

I call attention to this quotation from Mr. Merriman's argument of the case in the Court of Claims. He was for claimant. He read from the evidence as follows:

Question 13. What was the cost to the claimant of the items for which they were paid the sum of $112,258.82?
(Objected to.)
Answer. About $172,000. It is actually $172,273.55.

And Mr. Merriman added:

There was no cross-examination upon that point—upon the question of extra work.

Had counsel for the United States felt pressure at that point, he might have shown that increase of cost was but nominal, being really a decrease in the value of the currency, &c. We know not what might have appeared.

It is claimed that there are precedents for what is now asked. I deny it, and demand the proof. Show any case parallel with this in its important points. Here Congress is asked to make a law for a new trial upon the allegation that counsel was "surprised" when on the trial this final receipt was produced. Who swears to any such surprise? What man has even said he was surprised? When on the trial Drake, chief-justice, speaking of the voucher and receipt, said to Mr. Merriman, "You say that this paper * * * has only just come to your knowledge," he did not say "yes," but only "it was filed yesterday." And Johnson, for United States, replied: "It has been as open to you as to us; it has been in the Department all the time." If there was surprise when the receipt was put in, why was no motion made for new trial under section 1087 of the Revised Statutes, which allows the Court of Claims to "grant a new trial for any reason which by the rules of common law or chancery in suits between individuals would furnish sufficient ground for granting a new trial?" Why wait until the judgment of the Supreme Court, affirming the Court of Claims? Why then come with an affidavit by two only of the three or four members of Gilman, Son & Co., and that carefully silent about the point made by the Supreme Court that McCord must have known about the finality of the voucher before they signed the receipt? The cited cases precedents? Can any one find a precedent for thus overriding the Supreme Court, when to do so we must remove the statute of limitations; and that, too, when Admiral Gregory, who approved the vouchers, is dead, and when paymasters Edridge and Etting, who paid the money, cannot testify as to what was said when they paid, because they, too, are dead; when Wells, the local inspector at Saint Louis, may be dead for aught the naval authorities know; when the other parties having knowledge of the affair are scattered to the four quarters of the earth, and if collected could no longer remember all the facts? No; if there be such a precedent let it be forever condemned by voting to kill this bill. Let no disposition be had which will leave this old claim to vex future Congresses, to steal in when members now acquainted with the facts may be gone; to stand here as an obstacle in the way of honest claims against the Government, creating by its rottenness an atmosphere poisonous to them. Let it be buried to-day and forever.

Mr. Chairman, we have a great struggle here every Congress how to get rid of this immense Calendar piled upon us. Honest men with honest claims are forced to spend their time and their money and to exhaust their patience waiting to have their claims for small amounts adjusted and paid.

This Government is thought to be unjust when it is not. This Government is thought to be niggardly when it is not. It is because such old claims as this, large enough to have lobbyists employed to make artful arguments, artful presentation of facts and sometimes artful concealment of facts, rush in early and get on the Calendar, and thereby crowd honest ones away, and create such odium against themselves when uncovered that makes every man suspicious when another claim is presented to his view. We never can, by all the legislation we can make, get rid of the constitutional right to petition. We may send them to the Court of Claims to find facts, and we ought to send all such claims there that the facts may be found. Many new facts are presented by me here. There are many others in the possession of other members of this committee, and which will be presented if debate is prolonged on this old claim.

It might have gone through without notice and without attention. Thousands of dollars are so paid. I might say millions of dollars are so paid. But let us determine, when such a claim is unearthed, when it is discovered that an honest committeeman has been deceived, to put the seal of honest condemnation on it, to bury the claim beneath the indignation of the representatives of these people who complain that they cannot get their cases heard. Thus and thus only will we give honestly to the people that constitutional right of petition which now exists only in name. Without this, as long as men are encouraged to come here with such claims, and when cornered to withdraw them on the ground there is no adverse report, or get out otherwise, Congress can never get rid of such matter—Congress can never open the doors of justice to those who should be heard and should be compensated. All the vigilance of committeemen cannot detect the fraud. No man and no committee is blamable for not detecting them. The very multiplicity of business before the Committee on Claims, as was told you by Mr. BOWMAN'S report, precludes the possibility of examination.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, the condition of my voice is such I am afraid I cannot make myself heard. I do not, however, desire, as I intended the other day, to discuss the question, but shall content myself by submitting a few remarks in explanation of how the report was presented to the Committee on Claims, as well as the testimony before that committee, and then some further remarks in support of the motion I propose to submit.

Notwithstanding what has been said and intimated by the distinguished gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. HAMMOND,] the Committee on Claims did consider this matter most carefully. They considered it upon the evidence which for a number of years was presented to different committees of the House and of the Senate, as well as that which had been adduced before the Court of Claims, where this claim was thoroughly and, as I supposed, exhaustively considered.

Now it was upon these facts, and upon this evidence, that the committee made their report, coming thereby to a different conclusion from that reached by the gentleman from Georgia. That is all, Mr. Chairman, that I desire to submit in regard to this report.

I went to the Navy Department yesterday, and there examined all the papers on file in reference to this case; and I discovered, in connection with another gentleman, who is not, however, on the committee, but was looking into the same matter, that there were evidences—papers—relating to this case that would have a material bearing on the case if the committee had access to them. These papers have never been submitted to the committee, or in fact to any committee, either of the Senate or of the House, in any previous investigation, and they have not been brought (in the investigation by the Court of Claims) to the attention of that court, notwithstanding the fact that the Government was represented by a distinguished lawyer of this city. I desire, sir, that these letters, written to McCord, the original claimant in this case, and written to his attorneys in fact, Gilman, Son & Co., in New York, who made the affidavit alluded to, and other paper evidence on file in the Navy Department shall be brought to the attention of the committee; and I believe that they should be considered again by the Committee on Claims who made the report, for the reason that it is in the nature of new evidence, which has never before been submitted to their attention. And in justice to that committee, who made the report, they should have that evidence before them, to say whether, with that additional testimony, they will come to the same conclusion and make the same report they have already made. With that view, therefore, sir, and without detaining the committee any longer, I desire to submit the following motion: that the bill be laid aside with the recommendation to the House that it be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. And I move to lay that motion on the table, if it be in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to ask the Chair if it is in order at this time to entertain the motion submitted by the gentleman from Missouri?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. That it be laid aside at this stage?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; with the recommendation that it be recommitted.

Mr. HERBERT. I desire to be heard upon that motion.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is that motion debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. HERBERT. A motion has been made by the gentleman from Georgia to lay that on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion would not be in order in committee. That could only be entertained in the House.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Then I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Missouri, that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation it do not pass.

Mr. CLARDY. I hope discussion will not be cut off in that way.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. If the gentleman from Missouri withdraws his motion, then I will withdraw mine.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. HERBERT. I understand the motion that it be laid aside with recommendation that it be recommitted to the committee is withdrawn.

Mr. CLARK. I have not withdrawn the motion.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Then I insist upon the amendment.

Mr. WILLITS. Let the amendment be again reported to the committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am satisfied the Chair is in error in reference to its ruling; and I raise the point of order that at this time, while we are in general debate on the bill, the motion to amend is not in order. The bill is not being read for amendment or consideration under the five-minute rule. We can do nothing now but discuss the bill as long as any gentleman desires to discuss it, until the committee rises to close debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that the motion of the gentleman from Missouri is in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. But we have not reached a stage where debate is out of order. If the Chair will permit me I will call his attention to the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will understand that the bill has been read and amendments have been adopted to the bill. The motion of the gentleman from Missouri to lay the bill aside and report to the House with certain recommendations is undoubtedly in order.

Mr. HERBERT. I move as a substitute for the motion of the gentleman from Missouri that we report the bill to the House adversely, with the recommendation that it be laid upon the table, and I ask to be heard in support of the substitute.

Mr. TAYLOR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the motion of the gentleman from Alabama be debatable?

Mr. HERBERT. Yes, sir; it is clearly debatable. The motion to report a bill adversely is debatable.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the motion would be debatable.

Mr. HERBERT. I shall not detain the committee at any great length.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the Chair hold that discussion of the motion is in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama has presented a substitute which is in order.

Mr. TAYLOR. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. HERBERT. I do not yield the floor for that purpose.

Mr. TAYLOR. For a single moment, and informally, if you please.

Mr. HERBERT. Very well.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. No. 47) authorizing the Secretary of War to use Government vessels for the transportation and distribution of rations furnished by the United States to sufferers by the Mississippi overflow, and a bill (S. No. 71) to execute certain treaty stipulations in relation to Chinese; in which bill and joint resolution concurrence of the House was requested.

SUFFERERS BY MISSISSIPPI OVERFLOW.

Mr. TAYLOR. I desire to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration a joint resolution just received from the Senate.

Mr. HERBERT. I understood the committee rose only informally.

The SPEAKER. The committee rose by motion.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not see in his seat the gentleman who has charge of the resolution, but in his absence I ask that there be taken from the Speaker's table for present consideration the joint resolution (S. R. No. 47) authorizing the Secretary of War to use Government vessels for the transportation and distribution of rations furnished by the United States to the sufferers by the Mississippi overflow.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be authorized in his discretion to use the steamers and other boats and vessels belonging to or now employed by the Government upon the Mississippi River and its tributaries, or so many thereof as may be necessary, in the transportation and distribution of the rations and supplies furnished by the United States or individuals to the sufferers by the recent overflow on such rivers; the expense of manning, equipping, and navigating such steamers and boats to be defrayed out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which necessary sum is hereby appropriated for that purpose.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TAYLOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TAYLOR. I move that the House again resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House, (Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, in the chair.)

CHARLES P. CHOUTEAU.

The CHAIRMAN. The business before the committee is the bill (H. R. No. 911) for the relief of Charles P. Chouteau.

Mr. TAYLOR. I rise to a question of order. If the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] was not debatable, as the Chair ruled, how can the substitute for that motion offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] be debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decided the substitute was in order and debatable; and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] is recognized in his own right.

Mr. HERBERT. I do not propose to discuss this question at any great length.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. I ask that the substitute motion be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield for that purpose?

Mr. HERBERT. I do not. I do not see any reason why we should not discuss this question.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. I merely desire to know what the substitute offered by the gentleman from Alabama is.

Mr. HERBERT. My motion is that the bill be laid aside to be reported adversely to the House.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. HERBERT. In giving my reasons for opposing this bill I shall endeavor to be brief and to confine myself to the real points in issue. This is one of what are commonly known as the iron-clad claims. A lot of gunboats were built during the war, and the contract price amounted to $14,201,000. Considerable changes were made, and necessarily made, in the progress of the work, on every one of these gunboats, and extra allowances were made and paid to the several contractors, amounting altogether to $5,302,847.91. After the allowances and payment for those extras, a good many, in fact all of these claimants have been asking, as this claimant has, either of one Department of the Government or another for the past sixteen years additional pay. Now, when this question is before the House, when it has been ably and elaborately discussed by one gentleman on the floor, and after an able and a thorough consideration by an able committee, a motion is made by a gentleman of the committee who reported the bill to refer it back again to that committee. What for? Because, he says, on yesterday new evidence in the case came to the knowledge of himself and other gentlemen of the committee; and therefore he says that the Committee on Claims itself ought to have an opportunity to consider this new evidence.

There is no reason, Mr. Chairman, why we may not consider this evidence here and now in the Committee of the Whole. That is what we are here for. It is not voluminous. It bears but upon two points. I have it here and propose to give it in full to this committee. And I say that this claimant here does not stand in such an attitude as to entitle him to a consideration and a reconsideration of this claim such as he asks, but that we ought, in justice to the Government—because his case will be cited as a precedent—we ought, in justice to the Government, now and here in Committee of the Whole, to decide upon the question and put the seal of condemnation of this House upon this claim.

I said the original claimant in this case did not occupy a very favorable attitude; he is not the original contractor. The claim was in favor originally of McCord. It has been transferred, and relief is now asked for the transferee, Chouteau. The claim became his in this way: after it had been submitted to an admiral of the United States Navy—Admiral Gregory—after the amount adjudged by Admiral Gregory had been paid in 1866, and a full receipt given for it, in 1867 we find McCord mortgaging this claim to Harrison, Chouteau & Valle for a past consideration; not for a consideration passing at the time, but for a debt then past due. We do not hear up to the time of that mortgage that McCord claimed to have anything due to him from the United States. As I say, a settlement had been had and a receipt in full of all claims and demands had been given in April, 1866. During the year 1866, under a resolution or act of Congress, the Secretary of the Navy appointed a board of officers to consider claims of this character. That board was called the Selfridge board, because Commodore Selfridge was at its head. It held its sessions and invited claimants to come before it in the fall of 1866, and the claimant, McCord, living at Saint Louis, failed to appear before that board. It was only recently, only the April before, that his receipt in full had been given, and he did not appear in the fall of 1866 before the Selfridge board at all.

Now that Selfridge board, acting under a very peculiar and extraordinarily generous and liberal act of Congress, was called to consider the question, not how much the United States fairly and justly owed to the builders of these gunboats, but under the act they were instructed to find out how much the building of these several gunboats cost the contractors without any regard whatever to the contract price. Acting under such instructions as those it goes without saying that the Selfridge board did find that the cost to the several gunboat owners was largely in excess of the contract prices because the price of labor and material had risen during the war.

When the findings of this board were made public, when the world came to know that large amounts had been found in favor of these contractors, then for the first time, so far as we can learn, in the spring of 1867, after the publication of the findings of the Selfridge board, McCord, then living in Saint Louis, acted as if he had a claim against the Government. We heard of it then only because he gave a mortgage on that claim to this man Chouteau for a debt past due. After the finding of the Selfridge board became known, Congress, seeing that a mistake had been made in the instructions to the Selfridge board, passed an act known as the act of March 2, 1867, constituting another board, and submitted to that board an entirely different inquiry. The board constituted under that latter act was known as the Marchand board, Commodore Marchand, a paymaster of the United States Navy, and the Chief Engineer of the United States Navy constituted the board.

The inquiry submitted to that board was this: How much additional cost did each contractor incur by reason of the delays rendered necessary by the changes in the contracts ordered by the Government from time to time while these gunboats were being constructed?

Before that board McCord appeared and submitted his case. The board found something due, under that act of Congress, to several contractors, but found that for the building of the Etlah, the boat built by McCord, there was nothing due. That is the second time that this question was adjudicated.

Now, in examining this subject, reading the report made to a former Congress in favor of this claimant, I found that an honorable committee of this House had charged upon the Marchand board that it had failed, or refused, to allow claimants to come before it and submit their evidence, or to be heard. I could not believe that such a charge as that was true. If officers of the United States Navy, having a question of that kind submitted to them, could report, as did the officers of the Marchand board, that they had performed that duty and had investigated these claims, when at the same time they had shut out all inquiry, the men making such a report as that would be unworthy to wear the uniform of the United States.

So, in order to investigate the question, I went to the Navy Department to ascertain whether the Marchand board had really investigated this claim. I found, just as I expected to find, that McCord was before that board; that he did introduce his evidence in full, and that he was heard. I have the statement of the facts in a letter directed to myself dated yesterday. I send it to the Clerk's desk, and ask to have it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR,
Washington, March 9, 1882.

SIR: In compliance with your verbal request of this date, I forward you the following information, taken from the papers which were before the Marchand board, relative to the monitor Etlah, Charles W. McCord, contractor:

First. Bill of work done on the monitor Etlah extra to contract, showing the value of doing the work at the time and place where done. It does not include the raising of the hull by special contract, nor a certain cross-floor agreement, $5,300, nor gun-carriages.

Second. Recapitulation of above.

Items of work extra to contract, as follows:

Hull		$64,267 62
Machinery		72,157 40
Smoke-pipe		2,440 51
Turret		45,085 32
Pilot-house		15,832 94
		199,783 79
The Department has paid on above bill:
Hull	$38,054 52
Machinery	47,080 96
Smoke-pipe	1,606 18
Turret	37,363 88
Pilot-house	13,271 71
	137,377 25
		62,406 54
We credit Department for items of work on original contract not due:
Hull	9,540 01
Machinery	14,976 23
Smoke-pipe	22 57
Turret	2,220 40
Pilot-house	751 03
	27,510 24
The Department has charged us for items of work not done:
Hull	$5,539 20
Machinery	12,781 23

Admiral Gregory charges us for work not done	21,270 25
		116,107 00

Fourth. Evidence:

George I. Barrett, draughtsman, testified that the ruling prices for labor in 1863–'64–'65 were from $4 to $5.50 per day, and that Mr. McCord paid him $8.

Joseph Mussler testified that he paid for coppersmith-work on the Etlah from $3 to $5.25 per day.

George Murray, D. Morris, and Charles Siskron testified that ship-carpenters were paid for labor on Etlah from $2.75 to $4.50 per day.

John J. Holliday testified that the ruling prices per day in 1863–'64–'65 were, for iron-finishers, from $2.16 to $3.50; brass-finishers, $2 to $3.50; boiler-makers, $2.25 to $4; laborers, $1.50 to $2; blacksmiths, $2.50 to $4.50; molders, $2.25 to $3.45; pattern-makers, $2.30 to $3.25.

William Colcord and Gaylord, Son & Co. testify that iron was sold during 1863–'64–'65 as follows: best flange, from 10½ to 16 cents; common flange, 8 to 14 cents; best bar-iron, 6½ to 11½ cents; common bar-iron, 4½ to 9½ cents; pig-iron, (No. 1,) 52 to 95 cents; pig-iron, (No. 2,) 45 to 80 cents.

T. C. Fletcher, governor of Missouri, states that he knows from personal knowledge that builders of vessels of war at Saint Louis incurred great difficulties; that the frequent drafts gave mechanics an opportunity to charge exorbitant wages.

A communication from Secretary of the Navy Welles, stating that the Secretary of War deemed it inexpedient to grant request to excuse drafted men at work on Etlah and Shiloh from being mustered into service until the completion of those vessels.

D. Gideon Welles testifies that he is and has been local inspector at Saint Louis of the Etlah from the beginning to the close of the work; that from his position he has been able to observe how difficult it was for the builder to obtain material and labor, in consequence of frequent invasions of rebel forces and guerrillas, and orders enrolling men into the service; that the vessel was built regardless of expense, and will compare favorably with any vessel of her class.

J. L. Tracy testifies that the naval station at Mound City advertised for 100 ship carpenters and 100 calkers, guaranteeing exemption from military and naval duty.

John B. Gray, late adjutant-general of Missouri, testifies similarly to D. G. Welles. Frank P. Blair in a communication states from his personal knowledge the builders of war vessels experienced great difficulties in securing laborers on account of frequent invasions of rebels and enrollment of males for military duty, and that the same causes operated to increase the prices of materials.

Henry F. Blow furnishes a similar communication.

The papers above quoted from are those presented by Charles W. McCord.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. D. WILSON, Chief of Bureau.

Hon. H. A. HERBERT, House of Representatives, Washington.

Mr. HERBERT. I have had that letter read to show that this claim was before the Marchand board, that testimony was permitted to be offered, was offered and was heard, and that the finding of that board is entitled to all the weight due to such a board called upon to consider a claim against the Government.

But I found also some other testimony yesterday which has been alluded to by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. CLARK.] It bore on the question whether or not a receipt had been given by Gilman & Son, of New York, as the agents for McCord, with the knowledge and consent of McCord, in full for all claims for extras and every thing else. Such a receipt had been exhibited and acted upon when suit upon this claim was decided by the Court of Claims.

Now, the material question for this Committee of the Whole to consider is, did Mr. McCord know of that receipt, and was he bound equitably as well as legally by it? Before stating what the testimony was, in order that the committee may understand its bearing and importance, let me first state what was the suit in the Court of Claims. The suit was brought on this claim in the fall of 1869, and was tried in October, 1873. The Court of Claims held that this receipt, which has been mentioned and read by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. HAMMOND,] given by Gilman & Son as attorneys and agents for McCord, was a complete bar; and that the plaintiff in that suit was therefore not entitled to justly recover anything.

The Court of Claims rested its decision solely upon the receipt. The claimant took the case to the Supreme Court of the United States on appeal, and the Supreme Court affirmed the decision of the Court of Claims. It decided, first, that the Court of Claims was right and that the receipt was a bar; and, secondly, it decided—and to this I desire to call the especial attention of members of this Committee of the Whole—it decided in addition that the plaintiff in that suit was not entitled to recover, and this as matter of law without reference to the receipt.

A portion of that decision has been read by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. HAMMOND.] But I desire to emphasize it by calling attention to the fact that the court held that when this contractor, McCord, made his contract with the Government, he, like every other contractor, took upon himself the risk that materials and labor might rise in value while the contract was being carried out. Just as, on the other hand, he would have claimed and had the right to claim the benefit of any change of price in his favor. There were, therefore, two grounds on which, according to law, the claimant had no right whatever to recover a cent.

To go back to the receipt. The report of the committee in this case places stress upon the fact that, to use the language of the report as nearly as I can recall it without reading it now, "in all probability McCord never saw the receipt" or the heading of it before it was signed by his attorneys, Gilman & Son, in New York.

Now, bear in mind that McCord lived in Saint Louis; that he built this gunboat in Saint Louis; that Gilman & Son were bankers in the city of New York, and were the agents of McCord to collect and apply money for him as he had indicated.

Admiral Gregory had stated this account; various payments had been made; and in April, 1866, he sent from New York City to Washington, to the proper Department here, a statement of what he said was the balance due in full for all extras, including those extras now claimed here. That account was passed by the Department, and the copies of letters there in the Department books show that on the 26th of April a letter inclosing that account was written to Gilman & Son in New York, the agents of McCord. That letter recited the heading of this account as receipted and called particular attention to the fact that the receipt was in full of all demands. On the same day—the 26th of April, bear in mind—another letter, exactly similar in every respect, was written to McCord in Saint Louis. I should state about these letters that I had them copied yesterday and intended to read them in full. I showed them to the gentleman from Missouri who reported this bill and who has spoken in relation to this claim here to-day, and he will bear me out that I am stating correctly their import. I have unfortunately mislaid them.

Now, if Gilman & Son, in the city of New York, had simply been collecting claims against the Government as they were sent to them approved, why is it they never collected this money until the 11th of May? Here were two weeks elapsing from the time the letter was sent to them in New York inclosing the claim until the date of collection. Can it be claimed that the Government had not money there? The account was approved; the sub-treasurer in New York was there to pay; but they waited for two weeks before they collected it. That was sufficient, amply sufficient, time for Gilman & Son to have heard from McCord, who had received a similar letter on the same day they received theirs; and on the 11th of May they collected the money and signed the receipt in full for all demands.

Now, these papers were not before the Court of Claims; they were not before the Supreme Court; yet if gentlemen will read the decision of the Supreme Court they will see that the court, from the lapse of time alone between the 26th of April and the 11th of May, came to the conclusion that there had been in all probability a conference between McCord and Gilman & Son before the settlement of their claim. The additional evidence that a letter was written calling the attention of Gilman & Son directly to the fact that the receipt was in full, and then that a letter was written directly to McCord in Saint Louis, calling his attention to the fact that the account had been sent and that it was claimed to be a payment in full, comes in and makes certain that which the Supreme Court thought probable without this evidence, namely, that McCord did know that Gilman & Son when they received this money for him did receive it in full of all demands.

It seems to me that no gentleman on this floor should wish to refer facts of this kind to any committee for reconsideration. We are all competent to draw our conclusions from those facts. They are the only additional facts in evidence in this case. If they are sufficient to cause the gentlemen of the Committee on Claims to change their opinions, and ask to be allowed to reconsider, why not vote now and here to condemn this claim?

This, Mr. Chairman, is a brief history of this case. I think I have given all the pertinent facts except what have been heretofore given by the gentleman from Georgia. One thing I ought to have stated. I said that this claimant himself was not the original contractor; that the claim had been mortgaged to him to secure a debt of $40,000 then past due. Every lawyer on this floor knows that a mortgage given to secure a precedent debt is not such a valuable consideration as entitles a party to be considered technically in equity a purchaser for value.

The only additional claim that this petitioner has to this sum of money (which bear in mind is $56,000) is that at a bankrupt sale he purchased this claim for the pitiful sum of $200. That is the amount of cash, and all the cash, the present petitioner ever paid for this claim against the Government of $56,000.

Recollect that this claim has been before different Departments of this Government from the time it was passed upon by Admiral Gregory, in 1865 or 1866, up to the present time. During these sixteen years it has been first before one admiral, then before a board consisting of three officers, then before the Court of Claims, then before the Supreme Court, and now when it comes here after all this length of time evidence is found right here in the Departments at Washington which shows conclusively that this man McCord sixteen years ago received the money knowingly in full payment of the claim which he is now setting up.

Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition in the world to animadvert upon the conduct of the committee in this case. I know most of the gentlemen composing the committee; and I am satisfied that they have considered this question not only fairly but industriously. The evidence that has been found in this case, as stated by the gentleman from Missouri, had escaped the attention of the counsel for the United States in the case brought in the Court of Claims. It is not to be expected that gentlemen of a committee can go ransacking through the archives and records of the Government to find evidence to defeat a claim which has been once before the Court of Claims and before the Supreme Court of the United States. It is not reasonable that they should be expected or required to find other or additional evidence. But this only shows, Mr. Chairman, how unfit a tribunal Congress is to adjudicate claims of this kind. We ought to pass some one of the bills now before Congress remitting claimants as far as possible to a tribunal where the United States will be represented by counsel. There are several bills of that kind now pending, and I hope that some one of them will be passed. For myself, if I cannot secure the passage of the bill I prefer, I will vote for any that promises to take away from committees of Congress the duty of considering claims of this kind.

I will say one word more, Mr. Chairman. This claim is the precursor, the forerunner of claims of the same class now pending before committees of this and the other House amounting to more than $2,000,000. This Committee of the Whole ought to act on this claim, and it ought to act now and act decisively, and therefore, believing it was important for the interest of the Government to defeat it, I have opposed the motion, even when made by the gentlemen of the committee, to recommit this claim, because I believe we are competent to decide the question and ought to do it.

I yield whatever time I have remaining to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. CLARDY.]

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Chairman, I subscribe to the sentiment last expressed by the gentleman from Alabama. I agree with him this is not the proper tribunal to try a case like the one now up for consideration. It is not the proper tribunal to investigate demands against the Government, and hence it is sought in this instance to send this bill to the judicial department of the Government in order there may be such investigation as the gentleman from Alabama suggests should be made.

I must dissent from much that has been said both by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] and the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HERBERT.] They both fell into the error of supposing this demand was submitted to what was known as the Selfridge board, and was not reported favorably by that board.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I said expressly it was not.

Mr. CLARDY. I understood the gentleman to say the other day that it was submitted to the Selfridge board, but if I am in error about that let it pass.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] asked whether I did so state, and I answered I did not.

Mr. CLARDY. I think, in reply to my colleague from Missouri, the gentleman said "if the gentleman from Missouri will wait he will see what I state," and then the gentleman did not refer to the matter at all.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I did not perhaps in so many words. I said that board was skipped and they went to the other board.

Mr. CLARDY. But the gentleman from Alabama distinctly said this morning this claim was submitted to the Selfridge board and that board, which reported favorably nearly on every claim presented to it, failed to mention this claim in its report. I wish to say to that gentleman that the Selfridge board was organized and had its meeting before the completion of the vessel about which we are now discussing. That vessel was not completed until the month of November, 1865, and the Selfridge board was organized in the year 1865, before the delivery of this vessel to the Government of the United States or its officials.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I may have made errors of dates, but the statute shows for itself.

Mr. CLARDY. The statute shows nothing about it; there was no statute about the Selfridge board; there is no resolution about the Selfridge board. It was organized by the Secretary of the Navy in order to ascertain certain facts.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. It was organized by a commission under a Senate resolution.

Mr. CLARDY. That was the Marchand board.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. That was under a joint resolution of the House and Senate.

Mr. CLARDY. I believe that is true. A resolution passed the Senate directing the Secretary of the Navy to organize this Selfridge board, but that cuts no figure in this case. The truth is, and I understand it is conceded, this claim was not submitted to that board. It was not passed by that board. It was submitted to the Marchand board which was organized under a joint resolution directing the Secretary of the Navy to organize a board for the purpose of ascertaining the extra cost of these iron-clad vessels. The gentleman from Alabama says these parties did appear before that board, although it has been stated time and again on the floor of this House that they had no opportunity to present their demands.

Mr. HERBERT. I do not think any gentleman stated on the floor of the House they had no opportunity, but it was stated in a previous report.

Mr. CLARDY. I believe it has been stated on the floor of the House. I believe it was stated by the gentleman from Maine, Mr. FRYE, and I believe he stated the truth when he made the statement. I believe before the Marchand board were the receipt and vouchers on file in the office of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. HERBERT. What does the gentleman do with the letter I have from the Bureau of Construction which states the reverse?

Mr. CLARDY. I mean all the papers in the possession of the Government which it thought fit to produce before that Marchand board were produced by it; I mean to convey the impression there was no opportunity for claimants or witnesses to go before that board and testify. As I do not wish to misrepresent the facts or misrepresent gentlemen, I will say I understand there were certain affidavits filed in support of that claim which these parties elected to file at the time of presentation. I understand, furthermore, and no gentleman will insist on the floor of this House that the findings or conclusion of that board were res adjudicata in any other proceeding. At most the gentleman can mention this only for the purpose of showing if these people had had a righteous demand they certainly would have obtained a favorable report from this board.

That board, Mr. Chairman, reported in favor of seven claimants, I believe, out of forty-nine—seven only—and it took the testimony that is now on file in the office of the Secretary of the Navy and no other testimony. It did not find, I admit, that there was a dollar due Mr. Chouteau or a dollar due Mr. Bestor, but the Congress of the United States afterward determined that he was in truth and in fact entitled to $125,000 for extras furnished for the construction of a vessel built in the same yard, at the same time, and under a similar contract with the one for which we seek to recover now.

This board failing to find for this claimant does any gentleman say that he is estopped? I repeat that this is only mentioned to show that if the claim was just this board would have made the award. But it was not done, and it has not done it in several instances that are beyond all question just and proper. It had, as I repeat, no testimony except that furnished by the Navy Department if we omit these written affidavits.

Well, in presenting that demand, it is nothing but natural that the party should accompany it with some evidence of their claim, showing its character, the nature of the claim, and the amount of it.

But, Mr. Chairman, this claimant, or those under whom he claims, instituted in 1869 their proceedings in the Court of Claims for the amount they believed was justly due them. My friend from Georgia says that it was after the passage of a bill authorizing them to go to the Court of Claims. But they were not barred by the statute of limitation. They went into the Court of Claims before any law was passed, and in fact no law was passed authorizing the claimants as a body to go to the Court of Claims; and the bill referred to by the gentleman from Georgia, and which was reported to the House by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. HAZELTON,] never in fact became a law. It was simply a report, but was never enacted into a law.

Then, Mr. Chairman, after waiting there for months and for years, a trial was reached, and that court undertook to pass upon this claim. What did that court find? Did it find that this was an unholy case represented by these gentlemen, or did it decide against the claimants on a mere technicality? That court found that for extras furnished there was due $56,222.50 to Charles P. Chouteau, as the surviving partner of the firm of Chouteau, Harrison & Valle, and to William A. Steele, who claimed under the assignment from Mr. McCord. That was the finding of that court. They found that the extras amounted in value to this sum; but the court held, as gentlemen have stated, that a certain receipt executed by Gilman, Company & Brothers, in the city of New York, in the absence of any testimony showing that it did not represent a receipt for the full amount of the indebtedness of the Government to these parties, was conclusive upon them; and I would concede, and anybody else would concede, that a receipt, while it has no particular dignity in the absence of testimony showing that it does not truly represent the actual state of facts, or that it does not represent the state of facts claimed, is to be taken as binding and conclusive.

The court further found that there was a certain other amount due to these parties for damages which ensued by reason of the delays in the construction of this vessel; but I shall not discuss that point, for I concede, with the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HERBERT,] that the Supreme Court as well as the Court of Claims has already passed upon that question and determined it adversely to this claim, the Supreme Court holding, in my opinion, that under the contract there can be no recovery against the Government growing out of this extension of time in the construction of these vessels. But the Supreme Court, following the Court of Claims, holds that of this $56,000, which was money due to both these men or to the men under whom they claim, for material which went into the construction of this vessel, and which was appropriated and used by the Government of the United States, that this $56,000 is justly due, unless, of course, it has been paid.

And that, Mr. Chairman, is a pertinent inquiry here. The question is, has it been paid? This Government certainly does not propose to repudiate an honest debt upon a mere technicality. It does not propose, I say, to refuse to pay this demand because the court has determined that in the absence of testimony which rebuts the presumption created by that receipt that therefore the claim could not be allowed. The Government of the United States does not propose, upon a mere technicality, to say to these people: We will not pay you; you may have a right, you have a just claim, but we have an advantage of you and we intend to keep it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am sure it will be admitted that I do not misquote the purport of this decision. But I will send to the Clerk's desk and have read in this connection the clause of the decision so far as it relates to this matter.

The Clerk read as follows:

From these circumstances the work required and done under the original contract was enhanced in cost to the contractor $122,166 beyond the contract price, less deductions for labor and materials saved by changes and alterations, $3,882.80, leaving a balance for increased cost of work required by the contract of $118,283.20.

And from the same circumstances the cost to the contractors of the extra materials and labor on the vessel required by the changes and alterations made, exclusive of special contracts paid, was $172,273.55, of which $116,111 were paid, leaving a balance for extra material and labor of $56,162.55.

Mr. CLARDY. Then I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that the only question is whether this money has been paid or not. These gentlemen say that it must have been paid, because Mr. McCord was notified on the day the voucher was sent to the city of New York, that McCord, whose residence was in the city of Saint Louis, was notified that a voucher for twenty-six thousand and odd dollars had been sent to the city of New York and would be collected by his attorneys in fact in that city, and that it was for the whole amount due.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. That was not what I said. I said the letter was written on the 26th April and payment was made on the 11th May.

Mr. CLARDY. If you say that you misstate the facts. I appeal to my friend from Alabama.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I quoted from the brief of counsel, Mr. Merriman.

Mr. CLARDY. I quote from the letter itself, which I have read.

Mr. HERBERT. The letter was written on the 26th April.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I refer to the letter from the bureau to McCord.

Mr. HERBERT. I said the letter to McCord from the Department here, also the letter to Gilman, were written on the 26th April.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I meant another letter.

Mr. CLARDY. I refer to the letter which notified McCord in the city of Saint Louis that this voucher had been sent. Suppose it did; does not the question recur: Has not the Government of the United States paid this money? If not, ought it, like an honest government, to pay it, or ought it to take an unconscionable advantage of one of its own citizens? I present now the affidavit of the men who collected this money, who say that they did not mean to receipt for the whole amount. But the affidavit will explain itself.

The Clerk read as follows:

CITY AND COUNTY OF NEW YORK, ss:

Winthrop Sargent Gilman and Theodore Gilman, being duly sworn, depose and say that they are now and for fifteen years past they have been members of the firm of Gilman, Son & Co., engaged in banking in the city of New York. That on or about the 24th day of November, 1863, they had a business interview with Charles W. McCord, who also addressed them a letter on that day, 24th of November, 1863, stating that he had handed Gilman, Son & Co. power of attorney to collect from the United States Government all payments that were to become due him for building an iron vessel, the Etlah, at Saint Louis, as per his contract of 24th June, 1863. And the said McCord gave orders in said letter to Gilman, Son & Co. that they should credit the State Savings Association, Saint Louis, with any money which they might collect under the said power of attorney and advise J. Rosenfeld, jr., the cashier thereof, that such credits were for account of McCord, Sanger & Steele; that at that time we did a large business for the State Savings Association as their bankers, and we were entirely ignorant of their relations to said Charles W. McCord, and also ignorant of his relations to the Government, our business being solely that of bankers for said McCord and for the corporation referred to; and said deponents further say that on the verbal instructions of said McCord to us he stated that all we were to do was simply as bankers to present and collect such bills as would be duly rendered or attested by Government officials for him, and make the transfer of the amounts by crediting the State Savings Association, as aforesaid, and with the real amounts due or to become due we had nothing further to do; that under authority of said power of attorney or of others issued thereafter to correct an informality, and in accordance with said verbal instructions of McCord and of his letter aforesaid, the firm of Gilman, Son & Co. made sundry collections according as the bills furnished them indicated, and especially that on the 11th May, 1866, they collected a bill amounting to $26,653.17 against the Navy Department in favor of said McCord, dated 24th April, 1866, the particulars of which like the particulars of all foregoing bills they did not question or investigate, that being no part of their duties under their instructions. Said deponents had at that time no knowledge of whether the Government owed said McCord more or less, and they considered then that as mere bankers their duties terminated when they had received the money for amount of said bills as the Government chose to render, and had credited the same with regular advice as they had been instructed to do, and this said firm did at the time.

That the said firm never took upon themselves a settlement of the accounts between Charles W. McCord and the Government for building the iron vessel, the Etlah, and if any receipts are held by the United States Government signed by said Gilman, Son & Co. as attorneys, which are, or ever may be, construed as implying that they made such a settlement, the same are erroneous in such implication.

That the said bankers have always been in the common habit of collecting whatever the Government decided to pay on similar presentation of bills, having frequently collected large amounts for contractors, but never in any case made a final settlement, that being a matter between the Government and the contractor.

And the deponents repeat and desire to emphasize the fact that their sole agency in the business between said McCord and the Government was that of bankers to receive what was paid them, and faithfully transmit the same to its proper destination, and further deponents say not.

WINTHROP SARGENT GILMAN.
THEODORE GILMAN.

Sworn to before me this 14th day of December, A. D. 1877.

JAMES N. BROWN,
Notary Public, county of Kings, State of New York.

Authorized by law to take acknowledgments, &c., in the county of New York.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TAYLOR rose.

Mr. CLARDY. I had agreed to reserve five minutes for the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] who yielded me the floor.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I would like to ask the date of that affidavit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sworn to before me this 14th day of December, A. D. 1877.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. That is the old affidavit I read last Friday.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think a little time should be given to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY] to complete the statement he has made.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not feel like yielding to him now.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman is now in the midst of his argument, and it would not take him long to complete his statement.

Mr. TAYLOR. How much time does he want?

Mr. CLARDY. I want but a few minutes, and I also desire to have five minutes to yield to the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HERBERT.]

Mr. TAYLOR. After a little time I may yield out of my time to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. CLARDY.]

In the mean time, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I desire to present briefly for the consideration of this Committee of the Whole some reasons why I think the substitute offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] for the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] should not be adopted. And will it be asking too much of the members of this committee, inasmuch as they sit here as judges upon the rights of citizens of this country, under the obligation of an oath to do justice, to give a moment's attention to a matter which may involve their duty, even though the subject-matter is not interesting, and the manner in which it may be presented may not be interesting?

I am a member of the Committee on Claims, and one who does not favor this bill. I say that in the beginning. At the same time I say that this bill ought not to be disposed of in the way proposed by the substitute of the gentleman from Alabama, and for this reason: this claim has been presented to various committees of Congress, has received their careful attention, and from time to time been favorably reported by them. A bill identical with the one under consideration has been passed by the Senate at this session of Congress. All the committees refer to the facts of the case as found and reported by the Court of Claims. The case stands reported about like this: under a contract with the Government of the United States this McCord built certain gunboats, and by reason of delays on the part of the Government and in consequence of the fault of the Government he incurred expenses and damages which the Court of Claims found amounted to $56,000; his money, ever unpaid by the Government of the United States.

Now, that is his claim, and that is very briefly the history of it and the manner in which various committees and tribunals have acted upon it. It is now presented to this House by the Committee on Claims of this House, and mainly or largely, as was said by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. HAMMOND,] upon evidence supposed by the Committee on Claims to be complete evidence, evidence that was ample and satisfactory to the members of the Committee on Claims who were present and acted on the bill.

Upon the consideration of this bill by this Committee of the Whole there has been developed certain new evidence, a kind of evidence that was not before the members of the Committee on Claims when they agreed to report this bill, that was not before the Senate, so far as I know, and that was not before the Court of Claims. That evidence has now been presented to the Committee on Claims of this House.

I now ask this Committee of the Whole, aside from the general statement of the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. HAMMOND,] how many of you know what that evidence is? And what time have you had to digest that evidence? And, except from the eloquent appeal of the gentleman from Georgia for you now to bury this corrupt claim so deep that the hand of resurrection will never reach it, how are you to act? I say there is not a man on this side of the House who knows what his argument was; and there are not many on the other side of the House who know it, and they cannot know it until they read it in the RECORD to-morrow morning. Yet he asks us to vote on this bill to-day.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. TAYLOR. Certainly.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Does the gentleman forget the fact that what I assert to be true the gentleman who reported this bill got up here this morning and said was true, that he had made an investigation and wanted this bill recommitted so that the committee might take back the recommendation they had made?

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not want the gentleman to misunderstand me. I say that so far as I understand it his statement is true; and I am with the gentleman in reference to it. Others differ; there are men here besides the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. CLARK,] the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. HAMMOND,] and myself, who wish to know the facts about this matter.

My object in supporting the motion made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] is that this matter may be recommitted to the Committee on Claims so that it may be carefully re-examined. And if that committee finds in fact that the evidence is what I understand it to be, and what the gentleman from Georgia knows better than I do it is, and what the gentleman from Missouri now believes it to be, then my purpose is to have the matter reported adversely to this House so that this bill and the Senate bill can be acted upon intelligently. In that way the whole House will be enabled to understand the merits of the case.

I desire that this may be done, that this investigation may be had, and if there is no further desire to prolong this discussion, and I hope there is not, and the Committee of the Whole is prepared now to vote upon it, I shall move that the committe rise for the purpose of closing debate.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TAYLOR. Certainly.

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to ask this question: I see in the report made here by the Committee on Claims that the Court of Claims ascertained that there was a balance due this claimant of $56,162.55. Has that money been paid to the claimant?

Mr. TAYLOR. That money has not been paid. As I now understand it, the whole matter has been settled and adjusted and receipted for. So far as the matter of the $56,000 is concerned, I have no time now to go into it, but for one I am inclined to reject it.

Still I say that this House ought to act now upon this new evidence more deliberately and more intelligently than it can possibly act with a partial understanding of the evidence which has been given.

Mr. CLARDY. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. TAYLOR. Certainly.

Mr. CLARDY. The opponents of this bill have now been heard at length.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will yield to the gentleman what time he desires.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR. I will yield five or ten minutes.

Mr. CLARDY. Say ten minutes.

Mr. TAYLOR. Very well, I will yield ten minutes, and then I will move that the committee rise to close debate.

Mr. CLARDY. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HERBERT.]

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman from Missouri has had read the affidavit of Winthrop Gilman and Theodore Gilman, which was made December 14, 1877. It will be noticed that in this affidavit only two members of the firm concur; the other members are not mentioned. Why they are not heard from does not appear, except from this consideration, that if they had sworn they would have been obliged to swear that the letter written on the 26th of April, 1866, inclosing that claim, reached them; that their attention was called to this matter; that they did know what they were doing, although these two selected members did not. That, it seems to me, is a sufficient answer to this affidavit; and when you look into it carefully you will see that it seeks to attract attention to transactions long since past; it goes back to and narrates with great particularity the first conversation between the members of the firm and McCord and the powers of attorney given by McCord; but it never once names the letter which carried that claim. Do gentlemen believe that the claim got there without that letter? And if that letter was received calling attention specifically, at the same time that it carried the claim, to the fact that it was in full settlement, then the absence of the names of other members of the firm in that affidavit gives ground to the presumption that if they had sworn they would have been obliged to swear that they did know they were receiving this amount in full from the United States.

The question put by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] was whether this amount found due by the Court of Claims has been paid. I want to call attention to this statement of account read from the Clerk's desk this morning. In the recapitulation they say:

We charge the Government for work done without contract at the Saint Louis standard prices of labor and materials, $199,783.79.

Then they state that Admiral Gregory allowed them only so much, and that the difference between the two sums amounts to $56,166.55, the amount claimed here. Now, Admiral Gregory passed upon this account just after the transaction, and he allowed all that he believed was due to those parties. True, the Court of Claims afterward, the counsel of the Government showing by his conduct that he was relying solely on that receipt, did find that an additional sum was due, but held it barred by the receipt. Now, if the Government had offered the very evidence that was before Admiral Gregory when he stated this account the findings of the Court would probably have been just what Admiral Gregory found. To that even as to that amount, leaving out the receipt entirely, McCord was paid, and paid in full the amount found due to him at that time by an officer of the Government, whose duty it was, with all the facts before him, to state the account. Years and years afterward this claimant, who is simply a transferee, who never paid more than $200 for this claim of $56,000, comes before this Congress and asks it to donate to him this sum of $56,000 on account of a claim for which he paid only $200.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] a question.

Mr. CLARDY. I hope it will not come out of my time.

Mr. HOLMAN. It will not, of course; there will be ample time. I wish to know whether the decision of the Supreme Court in this case does not repudiate the data on which the Court of Claims found this sum of $56,000 to be due?

Mr. HERBERT. The Supreme Court repudiates the very principle upon which the Court of Claims proceeded.

Mr. CLARDY. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will repeat his question I will answer it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to know whether the Supreme Court, in deciding this McCord case, did not disallow the data and repudiate the principle involved in the decision of the Court of Claims allowing $56,000?

Mr. CLARDY. I answer the gentleman from Indiana (and I would answer him in the language of the Supreme Court if I had time to read it) no; but the court expressly affirms that this $56,000 is due unless it has been paid; and it holds that the receipt is conclusive evidence of payment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now my friend from Missouri will have ample time, will he allow this passage from the decision of the Supreme Court to be read?

Mr. CLARDY. It is the language of the Supreme Court as to another item that the gentleman refers to.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, this very item. I will seek an opportunity to have it read hereafter.

Mr. CLARDY. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is true there is testimony tending to show that this receipt was accepted as evidence of a complete payment of that demand. We want to send this case to the Court of Claims that this matter may be passed upon. It is true that the $56,000 has not been paid, and unless these gentlemen compromised the rights of Mr. McCord, had authority under that power of attorney to do so and meant to do so, then he is entitled to his recovery if the case can be reopened in the Court of Claims.

Mr. Chairman, I have little time, but I would like to reply to the allusions which have been made to the claimant in this case, Mr. Charles P. Chouteau. I want to state that the members of the old firm of Chouteau, Harrison & Valle, as well as Mr. Charles P. Chouteau himself, are personally and intimately known to every member of the Missouri delegation, and I apprehend also to every member of the Illinois delegation in both Houses of Congress, as gentlemen of unquestioned integrity.

And when he states as a proposition of law that because there was not an assignment of a claim of past indebtedness, therefore it was invalid, or substantially that, he does not utter, I am sure, what he really meant to say. It is true of course as to subsequent purchasers or as to equities existing against these parties the transfer would be invalid, or amount to nothing, but there are equities in this case, except in behalf of this claim.

Will the committee indulge me while I have read the discussion which took place in the Senate May 13, 1872, on the claim of George C. Bestor? It is a claim which, as I have said, was built under the same contract, at the same time, for the same amount, with the same payments, with the same extras, item for item. Here it is:

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask the committee why this claim has not been sent to the Court of Claims like other claims of a similar character?

Mr. NYE. It has been proposed to send this claim there, and the committee have recommended the passage of a bill for its payment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know there is a gentleman in Cincinnati who built one of these steam vessels and has been waiting here for years——

Mr. HAMLIN. And this man has waited here until he has died.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know; but the case to which I refer was finally sent to the Court of Claims. Now I want to know why this claim is not sent to that court also?

Mr. NYE. For the reason that the vessel was not accepted until 1866. We kept it on his hands for two years.

Mr. SHERMAN. That makes it no worse than other cases.

Mr. NYE. The committee thought it was one of that class which should be considered by Congress—a case entirely different from those sent to the Court of Claims. There is an immense package of papers on the subject which have been thoroughly examined during the past two or three years.

Mr. LOGAN. The bill has passed both Houses at different times.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TAYLOR. I yield for two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. I do not desire to speak to the merits of this question, but will say that the Committee on Claims has a class of claims before it, of which this is one and which we are about to consider together. I believe therefore this new evidence which has been found should be referred to that committee in order that it may cast light, as it will, on claims of a similar character. I think it is due to the Committee on Claims this bill should be recommitted in order that we may consider well and fully the matter with this newly discovered evidence before us.

Mr. TAYLOR. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is that debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. HOLMAN. A motion to rise and report a bill favorably or adversely is debatable.

The CHAIRMAN. But that is not the present motion, but to rise for the purpose of closing debate, which is not debatable.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 911) for the relief of Charles P. Chouteau, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. CONVERSE. I rise to make a privileged motion. The House has ordered a night session and will be engaged to a late hour, and now I move when it adjourns it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. DAWES. There is a special order for to-night.

The SPEAKER. This does not affect that special order.

Mr. CALKINS. It is for pensions.

The SPEAKER. Invalid pensions.

Mr. CALKINS. I hope the House will not adjourn, then.

The SPEAKER. This motion does not involve the night session for invalid pensions.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 80, noes 27.

Mr. SPARKS demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONVERSE moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution (S. R. No. 47) authorizing the Secretary of War to use Government vessels for the transportation and distribution of rations furnished by the United States to the sufferers by the Mississippi overflow; when the Speaker signed the same.

CHARLES P. CHOUTEAU.

Mr. TAYLOR. I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar; and pending that motion, I move that all debate on the pending bill in committee and amendments thereto be closed in one minute after its consideration shall be resumed.

The latter motion was agreed to, and also the motion to go into the committee.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, (Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The committee resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 911) for the relief of Charles P. Chouteau, on which all debate has been limited to one minute.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a motion after making a single remark. I wish to ask the gentleman from Missouri what new testimony he refers to. I apprehend the committee may come to a vote on the proposition submitted under a misapprehension; and I will yield the floor until the gentleman answers the question.

Mr. CLARDY. Does the gentleman address himself to me?

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire what new testimony the gentleman has referred to, which has not been discovered during all of these ten or twelve years, as that may be a matter which would influence the action of the committee upon this proposition.

Mr. CLARDY. I suppose the gentleman refers to the allusion made to the subject by my colleague, Mr. CLARK.

Mr. HOLMAN. It was also stated, as I understand, by the gentleman from Ohio. Now, what is that new testimony?

Mr. CLARK. The gentleman from Alabama has caused to be read some letters——

Mr. HOLMAN. But that is not new testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate under the order of the House upon this bill is exhausted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands the effect of the motion of the gentleman from Indiana it will be that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation to strike out the enacting clause.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 40, noes 46.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order that no quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order having been made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. CLARDY were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 44, noes 56.

So (no further count being demanded) the motion was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion now recurs on the substitute presented by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. TAYLOR. Let the motion of the gentleman from Missouri, with the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia and the substitute of the gentleman from Alabama, be reported in connection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state for the informatian of the committee that the gentleman from Missouri moved that the bill be laid aside with the recommendation to the House that it be recommitted to the Committee on Claims. That was amended by the gentleman from Georgia that the bill be laid aside and reported to the House with the recommendation that it do not pass. The substitute offered by the gentleman from Alabama is that the bill be laid aside to be reported adversely to the House.

Mr. CAMP. That is the same thing.

Mr. CLARDY. Precisely the same.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. The effect of a vote upon that proposition would be identical with a vote on the amendment I have submitted. I therefore withdraw the amendment.

Mr. TAYLOR. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will also withdraw his substitute and let us have a vote on the proposition to recommit.

Mr. BUCKNER. Take a vote on the motion to recommit the bill, and test the sense of the committee in that way.

Mr. HERBERT. If the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia is withdrawn I shall insist upon a vote upon the substitute.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 19, noes 55.

So (no further count being demanded) the motion to lay the bill aside and report it to the House with an adverse recommendation was not agreed to.

The motion that the bill be laid aside with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Claims was then agreed to.

MAJOR WILLIAM M. MAYNADIER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 670) for the relief of Major William M. Maynadier.

Mr. HOLMAN. This bill has been already read at a preceding meeting of the committee. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] is not in his seat, and in his absence I suggest that the bill be informally passed over.

Mr. WHEELER. I must object to that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HOLMAN. This bill was passed over on the last private bill day, I think——

Mr. WHEELER. I think the main reason why it was passed over was that the report was not printed or was not prepared a sufficient length of time to have it read by members of the House. Now, if the gentleman from Wisconsin desires to speak on this bill, of course I shall yield to the request that it be passed over informally, but I have received no intimation of any desire on his part to be heard upon it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think he does desire to speak upon the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. If he had notified me I would certainly not have objected to its going over.

Mr. HOLMAN. All that I wish is to call the attention of the committee to the fact that by a very decisive vote some time ago the Committee of the Whole House struck out the enacting clause of this bill, and it was recommitted, I believe, at the instance of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr WHEELER.] If there is any new fact brought to the attention of the committee, that, of course, is a proper subject for our consideration. But in the absence of any new evidence I desire to interpose the motion submitted, I think by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. BRAGG,] to strike out the enacting clause, unless consent is given that it be informally passed over.

Mr. DUNNELL. Let the bill go over.

Mr. HOLMAN. If any new facts are to be submitted to the committee I shall not insist upon the motion. Otherwise I shall move to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. DUNNELL. I understand that the gentleman from Indiana is quite willing that it shall go over.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection, as the gentleman from Wisconsin is not present.

Mr. DUNNELL. Then I hope the motion to strike out the enacting clause will not be insisted upon.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not insist upon it if the bill is allowed to be passed over informally.

There being no objection the bill was informally passed over.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

G. W. CANDEE.

The committee resumed its session.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 182) for the relief of Major G. W. Candee.

Mr. HOLMAN. That bill stands upon the same footing with the last one and ought to be governed by the same principle. I ask that it be passed over informally.

There being no objection the bill was informally passed over.

CHARLES A. LUKE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 54) for the relief of Charles A. Luke.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,500, to be paid by the Secretary of War to Charles A. Luke, now of the Territory of Arizona, in full compensation for property taken from him for the use of the Government in the extension of the military reservation at Camp Mohave, in said Territory, under General Orders No. 62, dated headquarters of the Army, August 16, 1869.

Mr. MASON. The report in this case shows the Committee on Claims recommend that the bill be amended by striking out "$1,500" and inserting "$1,200."

Mr. HAWK. Let the report be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment recommended by the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 54) for the relief of Charles A. Luke, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report that a bill similar to the bill in question was introduced into the Forty-third Congress, and was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, which committee reported the same favorably to the House, with an amendment allowing to the claimant $1,200 instead of $1,500, as provided in the bill, and the bill as thus amended passed the House and went to the Senate, but so late in the session that it was not acted upon there. That a bill similar to the present one, except as to the amount, was introduced into the last Congress and was referred to the Committee on Claims, but was not examined or reported upon by that committee. That bill provided for paying the claimant the sum of $1,200.

The report of the Committee on Military Affairs upon the bill of the claimant introduced into the Forty-third Congress (H. R. No. 1340) fully states the facts in this case, which are as follows:

"On or about the 1st of January, 1869, claimant was in peaceable possession of a certain house, which he had erected in Mohave City, near Camp Mohave, in the Territory of Arizona. The land upon which his house was erected was not within the limits of the reservation, nor was it in any way withheld from settlement or occupation. On or about the date above mentioned, to wit, January 1, 1869, the military reservation at Mohave was extended so as to embrace within its limits the house of claimant as well as those of sundry other citizens.

"In conformity with General Orders No. 62, headquarters of the Army, August 16, 1869, these citizens, including claimant, were, on or about the 20th day of December, 1869, dispossessed of their buildings, and have not since been allowed the use or possession thereof.

"The claims for damages by reason of being expelled from their homes were submitted to a board of officers convened by proper authority August 16, 1870.

"This board considered and allowed damages to all the other claimants except C. A. Luke. Regarding this claim the board say: 'It was not considered, as the claimant was removed from the reservation of Camp Mohave prior to the promulgation of General Orders No. 62, 1869, for a violation of post orders in selling liquor by the bottle to enlisted men of the command.'

"This alleged fact is denied by the sworn statement of claimant and several other sworn witnesses.

"But whether this allegation be true or false, cannot materially affect the justice of this claim. The Judge-Advocate-General, to whom this case was referred by the Secretary of War, says:

"Neither the fact that this party sold liquor contrary to law, nor the fact that he was for this reason required to leave the reservation, would, per se, in the opinion of this bureau, affect his right of property in the house for the value of which he has made claim. * * * In this case, indeed, it has never been claimed that the building was forfeited because of the act of the party in selling liquor. * * * The claim seems to stand upon the same basis as the other claims passed upon by the board, for houses, &c., destroyed or used by the Government in Mohave City.

"The party who built the house makes affidavit that it cost $1,250.

"Claimant avers that the said building cost him $1,500 in currency, and that at the time of his dispossession it was reasonably worth that sum. From the fact the awards to all the other claimants were materially reduced below the amount claimed by the board of officers, who were able to make personal inspection of the property, the committee think the sum of $1,200 a sufficient indemnity.

"They therefore recommend that the bill be amended by striking out in line 5 the words 'one thousand five,' and inserting in lieu thereof the word 'twelve,' and as so amended the committee recommend that this bill do pass."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to make an inquiry of the gentleman who reported this bill. I find that it is based upon the following facts: that this claimant had erected a building on what I suppose was Government property in the Territory of Arizona, and that he was dispossessed by military order. The question I wish to ask the gentleman who reports the bill is this: if this building was erected by a trespasser, by a person having no authority to erect it, and if by military order the building was taken off from the land on which it was erected, on what principle does he claim the Government should pay the value of the building? That is not clearly presented in the report.

If the building was erected on property belonging to the Government, without authority of the Government; if the person erecting the building was a mere trespasser, and if he was moved off by military authority, that of itself would not make a claim against the Government.

Mr. MASON. There is a fact connected with this case which does not appear in the report, but which I perfectly well recollect as a fact which appears in the papers in the case. The Government took possession of this building and used it for quartermaster purposes within the reservation; and the Government to-day are using this man's property.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will call the attention of the gentleman from New York to the language of the report:

In conformity with General Orders No. 62, headquarters of the Army, August 16, 1869, these citizens, including claimant, were, on or about the 20th day of December, 1869, dispossessed of their buildings, and have not since been allowed the use or possession thereof.

As to that the gentleman is right and I was wrong. But here is my question. This building, if I understand aright, is erected on Government land. If that was done by authority of the Government, and if the Government afterward appropriated the building, the Government ought to pay for it. But if the building was erected without authority of the Government, should the Government pay for it?

Mr. MASON. This was Government land and there had been no objection to its being used, as the report will show.

Mr. SPARKS. If the Government allowed this party to put the building there without opposition and subsequently dispossessed him and took the property itself, it seems to me equitable the Government should pay the claimant the value of the building. Is that the state of facts?

Mr. MASON. It is; and the only reason this claimant was not allowed damages for his building in this case was that the board of officers did not consider the case for the reason that he himself was removed with his building. He had been prevented from residing on the reservation because it was claimed that he had sold liquor to soldiers by the bottle. That he denied. My report is based on the theory that it is immaterial whether he had been selling liquor or not; that the Government might confiscate his liquor but not his building without compensation.

Mr. HOLMAN. The record in this case is not very clear.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I would like the bill to be reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill and report have both been read.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. There was a discussion which was not heard in this part of the Hall.

The CHAIRMAN. Prior to the discussion the bill and report were read.

Mr. MASON. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MILLER. I move, by way of amendment to that motion, that the bill be laid aside to be reported with an adverse recommendation.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] to state what objection he has to this bill.

Mr. MILLER. I did not expect to say anything about the bill, but since the gentleman has asked me to state my objection to it I will say that according to the statement in the report this man ought not to have a cent. His claim was submitted to a board of officers and they stated he ought not to have anything. They decided he should be removed from the reservation because he was selling intoxicating liquors, and not by virtue of the military order by which the others were dispossessed. And it strikes me as remarkable, if I have a correct idea of the bill, that any committee should have reported it.

Mr. MASON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is entirely mistaken as to the facts. In the first place this board of officers did not consider the claim of this claimant at all.

Mr. HAWK. Why did they not consider it?

Mr. MASON. For the reason, as they stated, that he himself had been removed from the reservation before that for selling liquor; that he had been removed before the reservation was extended. The Judge-Advocate-General says in this case, as appears in the report, that even conceding the fact, which this claimant denies, that he had sold liquor to the soldiers, that was no forfeiture of his property.

This case, in a word, is just this: in 1869 this claimant was the owner of the building in question. It was outside of the Mohave Camp reservation. In 1869 that reservation was extended so as to include the buildings of this claimant and of other persons.

In the same year a military board was appointed to consider these claims. That board considered them all and assessed the damages of all parties except of this claimant. They state they did not consider the case of this claimant because he had been removed from the reservation for selling liquor before the reservation was extended.

But even conceding that he had been selling liquor by the bottle to the soldiers, that is no reason why the Government should not pay this man for his property. They brought the property within the reservation by extending the reservation, and then took possession of it, and it is in evidence that the Government has been using this man's building ever since. That is all there is in this case.

Mr. MILLER. I will read from the report made in this case:

This board considered and allowed damages to all the other claimants except C. A. Luke. Regarding this claim the board say, "it was not considered, as the claimant was removed from the reservation of Camp Mohave prior to the promulgation of General Orders No. 62, 1869, for a violation of post orders in selling liquor by the bottle to enlisted men of the command."

It seems that this man was not satisfied to keep a hotel or a bar, but he went sneaking around with liquor in a bottle selling it to the soldiers. Now pay a man for that! The idea of paying a man who spent his time running around with whisky in a bottle in his coat pocket selling it to the soldiers! I hope there is not a man in this House who will vote for that, not even the members of the committee reporting this bill.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is the most surprising thing in the world to me that a gentleman who is compelled to act in a body of men sitting as judges of fact and law, and deciding important questions that arise here with the same carefulness and deliberation and absence of prejudice as though they sat upon the bench of a court of law or equity, should so misconceive a case as this has been misconceived, and under that misconception should allow himself to get excited in regard to the case under consideration.

This is not a case where we propose to pay a man for keeping a hotel, or where it is proposed to pay a man for selling liquor, or where it is proposed to excuse him for selling liquor. In considering this case, I appeal only to men who here and elsewhere have the willingness and the capacity to take the question presented to them and that question alone and decide it.

The question now before us is simply this and nothing more: this man had property worth more than $1,200, property belonging to him as clearly as any man's property belongs to him. The Government took that property from him under such circumstances that it was bound to pay him, as it has paid everybody else who stood in the same relation and had property there.

Mr. HAWK. Why did not the board award the claim?

Mr. TAYLOR. In the first place, I care nothing for the reason why the board did not make the award in this case. When I am called upon to act I will act upon the question for myself. The military board sitting upon the case acted as it thought best. When the case comes to me I act upon it for myself.

The reason given by the board is the reason now given here, that because this man had sold liquor in violation of the rules they would, without any trial, without any examination, without any jurisdiction, without any law and in his absence, fine him by confiscating his property. That is all that it amounts to. The board confiscates his property in his absence, without any trial, without any examination, without any evidence and without any law.

Now, if this committee shall say that that is paying a man for his property taken by the Army in the meaning of the Constitution of the United States, then I am ready to say we had better not only abandon this kind of cases for some other tribunal but we had better abdicate actually, individually and generally.

Mr. MILLER. Just one word. The Government of the United States did not confiscate this man's property. This man was removed from the reservation because he persisted in violating the orders of the military officers. When he was removed he left his house there, not because the Government took possession of it but because he violated the law and was removed.

Now because he was removed as a violator of the law, he comes here and asks us to pay him for his building. There is no evidence in this case that the Government took possession of his property. Why should he be paid? Why should he come here and claim pay for this property? If he had obeyed the law he would have remained in possession of his own property and would have occupied it. The property is there for him; let him go back and take it, and not come here and ask us to pay him for it.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is no evidence that he sold liquor. And there is evidence that his property was taken possession of by the Government. The Attorney-General says that this is an attempt to confiscate his property.

Mr. SPARKS. Will the gentleman yield to me for one word?

Mr. TAYLOR. Certainly I will, if I can hear the gentleman in all this confusion.

Mr. SPARKS. I want simply to make an inquiry. It is whether or not the Government did take possession of this property and use it?

Mr. TAYLOR. Of course it did. That is the statement, and the evidence is clear and uncontradicted. The Government took the property, kept it and has possession of it now; and the only excuse for not paying the man for the property is that he ought not to have any rights which the Government is bound to respect.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me to ask him a question? Is there a report from the Quartermaster's Department showing that the Government appropriated this property to its own use?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, sir; there is such a report.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is there any evidence that this man was authorized to build this house on Government property?

Mr. TAYLOR. He did so by permission; and everybody else in the same situation has been paid.

Mr. HOLMAN. One other question. This matter was inquired into by a board of officers on the ground. Had the Committee on Claims before them the evidence on which that board of officers acted in refusing to allow this claim? My friend from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] wishes me to inquire also whether there is any recommendation from the Quartermaster's Department or the War Department that payment be made for this property?

Mr. TAYLOR. In reply to these questions I can only say, not having been a member of the sub-committee, that I was informed those things were in evidence and were before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion that the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The question being taken, the motion was agreed to; there being—ayes 72, noes 6.

MOSES R. RUSSELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2851) for the relief of Moses R. Russell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Moses R. Russell, of the city of Carrollton, in Carroll County, State of Georgia, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $270, excess of revenue license to distill peaches and apples paid by him, he having paid for said license the sum of $300 when the license fee was only $30.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Claims was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the words "sum of," and insert "$300 paid by him September 11, 1868, as a distiller of brandy from apples and peaches exclusively, for the period of nine months, ending April 30, 1879, under section 59 of the act of July 20, 1868, when by decision numbered 173 of the Treasury Department, made pursuant to section 2 of said act, such distillers were exempted from the payment of a special tax."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

CHARLES F. BENJAMIN AND HENRY H. SMITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3542) for the relief of Charles F. Benjamin and Henry H. Smith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Charles F. Benjamin and Henry H. Smith the sum of $250 each, in full compensation for services rendered the Treasury Department by said Benjamin and Smith in the investigation of the fradulent claim of Sugg Fort.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the report in this case had better be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Charles F. Benjamin and Henry H. Smith, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report:

That the said petition was presented at the close of the last session of the Forty-sixth Congress and referred to the Committee on Claims, which committee reported favorably thereon to the Committee on Appropriations. The report reached that committee too late for action, and your committee fully concurring in the report referred to, adopt the same and make it a part of this report, as follows, namely:

"That the said petitioners, on the 21st of October, were appointed special agents of the Treasury Department for the purpose of inquiring into the validity of the claim of Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee, for $23,723.50 paid by the Treasury Department on the 30th of June, 1876, which said claim was alleged to be false and fraudulent, and the allowance of which was claimed to have been corruptly procured; that said petitioners were assured they should be paid for their services out of an appropriation at the service of the Department; that they performed their duties as such special agents to the entire satisfaction of the Solicitor and Secretary of the Treasury; that as a result of their labors the said Sugg Fort and sundry other persons concerned with him in procuring the allowance and payment of said claim (which was shown to be wholly fictitious and fraudulent) were criminally indicted in the District of Columbia, a judgment for the full amount of the claim was recovered against Fort in the United States circuit court for the middle district of Tennessee, and an investigation was ordered by the Secretary of the Treasury as to the details of the allowance of said claim, which resulted in the resignation of the accounting officers who passed the claim, the dismissal of several clerks in said offices, and a radical change in the system of examination and allowance of claims in the Treasury Department.

"For these services the Solicitor recommended that Messrs. Smith and Benjamin be paid the sum of $500, and a voucher for that amount was approved by the Solicitor, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, which said voucher was also approved by the First Auditor. The First Comptroller having suggested a doubt as to whether said payment could be made under section 1765 of the Revised Statutes, the said petitioners being then salaried officers of the United States, Mr. Benjamin being clerk of the Southern claims commission, and Mr. Smith being clerk of the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives, the Secretary of the Treasury, under date of June 3, 1876, addressed a letter to Hon. Samuel J. Randall, then chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations, approving the recommendation of the Solicitor of the Treasury that Messrs. Smith and Benjamin be paid the sum of $500 for said services, the said letter of recommendation being as follows, namely:

"'TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
"'Washington, D. C., June 3, 1876.

"'SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith for the consideration of your committee copy of a communication received from Henry H. Smith, late clerk of the Committee on War Claims, House of Representatives, and Charles F. Benjamin, clerk of the commissioners of claims, asking for an appropriation of $500 for services rendered in the investigation and detection of the fraudulent claim of Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee.

"'Your attention is invited to the indorsement of the honorable Solicitor of the Treasury upon the copy referred to, containing a recommendation in favor of the appropriation asked for.

"'Very respectfully,
"'B. H. BRISTOW, Secretary.

"'Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
"'Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

"'TREASURY DEPARTMENT, SOLICITOR'S OFFICE,
"'May 31, 1876.

"'Respectfully returned to the honorable Secretary of the Treasury.

"'I am of opinion that an appropriation of $500 should be recommended to Congress for payment of services performed by Henry H. Smith and Charles F. Benjamin in the investigation of the Sugg Fort claim.

"'BLUFORD WILSON,
"'Solicitor of the Treasury.'

"The recommendation was concurred in by the Committee on Appropriations, and an item appropriating said sum was reported in the sundry civil appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and passed the House as reported.

"The letter of the Secretary, with the indorsement of the Solicitor, was mislaid by the House conferees on said bill, and as a result the item was stricken out by the Senate. Application was recently made by the petitioners to the Secretary of the Treasury to renew the recommendation of his predecessor, which he decides he cannot do without a request from the Committee on Appropriations to that effect, the case having once been recommended to that committee for appropriation.

"Your committee are of opinion that the amount recommended by the Treasury Department is a reasonable compensation for the services rendered, and accordingly report back the said petition for reference to the Committee on Appropriations, with the recommendation that the following item be included in the deficiency bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, namely: 'For the payment of Charles F. Benjamin and Henry H. Smith for services rendered the Treasury Department in the investigation of the fraudulent claim of Sugg Fort, $500.'"

Your committee, concurring in the foregoing recommendation, report the accompanying bill, and recommend its passage.

Mr. RANDALL. This is a rightful claim, and ought to be paid.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. TAYLOR. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, reported that the Committee of the Whole House, having had under consideration the Private Calendar, had directed him to report several bills with sundry recommendations.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that at the time of the adjournment on last Friday several bills which had been reported on that day from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar were not disposed of. They will now be taken up in their order.

PRIVATE BILLS PASSED.

Joint resolution and bills of the following titles, reported on last Friday from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar with a favorable recommendation, were severally taken up, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 54) to authorize Lieutenant Henry R. Lemly, United States Army, to accept a position under the Government of the United States of Colombia;

A bill (H. R. No. 1979) granting a pension to Samuel Burwell; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1143) for the relief of Timothy E. Ellsworth.

JULIAETT PRESCOTT.

The next bill coming over from last Friday was the bill (H. R. No. 3541) directing the issue of a check to the Pequonnock National Bank in place of one heretofore issued to Juliaett Prescott, a pensioner of the United States, and lost.

Mr. RAY. I desire to offer an amendment describing more particularly this check which was lost. The striking out of the preamble of the bill makes this amendment necessary. I move to amend by striking out, after the words "October 4, 1879," the words "as aforesaid," and inserting the following:

Said lost check being No. 134210, dated October 3, 1879, for the same amount, drawn by D. W. Gooch, pension agent at Boston, Massachusetts, payable to the order of Juliaett Prescott and by her indorsed to said bank.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WALLACE W. SCREWS.

The next bill coming over from last Friday was the bill (H. R. No. 1957) for the relief of Wallace W. Screws.

The amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, to strike out "Wallace W. Screws" and insert "William Wallace Screws," was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OWNERS OF STEAMER JACKSON.

The next bill coming over from last Friday was the bill (H. R. No. 2156) for the relief of certain owners of the steamer Jackson.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that this bill be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to A. R. Godwin, the sum of $1,290.17; to John P. Lockey, the sum of $1,290.17; to John R. Ely & Co., the sum of $2,580.36; to Thomas M. White, surviving partner of T. & J. M. White, the sum of $2,580.36; to S. and J. Erwin, the sum of $2,580.36; and to Ellison & Hughes, the sum of $2,580.36, with interest on each of said sums from the 15th day of September, 1871, being the amounts then found to be due to said parties, and which were wrongfully paid to Barnett and Fry on their bond of indemnity, which is now held by the Government.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to call attention to the fact that when this bill was under consideration by the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar on Friday last the following facts appeared: that the Government had paid this money to parties who claimed they had the right to payment by assignment; that the Government took a bond of indemnity in case the money was paid to the wrong parties; that the question was referred to the Attorney-General as to whether the demand was valid against the Government originally, and it was decided that it was not. It was decided it was not because the vessel lost was not chartered by the Government, but simply in the employment of a freighter. On that opinion in the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar I believed the bill ought not to pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 76, noes 16.

So the bill was passed.

CHARLES P. CHOUTEAU.

The next business from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 911) for the relief of Charles P. Chouteau, reported with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the bill be laid on the table.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 67.

So the motion was disagreed to.

The bill was then recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BILLS PASSED.

The amendments to bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, were agreed to, and the bills as amended were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. No. 54) for the relief of Charles A. Luke; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2851) for the relief of Moses R. Russell.

The bill (H. R. No. 3542) for the relief of Charles F. Benjamin and Henry H. Smith, reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar with the recommendation that it do pass, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TAYLOR moved to reconsider the votes by which the foregoing bills were passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. HATCH, for the remainder of this day's legislative session;

To Mr. HUTCHINS, for to-day;

To Mr. DOWD, for one week, on account of important business; and

To Mr. SCOVILLE, for ten days.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 10, 1882.

VINEYARD HAVEN HARBOR.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to House resolution of January 24, 1882, calling for information relative to the condition of Vineyard Haven Harbor, Massachusetts, a report from Lieutenant-Colonel G. K. Warren, Corps of Engineers, on the subject; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

RAILROAD BRIDGE ACROSS SAINT JOSEPH RIVER.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, in response to House resolution of February 7, 1882, requesting to be advised by what authority the railroad bridge across the Saint Joseph River, just at its mouth, at Saint Joseph, Michigan, is permitted, and whether such bridge is an impediment to navigation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ENGINEERS' CHARTS, ETC.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the Chief of Engineers in relation to the maps and charts furnished in compliance with House resolution of the 3d instant, directing the Secretary of War to furnish for the use of the House Committee on Commerce a complete set of maps and engineer charts of the navigable rivers and harbors of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES FOR 1877.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a detailed statement of receipts and expenditures of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877; which was laid on the table, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to be printed.

JANE G. SULLIVAN.

Mr. HOBLITZELL also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5025) granting a pension to Jane G. Sullivan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, PATERSON, NEW JERSEY.

Mr. HILL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5026) for the erection of a public building at Paterson, New Jersey; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

IMPRISONMENT OF AMERICAN CITIZENS.

Mr. HILL. I ask leave at this time to introduce certain resolutions of the Davitt National Land League, of Paterson, New Jersey, in relation to the imprisonment of American citizens by the English Government, which I ask to have referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolutions will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and also printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection. The resolutions are as follows:

126 MARKET STREET, PATERSON, NEW JERSEY,
March 6, 1882.

At a regular meeting of the Davitt National Land League of Paterson the following resolutions were unanimously passed:

Resolved, That, in view of the imprisonment of American citizens by the English Government not charged with any crime, we believe it is time for Congress and the Executive to demand their immediate trial by a jury of their peers or their unconditional release.

Resolved, That we appeal to our Representative, Hon. JOHN HILL, and to Congress to take such action in the premises as will vindicate American honor, protect American citizenship, and establish justice, citizens of all nationalities being interested in this demand.

Resolved, That these resolutions be forwarded to Hon. JOHN HILL, with the request that he present the same to the House and give his support to such action as will obtain the impartial justice sought.

JOHN QUIN, M. D., President.
PETER McQUILLEN, Vice-President.
THOS. J. HOLMES, Recording Secretary.
WM. ASPELL, Corresponding Secretary.
JOHN PURCELL, Treasurer.

PENSIONERS OF THE WAR WITH MEXICO, ETC.

Mr. STONE. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions to submit the resolution which I send to the desk and ask its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to prepare and have printed for the use of the House an estimate of the supposed cost of allowing pensions to all the present survivors and the widows of those who may have deceased of the Mexican war, and also of the Indian wars prior to 1846, with the supposed number of such survivors and widows; also an estimate of the cost of such pensions limited to such survivors as shall have obtained the age of sixty-five; and such additional information in the premises as he may think useful.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. STONE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM B. STOKES.

Mr. DIBRELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5027) for the relief of William B. Stokes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

No. 162) authorizing 25,000 maps of the United States to be prepared under the supervision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for the use of Congress; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. PACHECO, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial of the board of city trustees and Chamber of Commerce of San Diego, California, in regard to railroad lands; which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

Mr. PACHECO. I ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DUNNELL. I dislike to object to the request of the gentleman from California. But there has sprung up here lately what I think is an unfortunate custom of cumbering the RECORD with memorials and all sorts of papers and documents.

Mr. RANDALL. Give notice for the future and let this go in.

There was no objection. The memorial is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives
of the United States in Congress assembled:

We, the board of city trustees and the Chamber of Commerce of the city of San Diego, county of San Diego, and State of California, memorialize your honorable body as follows:

First. That the material prosperity and growth in population of our city and county are greatly and inexcusably retarded and jeopardized by the withdrawal and withholding from settlement of public lands of the United States within said county and contiguous to said city, which lands were more than ten years ago withdrawn from settlement, under and by virtue of the provisions of an act of Congress, entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1871, and the act supplemental thereto, approved May 2, 1872, whereby ten alternate sections per mile, on either side of said proposed road, within the State of California, were granted, (section 9, original act,) the number of sections opposite to and coterminous with the completed road to be conveyed to said company whenever said company should complete the first and each succeeding section of twenty consecutive miles of said railroad and put it in running order as a first-class road in all its appointments, (section 12, original act,) and in conformity to the provisions of which, (section 12, original act,) the honorable Secretary of the Interior, October 15, 1871, withdrew from settlement the odd sections of public land in the State of California included in limits, as follows, to wit: about thirty miles in width from the south line of said State, extending through the State from the west to the east line thereof about one hundred and fifty miles.

Second. That said grant was made to said company with the provisos and upon the express conditions that a through and independent line of said road should be constructed and in complete running order from a point near Marshall in the State of Texas, as near as practicable along the line of the thirty-second parallel to ship's channel in the bay of San Diego, in the State of California, (section 1, original act,) within ten years from the 2d day of May, 1872, (section 5, supplemental act,) and that said company should commence the construction of said road from said San Diego eastward within one year from May 2, 1872, and construct not less than twenty-five miles per annum in continuous line thereafter between San Diego and the Colorado River until the junction should be formed with the line from the east at the latter point or east thereof, (section 5, supplemental act,) and upon the further express condition that no consolidation should be made by said company with any competing through line of railroad to the Pacific Ocean, (section 4, original act.)

Third. That said railroad company has not constructed any part of said road in the State of California.

Fourth. That said railroad company has (as your memorialists are informed and believe) for a large and valuable consideration disposed of, transferred, and assigned to the Southern Pacific Railroad, a competing line of railroad, which has already had the benefit of a land grant of ten alternate sections per mile on either side of said road diagonally through said county of San Diego, (section 23, original act and act of July 27, 1866,) all their franchises and contingent interest in said lands.

Fifth. That the lands within said county so withheld from settlement are in area more than one million acres, a large part of which are valuable for general agricultural purposes; and if open to settlement under the public laws of the United States would speedily be settled upon, occupied, and improved.

Wherefore we pray that so much of said act and supplemental act as relates to granting to said company or their assigns lands in the State of California be repealed, and said lands restored to settlement under the land laws of the United States.

Signed and sealed in accordance with the resolution passed by the board of trustees of the city of San Diego at a meeting held on this 11th day of February, A. D. 1882.

[SEAL.] S. P. JONES,
President of the Board of Trustees of the City of San Diego, California.

Attest: THOS. WHALEY,
Clerk of the Board of Trustees of the City of San Diego, California.

Signed and sealed in accordance with a resolution passed by the Chamber of Commerce of the city of San Diego at a meeting held on the 9th day of February, 1882.

[SEAL.] GEO. W. HAZZARD,
President of Chamber of Commerce of the City of San Diego, California.

Attest: S. LEVI,
Secretary of Chamber of Commerce of the City of San Diego, California.

INSURANCE IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. BRIGGS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5033) to provide for regulating the business of insurance in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGET HAMILTON.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5034) granting a pension to Bridget Hamilton; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MYRON FELLOWS.

Mr. JADWIN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5035) granting a pension to Myron Fellows; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES ACKLEY.

Mr. JADWIN also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5036) for the relief of James Ackley; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Select Committee on Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, and ordered to be printed.

SETTLERS ON DES MOINES RIVER.

Mr. HEPBURN, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial and joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, asking Congress to pass an act giving to certain settlers along the Des Moines River the right to have their claim to certain lands in Iowa determined in the Federal courts; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution and memorial be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The joint resolution and memorial is as follows:

Joint resolution and memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, relating to the Des Moines River lands.

Whereas the settlers upon what is known as the lands granted to the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company believe that no action has ever been taken relating to these lands in which the United States and the interest of the United States have been fairly, properly, and adequately represented in court; and

Whereas the said settlers desire that the United States may be fairly and fully represented in the court: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Iowa, (the senate concurring,) That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be earnestly requested to exert themselves to secure the prompt passage of a bill which shall in some way provide that the Attorney-General of the United States shall immediately institute proceedings, or cause such proceedings to be commenced at once, by action either in equity or at law, as may be deemed best, and appear in the name of the United States so as to remove all claims from the title of said lands, and that in such action or actions to be instituted as aforesaid any person or persons in the possession of or claiming title to any land or lands under the United States involved in such action or actions, may, at his or her expense, unite with the United States in the prosecution of said action or actions for the purpose of forever settling the title or titles of the person or persons claiming said lands.

Approved March 3, 1882.

STATE OF IOWA, Office Secretary of State:

I hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of joint resolution No. 5 of the acts of the Nineteenth General Assembly on file in this office.

Witness my hand officially and the great seal of the State, March 3, 1882.

[SEAL.] J. A. T. HULL, Secretary of State.

CONTEMPTS IN CERTAIN CASES.

Mr. WISE, of Virginia, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5037) to define and punish contempts in certain cases; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

REPRINTING OF BILLS.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask unanimous consent that House bills Nos. 133 and 203, relating to interstate commerce, be reprinted. The files are exhausted and there are a great many applications for them.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

RALPH SPENCER.

Mr. CONVERSE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5038) granting a pension to Ralph Spencer; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MARIA SALTSMAN.

Mr. CONVERSE also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5039) for the relief of Maria Saltsman; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

POLYGAMY.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. No. 353) to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes, be printed with the amendments as it passed the Senate, for the use of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the rules of the House and Senate have been complied with, the bill has been printed.

Mr. CONVERSE. It ought to be printed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. MARSH for this evening's session.

ANN ATKINSON.

Mr. STONE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 130) granting a pension to Ann Atkinson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. In case the present occupant of the chair is not present at the evening session the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] will take the chair. In pursuance of the order of the House with reference to a recess to-day, the hour of half past four having arrived, the Chair declares the House in recess until half past seven.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m., Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is now in session in obedience to an order which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That, until the further order of the House, on Friday of each week, the House will take a recess at 4.30 o'clock until 7.30 o'clock p. m., at which evening session bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions only will be considered.

Mr. JOYCE. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering pension bills on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. BRIGGS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering pension bills on the Private Calendar.

JAMES O'CONNOR.

The first pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 985) granting a pension to James O'Connor.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James O'Connor, late first lieutenant Company F, Twenty-seventh Regiment Missouri Volunteers.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

LEVI ANDERSON.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 365) granting increase of pension to Levi Anderson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Levi Anderson, late a private in Company A, Seventh Regiment Kansas Volunteers, and to pay him a pension of $24 per month from and after the passage of this act.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

ANDREAS GUILLE.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1340) granting an increase of pension to Andreas Guille.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the pension of Andreas Guille, late a corporal of Company K, Ninety-seventh Regiment of Ohio Volunteers, of $18 per month, for an injury to his hand, be increased to $50 per month by reason of an additional wound received in the line of duty at the battle of Missionary Ridge, from a bursting shell, which carried away his entire nose, upper lip, and teeth, and part of his upper jaw-bone; and that the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place his name on the pension-roll at said increased rate.

Mr. DAWES. The name is given incorrectly in the bill. Instead of "Andreas" it should be "Andros." The correction of the name should be made in the bill and in the title.

The amendments were agreed to.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions also recommend that the bill be amended by striking out "$50" and inserting "$36" as the amount of pension per month.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

AUGUSTUS LEMPP.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1241) granting an increase of pension to Augustus Lempp.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Augustus Lempp, late of Company D, Seventy-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, to $18 per month, the amount he was receiving up to 1874, for disease and injury contracted in the military service of the United States; said pension rate to date from its reduction in 1874.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the words "said pension rate to date from its reduction in 1874."

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

N. H. RICHTER.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2268) for the relief of N. H. Richter.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the conditions and limitations of the pension laws of the United States, the name of N. H. Richter, late of Company D, Fifty-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

ALMIRA FARNSWORTH.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 244) for the relief of Mrs. Almira Farnsworth.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to put the name of Mrs. Almira Farnsworth on the pension-roll, subject in all respects to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

CORNELIA A. SCHULTZ.

The next pension bill on the Private Calender was the bill (H. R. No. 1430) granting a pension to Cornelia A. Schultz.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Cornelia A. Schultz, and pay the said Cornelia A. Schultz a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

RICHARD M. BAKER.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2258) granting a pension to Richard M. Baker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Richard M. Baker, late of the One hundred and fifteenth Indiana Volunteers, to be paid at the rate of $18 a month from the 4th day of July, 1863.

The committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the words "late of the One hundred and fifteenth Indiana Volunteers, to be paid at the rate of $18 per month from the 4th day of July, 1863."

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

MARY J. STOVER.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3106) restoring the name of Mary J. Stover to the pension-roll.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary J. Stover, as widow of the late Colonel Daniel Stover, of the Fourth Tennessee Infantry Volunteers, and that she be paid the pension heretofore allowed her.

The committee recommend that the bill be amended so as to read "and that she be paid $30 a month from the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

CAROLINE HILGEMANN.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1359) granting a pension to Mrs. Caroline Hilgemann.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs Caroline Hilgemann, mother of John and Charles Behm, late of Company C, Thirty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

ANDREW J. MORRISON.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2142) granting arrearages of pension to Andrew J. Morrison; reported adversely by Mr. JOYCE.

Mr. JOYCE. I ask consent that that bill be passed over informally for the present.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MARY JOYCE.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1303) granting a pension to Mary Joyce.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Joyce, mother of John Joyce, late first sergeant of Company E, Second Kentucky Volunteer Infantry.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

JOSEPHUS HAWLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3277) for the relief of Josephus Hawley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the pension agent for the district of Iowa be, and is hereby, authorized and required to issue to Josephus Hawley, of Dunlap, in the State of Iowa, a duplicate of his check for $1,719.47, dated March 22, 1881, and payable to the order of said Josephus Hawley, after said Hawley shall furnish sufficient proof of the loss and non-reception by him and non-payment of said original check.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

WILLIAM R. PERDUE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1468) granting a pension to William R. Perdue; reported adversely by Mr. JOYCE.

Mr. CALKINS. I ask consent that that bill be passed over informally for the present.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MARY BLOWERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1288) granting a pension to Mary Blowers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby authorized to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary Blowers, widow of James Blowers, late a private in Battery B, First Regiment of West Virginia Volunteer Artillery.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

SIMON J. FOUGHT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2100) granting an increase of pension to Simon J. Fought.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant an increase of pension to Simon J. Fought, formerly a corporal of Company D, of the Forty-sixth Regiment of Ohio Volunteers, equal to the special rate provided for the loss of both hands or both feet, or the sight of both eyes, by act of Congress, approved June 17, 1878.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

Strike out the words "equal to the special rate provided for the loss of both hands or both feet, or the sight of both eyes, by act of Congress, approved June 17, 1878," and insert "to $30 per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

SYLVADOR JACKSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1337) granting a pension to Sylvador Jackson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions of the pension laws, the name of Sylvador Jackson, who was special agent and acting deputy provost-marshal of the thirteenth district of Ohio from the 10th day of July, A. D. 1863, to May 1, 1865.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

At the end of the bill strike out the words "from the 10th day of July, A. D. 1863, to May 1, 1865."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

ELI D. WATKINS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2031) for the relief of Eli D. Watkins.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension now paid Eli D. Watkins, late a private in the Fifth Regiment Kentucky Cavalry Volunteers, from $31.25 per month to $72 per month, on account of total disability resulting from the loss of one leg and loss of the use of the other leg while in the military service aforesaid.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

Strike out "$72" and all the following words to the end of the bill, and insert in lieu thereof "the rate of pension now allowed by law for the loss of both legs."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZABETH WIRT GOLDSBOROUGH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3866,) granting a pension to Elizabeth Wirt Goldsborough.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth Wirt Goldsborough, widow of the late Rear-Admiral Goldsborough, and pay her a pension of $50 per month from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. JOYCE. I understand that the Senate has just passed a bill granting a pension to Mrs. Goldsborough, and that it is now on the Speaker's table. I would be glad to have unanimous consent to substitute that bill for this.

The CHAIRMAN. That cannot be done in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JOYCE. Then this bill can be reported to the House favorably, and the House can make the substitution.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZABETH S. M. FINLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3867) granting a pension to Elizabeth S. M. Finley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Elizabeth S. M. Finley, widow of Clement A. Finley, late Surgeon-General of the United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

WIDOWS OF JOHN R. GALE AND OTHERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1218) for the relief of the widows of John R. Gale, Spencer D. Gray, Lemuel Griggs, Malachi J. Brumsey, I. Mundin, Lewis White, and George W. Wilson, of North Carolina.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of the widow of John R. Gale, widow of Spencer D. Gray, widow of Lemuel Griggs, widow of Malachi J. Brumsey, widow of I. Mundin, widow of Lewis White, and widow of George W. Wilson, and in the event of no widow of said persons then the minor children of said parties be placed on said pension-roll, and that they be paid respectively the same pension that is by law allowed to sailors in the United States Navy; the said John R. Gale, Spencer D. Gray, Lemuel Griggs, Malachi J. Brumsey, I. Mundin, Lewis White, and George W. Wilson having lost their lives near life-saving station No. 4, coast of North Carolina, in endeavoring to save the crew of the Italian bark Nuora Ottavia, wrecked on the 1st day of March, 1876.

Mr. ATHERTON. I should like to ask a single question in regard to this bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. I desire to make a motion which will I think bring out the necessary explanation of the facts. This bill proposes to put on the pension-rolls the widows of persons who were never in the military service of the United States. It proposes also to pension the widow of one man who was never in any service of the United States. I therefore call for the reading of the report.

Mr. CALKINS. Let me ask that this bill be laid aside temporarily, not to lose its place on the Calendar.

Mr. ATHERTON. I suggest that if any children are to be pensioned they ought to be those under sixteen years of age, so as to make this bill correspond with the general provision of our pension laws.

Mr. McMILLIN. I have no objection to the adoption of the suggestion made by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. CALKINS,] for I should not consent to the passage of the bill without the presence of a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the bill will be laid aside informally.

Mr. LATHAM. As I introduced this bill, and probably may not be present when the bill is brought up again if it should now be laid aside, I prefer that it be taken up and disposed of at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman object to its being laid aside informally?

Mr. LATHAM. If it be passed over informally it probably will not be reached again during this evening session, which will deprive me of an opportunity to explain the bill.

Mr. BROWNE. I will say to the gentleman that under the order of the House we meet for pension business on each Friday evening of the session until the order be revoked. On the next evening we shall reach this case, and if the gentleman will only co-operate with me and get his friends here so that we may have a quorum, we can dispose of the bill, and pass it, too. We cannot pass it now if any gentleman is disposed to make the point that there is no quorum.

Mr. LATHAM. Of course if such a disposition were indicated it would end the matter at once.

Mr. BROWNE. My friend from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] has already admonished the House that this bill cannot pass without the presence of a quorum.

Mr. LATHAM. I am sorry the gentleman from Tennessee takes that position, for this is a most meritorious bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. This bill sets a precedent which in my judgment ought not to be set, by pensioning the widow of a person who was not in any service of the United States; and for one I feel that I would not discharge my duty if I should let such an example be set without having a decisive vote of a full House upon the question.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the bill will be laid aside informally, retaining its place on the Calendar.

KATE L. USHER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1206) granting a pension to Mrs. Kate L. Usher.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Kate L. Usher, who is the widow of the late Captain James D. Usher, of the United States Revenue Marine Service, at the rate now paid the widows of officers of corresponding rank in the United States Army.

Mr. VANCE. I move to strike out "Army" and insert "Navy."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

OPHELIA E. SIMMONS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 709) granting a pension to Ophelia E. Simmons.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Ophelia E. Simmons, widow of David A. Simmons, who was a master's mate in the Navy during the late war, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

STEPHEN GARDNER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 794) granting a pension to Stephen Gardner.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Stephen Gardner, late a private in Company D, Tenth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE ANDREWS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 642) granting a pension to George Andrews.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George Andrews, late a private in the Sixth Maine Battery of Artillery in the late war of the rebellion; this act to take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SARAH A. HOOPER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4182) granting a pension to Sarah A. Hooper.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Sarah A. Hooper, mother of Ransom W. Hooper, late a private in Company D, Ninth Tennessee Cavalry, subject to the restrictions of the pension laws.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JULIA A. ROSS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3074) granting a pension to Julia A. Ross.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Julia A. Ross, widow of Michael M. Ross, late a private in Company I, First United States Artillery, and who died in said service August 10, 1852.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SARAH LUPKIN MERCHANT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1435) granting a pension to Sarah Lupkin Merchant.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Sarah Lupkin Merchant, widow of General Charles L. Merchant, late of the United States Army, deceased, at $50 per month.

The committee recommend an amendment striking out "$50" and inserting in lieu thereof "$30."

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment proposed by the committee to strike out $50 and insert $30 will not be insisted upon.

Mrs. Merchant is the widow of an officer who served his country with honor and distinction for the continuous period of sixty-nine years. She is now a lady of eighty to eighty-five years, and was the wife of a valuable public servant for the period of over sixty years. Like all officers of the Army, the yearly pay was consumed, and this excellent old lady is left entirely dependent upon her children for support.

It seems to me it must have been an inadvertence and a want of knowledge of the facts which caused the committee to propose changing the pension from $50 to $30. In actual money it would make but little difference to the Government to leave this at $50, an amount which is frequently granted in the House to widows of an age and strength which enables them in a measure to provide for themselves, and who at least are able to do something toward their own support. This lady can do nothing.

I am in favor of rules regulating pensions, but it does seem that this case has marked exceptionable features. A feeble old lady, who though we hope may live and enjoy a long ripe old age, yet the natural course of events admonishes us that she must soon follow to the grave her husband and, I will add, two noble sons, whose lives were sacrificed in the service of our country.

Where have we instances like this? It could never be a precedent. Where will we find such a case of honorable, distinguished, and continuous service? The history of our country, and I can add the history of few countries, can cite us to many such periods of service during this or even during past centuries.

I hope the House will give favorable consideration to these views, and pass the bill allowing this lady the proposed pension for the short time they will be able to give any recognition to her for the services rendered to our country by her husband and children.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Chairman, this matter was fully considered in the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and the very views stated by the gentleman from Alabama I attempted to urge upon that committee. The committee in undertaking to dispose of a large number of pension cases have fixed, as far as they can, certain rules by which they propose to be governed. The widow of General Merchant, who was a general by brevet, is allowed by this bill the full pension of a colonel, which was his real rank in the Army at the time of his retirement. It appears by the Army Register that Colonel Merchant was retired from active service sixteen years ago, and because of the fact he had drawn from the Government pay for sixteen years prior to his death, and had rendered no service therefor, the committee thought the full pension to his widow given to him as of his real rank was all to which he was entitled. Therefore they determined to strike out "$50" and insert "$30." I hope the committee will be sustained, although I took the contrary view in committee.

Mr. BROWNE. I hope it will be sustained because it is both right and liberal.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MATSON. I want to move a formal amendment, if it be necessary. I understand from the reading of the bill that it proposes to grant a pension to a different person. It is spelled in the bill, I understand, "Lupkin." It should be Lumpkin.

The CHAIRMAN. The correction will be made.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ANNA M. MARSHALL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2491) for the relief of Anna M. Marshall.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Commissioner of Pensions be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Anna M. Marshall, widow of Captain P. S. Marshall, on the pension-roll as a pensioner, and that she be entitled to draw her pension from the date of the death of her husband, and at the rate of $20 per month.

The committee recommend the following amendment:

Strike out in the sixth, seventh, and eight lines the words "and that she be entitled to draw her pension from the date of the death of her husband, and at the rate of $20 per month," and insert at the end of the bill "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

THOMAS J. COFER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2260) granting a pension to Thomas J. Cofer.

Cofer, late captain of Company I, Ninth Indiana Cavalry, at the rate of $18 per month, to begin on the 9th day of June, 1862.

The committee recommend the following amendment:

Strike out the words "at the rate of $18 per month, to begin on the 9th day of June, 1862," and insert "at the rate allowed a private soldier for a like disability."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CAROLINE CHASE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2088) granting a pension to Caroline Chase.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Caroline Chase, foster mother of Charles Gildersleeve, late a private in the Fortieth Regiment New York Volunteers, who was killed in the service of the United States, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The committee recommend that the bill be amended by inserting at the end of the bill the following words:

Except that said Caroline Chase shall stand in the place and stead of the natural mother of said Charles Gildersleeve.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM J. LEE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2089) granting a pension to William J. Lee.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of William J. Lee, late confidential scout and guide, headquarters Army of the Potomac, at the rate of $12 per month, to date from the 18th of December, 1865; or, in lieu thereof, a sum not to exceed $10,000, which sum shall be in full liquidation of any and all claim the said Lee may have against the United States for services as above alleged.

The committee recommend the following amendment:

Strike out all after the words, in the sixth line, beginning "at the rate of $12 per month," to the end of the bill, and insert in lieu thereof "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM A. GARDNER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 662) authorizing a duplicate check in payment of pension to William A. Gardner, of Frederick County, Maryland, in lieu of one lost.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be issued to William A. Gardner, of Frederick County, Maryland, a duplicate check for the sum of $1,440.80, in lieu of a check for said amount numbered 190351, dated July 9, 1880, drawn by John S. Witcher, United States pension agent, upon the assistant treasurer at New York, and heretofore lost in transmission through the mails: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall be satisfied, by proof, of the loss of said original check, and the said William A. Gardner shall execute and deliver a bond, with security to be approved by the said Secretary, for double the amount of said check, to indemnify the United States.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN F. CHASE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4202) granting an increase of pension to John F. Chase.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the pension of $24 a month now paid to John F. Chase, late a private in the Fifth Maine Battery, be increased to $36 a month, such increase to commence from and after the passage of this act.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

BURTON ARMSTRONG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2559) granting an increase of pension to Burton Armstrong.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the pension now allowed by law to Burton Armstrong, late a private in Company G, Forty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, be, and the same is hereby, increased to the sum of $50 per month from the time he was entitled to receive a pension under the existing laws of the United States.

The committee recommend the following amendment:

Strike out, in line 6, the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirteen;" and also strike out all after the words "per month," in line 6, and insert in lieu thereof "to date from the passage of the bill;" so that as amended the bill will read:

"That the pension now allowed by law to Burton Armstrong, late a private in Company G, Forty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, be, and the same is hereby, increased to the sum of $13 per month, to date from the passage of the bill."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ROSETTA L. M'KAY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1225) granting a pension to Mrs. Rosetta L. McKay.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, to date from December 6, 1871, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Rosetta L. McKay, mother of Fred A. McKay, who was second lieutenant of Company E, Forty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteers, and who died December 6, 1871, from disease contracted in the line of duty in the military service of the United States.

The committee recommend the following amendment:

Amend by striking out, in lines 4 and 5, the words "to date from December 6, 1871."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIJAH W. PENNY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2005) to increase the pension of Elijah W. Penny.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Elijah W. Penny, late lieutenant-colonel of the One hundred and thirtieth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, so that he shall be entitled to receive the rate allowed to persons of the rank of lieutenant-colonel by existing laws to those wholly disabled while in the service of the United States.

The committee recommend the following amendment:

Strike out all after the word "volunteers," in the sixth line, and insert in lieu thereof "to $36 per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HENRY BINNAMON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 243) to increase the pension of Henry Binnamon.

The committee recommend the following amendment:

Strike out the word "five," in line 4, and insert "four;" also strike out "fifty," in line 4, and insert "thirty-six" in lieu thereof; so that the bill as amended will read:

"That the pension of Henry Binnamon be, and the same hereby is, increased from $24 to $36 per month; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to place his name on the rolls at such increased sum."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM H. H. ANDERSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3248) granting a pension to William H. H. Anderson.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William H. H. Anderson, late a private in Company B, Twenty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteers.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

REBECCA REYNOLDS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4217) granting an increase of pension to Rebecca Reynolds.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Rebecca Reynolds, widow of the late Rear-Admiral William Reynolds, upon the pension-roll, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month, instead of the pension now paid her under the law; the said increased pension to commence from the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY P. THOMPSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1519) granting a pension to Mary P. Thompson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary P. Thompson, widow of James B. Thompson, late captain of Company F, One hundred and ninetieth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILSON W. BROWN AND OTHERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4444) granting pensions to Wilson W. Brown and others.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, at the rate of $20 per month, the names of Wilson W. Brown, late second lieutenant of Company F, Twenty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteers; John R. Porter, late second lieutenant of Company C, Twenty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteers; William Bensinger, late captain of Company C, Thirteenth Regiment United States Colored Infantry; John A. Wilson, late of Company C, Twenty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteers; William Pittenger, late of Company C, Second Regiment Ohio Volunteers; Martin J. Hawkins, late of Company A, Thirty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteers; Daniel A. Dorsey, late second lieutenant of Company H, Thirty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteers: Elihu A. Mason, late of Company K, Twenty-first Ohio Volunteers; and Rachael Slavens, widow of Samuel Slavens, a soldier executed at Atlanta, Georgia, by the confederate authorities, June 18, 1862: Provided, That the pensions hereby granted shall be in lieu of all other pensions that have been granted to or are claimed by any of the above-named persons under the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. DAWES. I should like unanimous consent to make a verbal amendment by inserting the words "Company E, Thirty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteers," after the name "Samuel Slavens," in line 17.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be considered as adopted if there be no objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. McCOID. I desire to amend the bill further by inserting the words "William Reddick, late of Company B, Thirty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteers," after the word "volunteers," in line 6.

Mr. McMILLIN. Has the claim of the individual been before the committee?

Mr. McCOID. I am not informed.

Mr. DAWES. I have received such evidence as satisfies me that he was one of this party.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am inclined to think this bill ought to take the same course as that pensioning the parties in North Carolina, which we have passed over informally.

Mr. BROWNE. Let the Clerk report the amendment.

The Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. McCOID. I wish to say to the committee that the name of William Reddick has been omitted. He was one of these men and acted with them all through. The omission of his name is a mistake. It is but justice to him he should be included in the same bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think this bill should take the same course as the bill for the relief of parties from North Carolina has done; and I give my reason for it. I do not desire to obstruct the business here and have not made any captious fight upon any small claim that is pending here. But this violates what has been the rule of this House in a number of cases heretofore in this respect. A number of these parties had already been pensioned at a certain rate; at the rate fixed for the disability that they have contracted in the service they have rendered. The cases of others are still before the Pension Office, and Congress is asked to do in these cases what it has refused to do heretofore. It is not simply making itself a court of appeal from the Pension Office, but it is absolutely taking out of the hands of the Pension Office the cases of a number of those who are applying for pensions there before receiving final disposition. I do not think it is right. The committee have enough to do if they simply take the cases when they have been finally disposed of in the Pension Office. I hope there will be no objection to this bill going over.

Mr. DUNNELL. Let it be passed over informally.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Why should we not lay the bill aside to be reported favorably to the House and have a yea-and-nay vote in the House?

Mr. McMILLIN. Because if the truth must be stated we have not a quorum or anything like a quorum present. Let the bill be passed over informally.

Mr. PRESCOTT. If necessary, I move that the bill be passed over informally.

There was no objection, and the bill was passed over.

MARGARET M'CORMICK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3776) granting a pension to Margaret McCormick.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the conditions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Margaret McCormick, widow of Robert McCormick and mother of James McCormick, deceased, late of Company B, Seventy-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SPENCER W. TRYON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 389) granting a pension to Spencer W. Tryon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Spencer W. Tryon, late of Company E, Fourteenth Illinois Regiment.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

NICHOLAS W. BARNETT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2335) granting an increase of pension to Nicholas W. Barnett.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Nicholas W. Barnett, formerly of Company I, Twenty-fifth Regiment Indiana State Volunteers, to $36 per month from the date of this act.

The committee recommended the following amendment:

In line 6 strike out "thirty-six," and insert "twenty-four."

The amendment was adopted, and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ANNA A. PROBERT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3398) granting a pension to Anna A. Probert.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Anna A. Probert, widow of George C. Probert, late a first lieutenant in the Third Ohio Cavalry, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month from and after September 1, 1878.

The committee recommended the following amendment:

In lines 7 and 8 strike out the words "from and after September 1, 1878."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CONVERSE. I hope that amendment will not be agreed to. This lady in 1878 lost her husband, who was then drawing a pension. She has two little children to support. Her husband lost his life under very peculiar circumstances. Being a very generous-hearted man, although he had contracted disease in the Army while serving his country, yet when the fever broke out at Memphis he was one of the first who volunteered to go there as nurses, and he fell a victim to the disease. I hope this lady will be allowed to draw the pension from the date of her husband's death. It is not large, only $20 a month.

Mr. MCMILLIN. It will not be improper for me to make a statement concerning this case. While there may be some equity in what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] states, I will say that we have and have had before the Committee on Invalid Pensions about eighteen hundred cases. I believe I do not overstate the matter when I say that hundreds of these bills provided for the payment of arrearages of pensions. Yet it has been the uniform custom of that committee—I believe there has not been more than one, if any, exception—to report no bill containing the arrearages features. That was also the custom, I may state, during the last Congress. I think that whatever rule the House may adopt in any one case should be adhered to in all. It will be better to adhere to the rule than to break over, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. CONVERSE. I think my friend from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] is the last gentleman in the world who ought to object to paying the arrearages of pensions in this case. This man lost his life in the service of the people of my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Permit me to say here and now that in the discharge of my duty on this floor I know no line of Tennessee or any other State, but the whole country. [Applause.]

Mr. CONVERSE. But my friend ought to know the sufferings of his own people, who called upon all to go there and assist them. He certainly ought to appreciate the spirit of generosity which led this man to go down into his State in that hour of peril and trouble.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I do realize the sacrifice which he made, and I would not be wanting in that liberality which should characterize any man if the money were to come out of my own pocket. But I am here not to bestow favors for favors received in Tennessee, but to protect the interests of the entire country. That shall be my excuse for the seeming want of liberality in this behalf. I know no favoritism and will swerve to none.

The question was taken upon agreeing to the amendment; and upon a division there were—ayes 41, noes 10.

So (no further count being called for) the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was then laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

CHARLES H. ORDWAY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1017) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Ordway.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles H. Ordway, late a private in Company H, Seventh Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of thirty-six dollars and fifty cents per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the words "and fifty cents;" so that it will read "at the rate of $36 per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

GEORGE H. BLACKMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1180) increasing the pension of George H. Blackman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of George H. Blackman at the increased rate of $50 per month from June 4, 1874.

The committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the words "$50 per month from June 4, 1874," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "$36 per month from and after the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

MARIA WORTHINGTON.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 507) granting a pension to Mrs. Maria Worthington.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Maria Worthington, widow of Nicholas B. Worthington, of Mason County, Kentucky.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

C. A. DIETRICH.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 509) granting a pension to C. A. Dietrich.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of C. A. Dietrich, of Bath County, Kentucky.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

GENERAL D. C. THOMAS.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2012) to increase the pension of General D. C. Thomas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to DeWitt Clinton Thomas, late a colonel and brevet brigadier-general of volunteers in the Army of the United States, a pension at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension heretofore granted to him under the provisions of the general pension laws.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

WILLIAM THOMAS.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2433) granting a pension to William Thomas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Thomas, late a sergeant of Company B, Ninety-ninth Regiment Tennessee Volunteers, and pay him a pension for the loss of an eye in addition to the pension now allowed him for the loss of a limb.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

MARY T. M'CAWLEY.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1769) granting a pension to Mary T. McCawley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary T. McCawley, widow of First Lieutenant Henry M. McCawley, late of the Thirteenth Regiment of Infantry, United States Army, to date from the death of said Henry M. McCawley.

Mr. BROWN. The Committee on Invalid Pensions directed me to report that bill back with an amendment. If I failed to do so it was by mistake on my part. I move to amend the bill by striking out the words "date from the death of said Henry M. McCawley" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "take effect from the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

FLORA C. M'CASLIN.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1619) granting a pension to Flora C. McCaslin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Flora C. McCaslin, widow of William McCaslin, late a private in the Seventh Tennessee Volunteer Regiment of Cavalry, United States Army, subject to all the requirements of statutes applicable to such cases.

The committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the words "all the requirements of statutes applicable to such cases" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

FRANCIS REICHERT.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1239) granting a pension to Francis Reichert.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Francis Reichert, late of Company I, Fifth Missouri Volunteers, and Company K, Fourteenth Illinois Volunteers.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

MODENA SMITH.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1290) granting a pension to Modena Smith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and required to place on the pension-roll the name of Modena Smith, widow of Robert Smith, deceased, late a private in Company B, Fifth Regiment of United States Colored Troops.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

GODFREY DRAYER.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2093) granting a pension to Godfrey Drayer.

The bill read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Godfrey Drayer, late of the One hundred and fifteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

CATHARINE YODER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1357) granting a pension to Catharine Yoder.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Catharine Yoder, widow of N. W. Yoder, late second lieutenant of the Fifty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

Mr. ATHERTON. Since the introduction of this bill Mrs. Catharine Yoder, while attempting to save her youngest child in a disaster at Zanesville, Ohio, by which a number of persons were burned, was consumed in the flames together with her child. She has left several minor children. I have an affidavit at my room stating who they are. I move to amend this bill by inserting at the appropriate place the words, "the minor children of."

Mr. McMILLIN. Will it not be necessary to designate those under the age of sixteen?

Mr. ATHERTON. Probably it will.

Mr. BROWNE. I think there will be no objection to amending the bill in the way suggested.

Mr. ATHERTON. I move to amend so as make the bill read "to the minor children of Catharine Yoder under the age of sixteen years, and until they reach that age."

Mr. BROWNE. I think it would be best (if the gentleman from Ohio will allow the suggestion) to provide that this pension be paid to the minor children of the deceased, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws. Then the Commissioner will ascertain the ages of those children and they will draw their pensions in accordance with the provisions of the general law.

Mr. ATHERTON. I accept that suggestion.

Mr. McMILLIN. I ask that the bill, as proposed to be amended, be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill granting a pension to the minor children of Catharine Yoder, deceased.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of the minor children, under sixteen years, of Catharine Yoder, deceased, late widow of N. W. Yoder, late second lieutenant of the Fifty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

E. L. HUSTED.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3399) granting a pension to E. L. Husted.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of E. L. Husted, late of Company B of the One hundred and twenty-third Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

ELIZABETH BAUER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1332) granting a pension to Elizabeth Bauer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth Bauer, widow of Michael Bauer, late a private in Company C, One hundred and sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

CHILDREN OF AARON SHERIDAN, DECEASED.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1976) granting a pension to the minor children of Aaron Sheridan, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of Levi F. Sheridan, George H. Sheridan, James Edward Sheridan, Alfred A. Sheridan, and Charles A. Sheridan, (minor children of Aaron Sheridan, late light-house keeper on Manitou Island, in Northern Lake Michigan, and who was drowned by the capsizing of the Government boat while carrying papers and the United States mails from the mainland to the island, a distance of twelve miles, on or about the —— day of March, 1878,) at the rate of $8 per month each while they are under sixteen years of age.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

Fill the blank, before the word "day," by inserting "fifteenth."

At the end of the bill strike out the words "at the rate of $8 per month each while they are under sixteen years of age."

Mr. McMILLIN. I desire to make the same motion in this case that was adopted in the other cases—that the bill be passed over informally.

Mr. BROWNE. I understand that the report is adverse.

The CHAIRMAN. The recommendation seems to be favorable.

Mr. RAY. I desire to suggest in view of the action just taken by the committee in the case of the minor children of Catharine Yoder, that the only difference between that case and this one is, in the Yoder case the mother and her infant child were burned to death, while here both parents and an infant child were drowned in Lake Michigan, leaving five orphan children under sixteen years of age without property or relatives able to support them. The report shows what the bill does not show, that the father, having been wounded in battle during the late civil war, was drawing a pension at the rate of $18 per month at the time he was drowned.

Now, if it was proper to grant a pension to the minor children of Catharine Yoder by reason of the fact that their father had been a soldier, or was a pensioner of the United States, and because the mother is dead, why should not a pension be also granted to these minor children of Aaron Sheridan, who are without means and who will draw only $4 a month until they become sixteen years of age, respectively.

Mr. McMILLIN. My attention was not called to the facts in the Catharine Yoder case, or I certainly should have made some objection if the circumstances were such as the gentleman states.

Mr. RAY. That bill has been acted on right here in the gentleman's presence. I certainly think that if the Yoder case is to be laid aside with a favorable report this case of the Sheridan children should be disposed of in the same way.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am willing to have both laid aside informally.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be passed over informally if there be no objection.

Mr. RAY. Oh, no; let us pass it in the ordinary way and take a vote on it in the House.

Mr. BROWNE. If the committee will indulge me for a single moment. I do not remember the circumstances of the Catharine Yoder case, although I was present when the report was made. This case I remember. Gentlemen of the committee will bear witness to the fact that the gentleman from Tennessee and myself, and others perhaps of the committee, opposed a favorable report in this case.

The facts are that the deceased father was a soldier in the service during the war of the rebellion. He had become disabled and was receiving a pension. He was a light-house keeper on one of the northern lakes, residing with his family in the light-house. It seemed to have been a part of his duty to carry the mail from the light-house to the shore and from the shore back to the light-house on Manitou Island in the lake. In passing from the shore to the island in an insufficient boat it was capsized in a squall and the mother and father were drowned, and this bill is to put the surviving infant children upon the pension-roll.

The ground of opposition to this bill was that this husband and father was in no sense in the military service of the United States. This man had no connection, directly or indirectly, with the military service of the United States. It was as much a civil service as is the carrying of the mails by the letter-carriers through the streets of the city of Washington, as much civil employment as if he had been engaged in a navy-yard in assisting in the construction of vessels. In other words, it was purely and wholly a civil service; and I simply put the question to the gentlemen of the committee whether or not we are prepared now to set the precedent of putting upon the pension-roll the unfortunate children of those who may be accidentally killed in the civil service of the country. That is the question. We have already paid, as gentlemen know, $506,000,000 of pensions. There are $1,300,000,000 before us. Do we wish to increase the same or ought it to be confined on every principle to those who were in some way connected with the military service?

Mr. CONVERSE. I wish to inquire whether the father who lost his life was at that time drawing an invalid pension for disability incurred by him in the military service of the country?

Mr. BROWNE. Unquestionably he was.

Mr. CONVERSE. If so, I submit to my friend whether it is not right, inasmuch as the father has lost his life by this accident, which if he had not lost the Government would have continued to pay him the pension, to transfer that little pension to these little children until they are sixteen years of age?

Mr. BROWNE. So far as the sum is concerned it is insignificant. The Government can afford to pay it. There can be no question about that. If it were the payment of this little pittance this deceased father was receiving from the Government, if it ended there, no gentleman in this committee would be more willing to see it transferred to these unfortunate children than the gentleman from Tennessee and myself.

True, the father was a pensioner, but the children are no more entitled to this pension by law or by principle than if he had died by typhoid fever while a pensioner, or had met his death in any other way. While I have made this point, I wish to say to the committee I am willing the vote shall be taken, so far as I am concerned, here in the committee, and if the bill as recommended is passed by a majority of those present I will not raise the question of a quorum. I will take the majority of those present as a fair representative of the whole House. If the majority see proper to pass it, then I believe a majority of the House would. In this proposition I believe the gentleman from Tennessee will join me. We put our protest against this idea upon record, and I am willing to stand there.

Mr. McMILLIN. I dislike, Mr. Chairman, to discriminate between this and the other case to which I objected, an objection I have not as yet seen any reason to withdraw.

Mr. ATHERTON. Let me call attention to the fact in the other case.

Mr. McMILLIN. On account of the two cases being very similar, both growing out of the civil service, both establishing the precedent of pensioning men who died in the civil service of the United States, I think in all candor, while I do not wish to be captious, that the majority of this House ought to establish that precedent if it is to be established at all.

Mr. ATHERTON. I want to correct the gentleman in respect to the Catharine Yoder case. Dr. Yoder was a surgeon in the volunteer army. He served in that capacity during the war. He lost a limb in that war, and died by reason of wounds and disability incurred in the service. His widow asks a pension because he was in that service and because he was drowned by reason of his condition which disabled him from protecting himself. He really died of disability contracted in the service of the United States.

Mr. McMILLIN. I beg to correct my friend from Ohio by stating that we are not now on the Catharine Yoder case.

Mr. ATHERTON. I know that, but the gentleman was only stating that they were similar in character. Now, I wanted to show him that the Catharine Yoder case was of an entirely different character. That it is a case involving an entirely different principle, has no connection whatever with the case now under consideration, and should not be referred to as a parallel case.

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not wish to go back, as far as I am concerned, to fight a case over again——

Mr. ATHERTON. The gentleman from Tennessee commenced the fight.

Mr. McMILLIN. I find I have enough to battle with when I encounter what is in front of me.

But, Mr. Chairman, in addition to what I have already stated in regard to this case, permit me to say further that this pension question is no sectional question. It is a question in which the whole country is interested. The people of the whole country have to pay it. It is not a question in which simply those who draw the pensions are concerned; nor is it one in which they alone are interested. There is another class of people in this country for whom I wish to put in a plea here—the class of young men who went into the late war, sacrificing their opportunities for education, sacrificing their opportunities to embark in the battle of life on an even footing and with a fair start in the race with their associates who were not in the service. We enlisted in the late war about two and one-half millions of men. Only, I think, somewhere in the neighborhood of seven hundred thousand have applied for pensions, leaving nearly two millions of people who were in the service and who have not applied for pensions, but who have to help to pay the pensions granted to their associates. And now when we are called upon to swell this list by putting on additional names constantly, I insist that the million and three-quarters who do not apply for pensions have some rights, and in their behalf I claim that we ought not to place on the pension-rolls those who were never in the military service of the United States.

I shall insist, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that if this case be passed it must be passed by a quorum of the House. I do not object to its being passed over informally, to be dealt with when we treat cases of a similar character, but for the present I must insist upon that point.

Mr. RAY. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will not insist upon that point at this time, but let a vote be taken in the House upon it.

Mr. BROWNE. I promised the gentlemen who have been so kind as to be here to-night that at the hour of nine o'clock I would ask that the committee rise. It will take us until quite ten, or perhaps beyond that, before we can pass the bills that have been favorably reported from the Committee of the Whole. Therefore I now move that the committee rise.

Mr. O'NEILL. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not insist upon that motion. Let us have a half hour longer at least. We can certainly pass the bills which have been favorably reported in a half hour.

Mr. BROWNE. As it seems to be the disposition of the committee and of those gentlemen sitting around me, and I thank them for their kindness, that we shall continue in session some time longer, I withdraw the motion.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I move that this bill be passed over informally.

Mr. CONVERSE. I want to make a single statement in regard to this case. I should be entirely willing to accept the proposition made by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BROWNE,] that if the members here present vote upon the bill the matter shall rest there whether that decision be adverse or otherwise. But, Mr. Chairman, I cannot allow the opportunity to pass without saying that these little children are the wards of this great nation, and nobody knows better than my friend from Tennessee that there is no law for paying this pension to the children. If there was such a law this case would not be here for our consideration. But it is here, and the Government would have been compelled to pay out more money than it will pay under this bill, if passed, if this unfortunate father had not lost his life.

Now, inasmuch as these children are the wards of the nation, inasmuch as the father was a pensioner of the Government, I submit that without question we ought to pay this little pension to the children until they become sixteen years of age.

Mr. DAWES. My colleague has stated exactly the ground upon which the majority of the committee acted in this case, after having once determined to vote adversely upon the simple proposition stated by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. O'NEILL. I thought that case had been passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has made a motion to that effect.

Mr. CULLEN. I do not understand, Mr. Chairman, that the case has been informally passed over. I understand that gentlemen will object to the passage of this bill unless there be a quorum present. If that be true I have no argument to make.

Mr. BROWNE. I have not demanded a quorum.

Mr. CULLEN. I want to say in justification of my action in the matter that I know these persons. They reside in my district and it is a meritorious case so far as the equities are concerned. There is no stronger case on the Calendar. These little orphan children are left entirely destitute by the death of their father. They have been taken by their grandparents and are subjects of charity, supported by the neighbors, and all of them, grandparents and all, are on the verge of the poor-house. If this House can exercise any discretion at all in a case of this kind, this is certainly a case calling for its exercise.

Mr. BROWNE. I hope the gentleman from Illinois did not understand me as saying that I should demand the presence of a quorum.

Mr. CULLEN. I did not so understand the gentleman.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I insist upon my motion.

The motion to pass the bill over informally was agreed to.

LAURA HENTIG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3539) to increase the pension of Mrs. Laura Hentig.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Laura Hentig, widow of Edmund C. Hentig, late a captain in the Sixth Cavalry, United States Army, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that now allowed her.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EDMUND EASTMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4661) granting a pension to Edmund Eastman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Edmund Eastman, late a private in Company K, Two hundred and second Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, on account of hernia contracted in the military service of the United States.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

NOAH CATON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4662) granting a pension to Noah Caton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Noah Caton, late of Company H, Eighty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SALLY C. MULLIGAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3390) granting a pension to Sally C. Mulligan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sally C. Mulligan, mother of James S. Mulligan, late first lieutenant of Company I of the Twenty-first RegimentNew York Volunteers, and to allow and pay her a pension from the date of the last payment.

The committee recommend the following amendment:

In lines 8 and 9 strike out the words "and to allow and pay her a pension from the date of the last payment."

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CHARLES H. FRANK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3071) for the relief of Charles H. Frank.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Charles H. Frank to $50 a month, to date from and after the passage of this act.

The committee recommend the following amendment:

In line 5 strike out the word "fifty" and insert the word "thirty-six."

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HANNAH M. WRIGHT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4213) granting a pension to Hannah M. Wright.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hannah M. Wright, widow of Brevet Brigadier-General Joseph J. B. Wright, late a colonel and surgeon in the United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month from May 14, 1878, the date of her husband's death.

The committee recommend the following amendments:

In lines 4 and 5 strike out the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

And in lines 9 and 10 strike out the words "May 14, 1878, the date of her husband's death," and insert in lieu thereof "the passage of this act."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

C. K. HUGHES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1489) granting a pension to C. K. Hughes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of C. K. Hughes, late major of the One hundred and forty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, at the rate of $15 per month, commencing on the 12th day of June, 1865, the date of his discharge.

The committee recommend the following amendment:

In lines 6, 7, and 8, strike out the words "at the rate of $15 per month, commencing on the 12th day of June, 1865, the date of his discharge," and insert in lieu thereof "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY E. MURRAY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2592) granting a pension to Mary E. Murray.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary E. Murray, daughter of the late Colonel William G. Murray, of the Eighty-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HORACE S. SPEAR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1736) granting a pension to Horace S. Spear.

The bill was read.

Mr. MATSON. There are some facts in connection with this case which ought to invite the very careful scrutiny of the House. My friend from Vermont, [Mr. JOYCE,] who made the report, agrees with me in that proposition. I ask that the bill be passed over informally.

There being no objection, the bill was passed over informally.

JAMES NEWBERRY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4080) granting a pension to James Newberry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James Newberry, late a private in Company H, Eighty-fourth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM R. MILLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 34) for the relief of William R. Miller.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William R. Miller, late a guide to scouts under Major James M. Moore, of the Fifteenth Regiment Missouri Cavalry, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZABETH DAVIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 315) granting a pension to Elizabeth Davis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth Davis, widow of Hannibal B. Davis, late captain of Company K, Fourth Regiment Missouri State Militia, to date from death of said Hannibal B. Davis.

Mr. VAN AERNAM. I think the bill should be amended so that the pension shall date from the passage of the act.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think there must be some mistake here. So far as I am aware no bill has passed the committee recommending arrearages. Let the bill be again read.

The bill was again read.

Mr. McMILLIN. I offer the following amendment:

Strike out the words "to date from death of said Hannibal B. Davis."

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

BERNARD BRADY.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1048) granting an increase of pension to Bernard Brady.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Bernard Brady, formerly a private in Company I, Fourth Regiment United States Infantry, to the sum of $50 per month, for the loss of left leg and part of right foot.

Mr. McMILLIN. My memory is that that bill was amended so as to make the pension either $30 or $36 per month.

Mr. PARKER. The report will show.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1048) granting an increase of pension to Bernard Brady, having had the same under consideration, would respectfully report:

That Bernard Brady was a private in Company I, Fourth United States Infantry. From wounds received in the service and in the line of duty he now draws a pension of $24 per month. He applied for an increase of pension October 13, 1879, alleging the loss of left foot and the toes and heel of his right foot, rendering him totally disabled, and requiring the attendance of an attendant all the time. His application for increase of pension was rejected because his right foot was not amputated above the ankle. While it is true that he has a piece of a foot—that is, a foot without toes or heel—it is equally true that, so far as locomotion is concerned, he is worse off than if the foot was amputated. This is the view of the board of medical examiners at the Pension Office, and they so certify. He is a man virtually without feet, and in the opinion of your committee is entitled to the same pension now paid to men who have lost both feet in the service. Your committee therefore report back the accompanying bill and recommend that it do pass.

Mr. BROWNE. I think the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] will agree with me that the Committee on Invalid Pensions unanimously considered the case of this man as if he had lost both legs.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

ISABEL M'DOWELL.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1329) granting arrears of pension to Isabel McDowell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, to date from March 26, 1860, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Isabel McDowell, widow of Joseph McDowell, late a corporal of Company I, Fifteenth Regiment United States Infantry during the Mexican war, and to pay her the arrears of pension accruing between March 26, 1860, the date of her said husband's death, and the 22d day of May, 1879, the date of her present pension certificate.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the words "March 26, 1860, the date of her husband's death, and May 22, 1879, the date of her present pension certificate," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "October 21, 1864, and May 22, 1879."

The amendment was agreed to.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. BROWNE. This case is rather a remarkable one. The limitation within which the original application should have been made was three years. The application was made and the proof was completed at the date which the committee agree the pension should begin. The proof was complete at that time, and the Pension Office should have granted the pension then.

The application lay in the pigeon-hole from the one date to the other, by the inadvertence, negligence, or something else of the Pension Bureau. It was then taken up and allowed upon the evidence completed at the first date mentioned.

The committee think that this unfortunate woman ought not to lose her pension by reason of the negligence, inadvertence, or inattention of the Pension Bureau. That is the whole case. It is the only case in which the committee have agreed to grant a retroactive pension. If there ever was a case in which it ought to be granted, this is one.

Mr. NEAL. Why did not this woman get a pension under the arrearages act?

Mr. BROWNE. Because that act does not cover cases of this character.

Mr. NEAL. That is a very good answer.

Mr. BROWNE. This is the widow of a soldier who died before, and not during, the rebellion—a soldier of the Mexican war.

The bill as amended was then laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

WILLIAM T. M'COY.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4783) granting a pension to William T. McCoy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William T. McCoy, late of Company B, One hundred and tenth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

DANIEL D. LONG.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4784) granting a pension to Daniel D. Long.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Daniel D. Long, late a private in Company D, Fifty-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

THOMAS S. HOPKINS.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4785) for the relief of Thomas S. Hopkins.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That Thomas S. Hopkins, late a private in Company C, Sixteenth Regiment of Maine Volunteers, now on the pension-roll, be, and he is hereby, exempted from the limitation prescribed in section 2 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1879, entitled "An act making appropriations for the payment of the arrears of pension granted by act of Congress approved January 25, 1879, and for other purposes;" and the said Thomas S. Hopkins shall be entitled to the same arrears of pension as if his application for a pension had been filed in the Pension Office prior to July 1, 1880.

Mr. DAWES. The arrearages bill exempts insane persons from the limitations that are referred to in this bill, and by which this petitioner is exempted. The reason he is exempted is because he was in a condition similar to insanity. He was afflicted with a nervous affection that made it impossible for him to make application at the proper time. As soon as he became physically able to make his application he did so. For that reason the bill was favorably recommended by the committee.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

DENNIS SULLIVAN.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4786) granting an increase of pension to Dennis Sullivan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension now allowed to Dennis Sullivan, of Manchester, New Hampshire, from $50 to $75 per month, subject in other respects to the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws.

Mr. ATHERTON. I think that rate of pension is too high; $72 per month is the highest rate allowed.

Mr. RAY. It should be $72 per month. This is the case of the sailor who fell one hundred and eighty feet from the masthead of the ship Colorado, and is to-day dying slowly from spinal concussion, being totally paralyzed from his hips down, and requiring the attention of some person to take care of him all the time. The pension surgeons in New Hampshire recommend an increase of pension in this case.

Mr. ATHERTON. I move to amend so as to make it $72 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

CATHERINE SILVEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2148) granting a pension to Catherine Silvey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Catherine Silvey, mother of Francis E. Silvey, late of Company D, Ninety-ninth Regiment New York Volunteers.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

BENJAMIN F. DOBSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4787) for the relief of Benjamin F. Dobson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to readjudicate the pension claim of Benjamin F. Dobson, late a corporal of Company I, Nineteenth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, as if the same had been filed in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions on the 6th day of December, 1879.

Mr. ATHERTON. I would like to know why arrears are granted in this case.

Mr. MATSON. I will take pleasure in stating the circumstances in this case, as it presents some very extraordinary features. In 1879 this applicant sent his formal application to his then Representative in Congress, requesting him in a letter to file it with the Commissioner of Pensions. By some inadvertence, perhaps by reading "Commissioner" as if it were "committee," the member of Congress filed the application with the Committee on Invalid Pensions as a petition, and it remained there without the applicant having any knowledge of the fact, he supposing that his application had been filed with the Commissioner. In that way he lost his rights. Subsequently he filed his claim and it was immediately granted. He went into the war when a mere youth, and came out entirely disabled. He has been disabled ever since. These are the facts upon which the committee decided without any hesitation that this application should be granted.

Mr. ATHERTON. I think the gentleman's explanation is satisfactory. I have a case very much like it.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

MARY WADE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1422) granting a pension to Mary Wade.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Wade, of Gettysburgh, Pennsylvania, who was the mother of Jennie Wade, who was killed while baking bread for the Union soldiers, and pay the said Mary Wade a pension at the rate of $8 per month from the 3d day of July, 1863, the date of her said daughter's death, to continue during the widowhood of the said Mary Wade, she having been dependent for support on her said daughter.

Mr. BROWNE. I believe there is an amendment reported with that bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerks inform the Chair that no amendment appears either on the bill or in the report.

Mr. BROWNE. My recollection is quite distinct (though I may be mistaken) that this bill was amended by the committee so as to put the mother on the pension-roll from and after the passage of the act. If that amendment is not embraced in the report, the mistake is mine; for I made the report. I move, therefore, to amend the bill so that the pension shall take effect from and after the passage of the act.

Mr. O'NEILL. Why does the gentleman move that amendment?

Mr. CONVERSE. I would like to hear my friend from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] state the distinction which he draws between this case and the case we passed awhile ago.

Mr. BROWNE. That is a pertinent inquiry, and I hope my answer will satisfy my distinguished friend from Ohio.

Mr. O'NEILL. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] stated awhile ago that the case then before the House was a very remarkable one. Is not this a remarkable case? As I learn from the reading of the bill, it provides to pension a woman whose daughter was killed, I believe, at the battle of Gettysburgh.

Mr. BROWNE. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. O'NEILL. Does not the gentleman think that Congress should give this widow arrears of pension for the loss of a daughter under such circumstances, instead of providing merely that the pension shall take effect from the passage of the act? I think this is a very extraordinary case—the most so, perhaps, of any we have acted on to-night.

Mr. BROWNE. This is a bill for the relief of a mother dependent upon the services of a daughter who was killed under the circumstances mentioned. There are to-day on the pension-rolls over 60,000 persons whose husbands or sons were killed in the forefront of the battle by the bullets of the enemy. I propose to return the inquiry, in what sense is this woman entitled to a pension beyond the pension allowed to dependent parents in these other cases?

Mr. O'NEILL. It struck me that this was a very extraordinary case, a woman having been killed on or near the battle-field—doing perhaps some act of kindness for the soldiers on that bloody field.

Mr. BROWNE. I am not willing to vote upon a mere sentiment. I recognize that the daughter was, so far as concerns the purpose of this case, killed in battle; that the mother was dependent; and I am willing to put this dependent mother in exactly the position of a mother whose son was killed in battle. If we do this, we do all, in my judgment, that we ought to do.

Mr. CONVERSE. I wish to inquire of my friend where this lady was when she was killed.

Mr. BROWNE. She was baking bread in Gettysburgh.

Mr. CONVERSE. At her own home?

Mr. BROWNE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONVERSE. Was she not baking bread for sale?

Mr. BROWNE. I am not so advised. I do not know that it is not the fact; but I have not seen any such statement in the papers; it is no part of the case as it was presented before the Committee on Invalid Pensions. We understand that she was baking bread for distribution among the wounded soldiers on that battle-field.

Mr. CONVERSE. My information is that she was engaged in baking bread for sale, and that the daughter was engaged in selling it at the time she was killed. Let me ask further whether it was not a stray shot by which the daughter was killed?

Mr. BROWNE. I have no doubt the chivalrous gentleman who shot with so much indiscretion on the other side did not intend to kill the daughter.

Mr. CONVERSE. Do not mistake me; I am in favor of paying this pension. I am only commending to my friend from Indiana his own reasons for refusing to pension anybody not connected with the military service. When I asked that the pension of a poor soldier who had been wounded should be transferred to his infant children the gentleman would not agree to it.

Mr. BROWNE. I know gentlemen of the committee are tired, and

I will detain them but for a moment. Now it is asked whether the Committee on Invalid Pensions have determined to grant a pension to any one who was wounded or killed outside of the military service. That matter having been referred to, I wish to say that there are extraordinary cases which so commend themselves to the sense of justice of the committee that they are willing to grant a pension, although the person was not engaged in the military service. They are exceptions to the rule, however. I put the question if some philanthropic man or woman is engaged in the midst of battle in carrying a canteen of cold water for the parched lips of the wounded men on the field, and while so employed in that Christian duty is killed or wounded, will any gentleman in the House say he ought not pension such a man if wounded, or those dependent upon him if he should be killed? I think it will strike the sense of justice of every man in the American Congress a pension should be granted in such a case.

We found here a woman who was engaged in baking bread for the wounded soldiers and others, and her daughter while carrying that bread to the wounded upon the field was killed. That is the way we understood it. While so engaged she was killed by a shot. I do not care whether from our own side or the other. The mother was dependent upon her for support. She has a small property which is encumbered and valued at less than $300. Under the circumstances we thought it was a proper case for a pension.

Mr. ATHERTON. As this is likely to be the subject of discussion, and as there is some difference of opinion in regard to it, I ask whether it is not better for the general good it should be passed over informally for the present?

Mr. BROWNE. I am willing to do that.

Mr. ATHERTON. Let that be done so we may pass the remaining bills to which there is no objection.

Mr. BROWNE. Let the amendment be agreed to first.

Mr. ATHERTON. Very well.

Mr. BROWNE'S amendment was agreed to.

The bill was then passed over informally.

JOHN TAYLOR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1166) granting a pension to John Taylor.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Taylor, late of Battery M, Third New York Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. BROWNE. We have reached the end of the cases in which reports have been printed. I move, therefore, the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BRIGGS reported that the Committee of the Whole House had, according to order, had under consideration the pension cases on the Private Calendar, and had directed him to report sundry bills to the House with sundry recommendations.

ANDROS GUILLE.

The SPEAKER. The bill (H. R. No. 1340) granting an increase of pension to Andreas Guille is reported back with amendments, to strike out "Andreas" and in lieu thereof to insert "Andros," and to strike out "$50" and insert in lieu thereof "$36."

The first amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ATHERTON. I was not here when this bill was taken up, and I should like to have the indulgence to say this man Andros Guille was not only wounded in his hand, for which he gets a pension of $18 a month, but the same shell injured his arm and shoulder and took off his nose, upper lip, and upper teeth, so that he is a miserable object, and it does seem to me that $50 a month is a sum small enough to pay for the disabilities under which he labors. I hope, therefore, the amendment of the committee will not be agreed to.

The amendment reducing the amount from $50 to $36 was disagreed to.

The bill as amended by changing the name from "Andreas" to "Andros" was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

PENSION BILLS PASSED.

The following pension bills, reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, with amendments, were considered, the amendments agreed to, and the bills as amended severally ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. No. 1166) granting a pension to John Taylor.

Mr. BROWNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the several bills were passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELIZABETH WIRT GOLDSBOROUGH.

Mr. JOYCE. Mr. Speaker, in reference to this bill which has just been passed, if in order at this time, I shall ask unanimous consent to substitute therefor the Senate bill which is now on the Speaker's table and is, I believe, identical with the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the order under which the House is meeting to-night, and finds it to be quite specific, requiring only the consideration of invalid-pension bills on the Private Calendar; and in view of that the Chair does not think it would be in order, even by unanimous consent of the members present, to take a bill from the Speaker's table.

Mr. JOYCE. That can be done, then, at the next meeting of the House, and if the Speaker will recognize me then I will make that motion.

WILLIAM R. PERDUE.

Mr. BROWNE. I ask that by unanimous consent the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1468) granting a pension to William R. Perdue, which was passed over informally when reached on the Calendar this evening, having been reported with an adverse recommendation, and that it be recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BROWNE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at ten o'clock and five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday next.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

SENATE.

MONDAY, March 13, 1882.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports from Major W. R. King, Corps of Engineers, of examinations and surveys of certain localities in Kentucky and Georgia, made in compliance with the river and harbor act of March 3, 1881; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster-General transmitting, in answer to a resolution of March 9, the names of places producing a postal revenue of at least $20,000 for the fiscal year, where the free-delivery system of the Post-Office has been established; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. JACKSON presented a petition of citizens of Tennessee, praying for an appropriation to relieve their sufferings and destitution caused by the drought of 1881; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GORMAN presented a petition of the North German Lloyd Steamship Company, praying to be refunded a sum of money paid as import duty on a shaft of the machinery of the steamship Strassburg; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Joseph H. Maddox, of Maryland, praying for the passage of a bill referring his claim for certain property seized by the United States during the war of the rebellion to the Court of Claims; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CONGER. I present a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Michigan. I ask that it be read.

The resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Whereas the system of polygamy existing in certain sections of our country is degrading to the individuals and demoralizing to the communities adopting it, and is both repugnant to the Christian sentiments of the age and is a national disgrace: Therefore,

Resolved, (the senate concurring,) That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be respectfully requested to use all reasonable and honorable means to procure congressional legislation which shall promptly and effectually extirpate such system from our midst.

Resolved, That the governor be requested to forward copies of these resolutions to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

MOREAU S. CROSBY,
President of the Senate.
SETH C. MOFFATT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved March 9, 1882.

DAVID H. JEROME,
Governor.

Mr. JONAS presented a petition of cotton factors and commission merchants, citizens of New Orleans, praying for an appropriation for the improvement of the port and harbor of Vicksburgh, Mississippi, in accordance with the recommendations of the Engineer Department; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. KELLOGG. I present the petition of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, the New Orleans Chamber of Commerce, the Mechanics and Traders and Lumbermen's Exchange, the Sugar Planters' Association, of Louisiana, and the Produce Exchange, in favor of the abrogation of the reciprocity treaty concluded with the Hawaiian Islands in the year 1875. As this is a very important document and not very long, I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator wish to have it read, or printed in the RECORD simply?

Mr. KELLOGG. Let it be printed in the RECORD.

The petition was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The memorial of the Chamber of Commerce, Cotton Exchange, Produce Exchange, Mechanics and Dealers and Lumbermen's Exchange, commercial bodies of the city of New Orleans, to the honorable House of Representatives and Senate of the United States:

Respectfully represents that they have had under consideration, through special committees and by general inquiry and discussion, the commercial relations of Mexico, Central and South America, and find that in the large and valuable trade of these countries the United States enjoys a very small proportion, estimated not to exceed eight per cent.

It appears to us that an effort should be made to remove all impediments which exist, and afford every facility for the fair interchange of the commodities and products of our own and these countries. It may be stated that, because of the superior commercial facilities possessed by European merchants, even the correspondence and travel between the United States and some of the continental states is conducted via European ports, while merchandise manufactured from American material, and even bread baked in Europe, of American flour, is consumed in continental markets in our immediate vicinity.

We believe, should the United States adopt a commercial policy with regard to this continent, and commit the commercial relations for adjustment to ministers familiar with the business and character of the Spanish-American states and colonies, and offer reasonable compensation for regular, safe, and speedy transportation of our mails, we may, with reason, anticipate that not only will our flag appear in all the tropical ports, but our products will be distributed and preferred in all the ports and markets of the continent. While thus advocating a general policy for our Government we would further present the immediate interests of our own port and city.

We have no hesitation in saying that New Orleans, now connected by coast, river, and railroad, as well as by daily mail service and telegraph with every point of any commercial importance in the Union, having a deep water channel adequate to the navigation of the largest class of vessels, with a fortified port of refuge from war and storms sufficient for the shelter of all the fleets in the world, affords the best point for the organization of this postal mail service. It may be added that New Orleans has a business and labor class acclimated to the tropical and semi-tropical climates, and familiar with the languages and mercantile customs of all Spanish America.

It also presents attractions of climate, with educational and social customs which the Latin races of the continent can find nowhere else in the Union.

In view, therefore, of these considerations, we would respectfully recommend:

That the Government of the United States should seek by a proper commercial policy to acquire an adequate market in Spanish America for our products, and thus establish successful and legitimate influence in the affairs of the American continent.

1. By organizing such commercial relations with the several powers as would facilitate the interchange of commodities between the United States and those countries respectively.

2. That to give effect to this policy it will be necessary that Congress should organize a system of postal mail service, which will conduct the correspondence and commerce between and among these countries.

3. That the appropriation for establishing a line of steamers between New Orleans and the port of Aspinwall, in Central America, and a line of steamers between New Orleans and Rio Janeiro, according to the terms of bills now pending before Congress, will tend to give immediate and permanent effect and success to the continental policy herein recommended.

And your petitioners will, as in duty bound, ever pray, &c.

R. S. HOWARD,
President Chamber of Commerce.
THOMAS L. AIREY,
President New Orleans Cotton Exchange.
H. Q. HIESTER, Secretary.
W. M. SMALLWOOD,
Secretary Produce Exchange.
WM. M. BURWELL,
Secretary New Orleans Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. FARLEY presented a memorial of citizens of Yosemite Valley, California, remonstrating against the passage of the bill known as the Yosemite bill, providing for the extension of the Yosemite grant; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SLATER presented the petition of W. S. Ladd and others, citizens of Portland, Oregon, praying for the passage of a bill securing to a bridge company the right to complete and maintain a bridge at Morrison street, across the Willamette River, in that city; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LAPHAM presented a petition of Spencer Coe, of New York City, and the petition of Samuel Porter, of Astoria, Long Island, State of New York, praying for a settlement of their claims out of the Japanese indemnity fund; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented the petition of James A. Briggs, of New York City, praying for the restoration of the duty on tea and coffee, and the application of the proceeds to the cause of general education; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PENDLETON presented the petition of George Hoadly, E. W. Kittredge, John Kebler, and others, citizens of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying for the passage of what is known as the civil service reform bill; which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. JOHNSTON presented the petition of E. T. Pilkerton, of Manchester, Virginia, praying to be refunded a certain sum paid by him for internal-revenue stamps on tobacco; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MILLER, of California, presented a petition of citizens of California, praying for legislation to prevent unjust discriminations in railway charges; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FERRY presented a memorial of the Globe Tobacco Company and other tobacco manufacturers of Detroit, Michigan, remonstrating against any reduction of the tax on tobacco until the same can be entirely abolished; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition from William H. Barry and others, citizens of Shelby, Michigan, praying for such legislation as will regulate the transportation charges of railroads and other common carriers; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented resolutions of the State Board of Health of Michigan, favoring such legislation as will prevent the introduction of contagious diseases from foreign countries; which was referred to the Select Committee to investigate and report the best means of preventing the introduction and spread of Epidemic Diseases.

He also presented a resolution of the Legislature of Michigan, favoring such legislation as will effectually extirpate polygamy from certain sections of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SAWYER presented resolutions of the Grand Army of the Republic of Wisconsin, in favor of granting an increase of pension to soldiers' widows and equalizing soldiers' bounties; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a preamble and resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of Cincinnati, which I will read:

Whereas there has been considerable loss of life, attended with great suffering and immense destruction of property, along the entire length of the Mississippi River below the mouth of the Ohio, occasioned by the unprecedented floods now devastating that territory; and

Whereas common humanity demands that such terrible suffering should be alleviated as far as possible: Therefore,

Resolved by the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Ohio be requested to favor appropriations by the Government immediately for the purpose of supplying the inhabitants of the inundated territory with such rations as may be necessary to supply immediate needs, the same to be distributed under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Resolved, That a copy of this preamble and resolution be transmitted to each Senator and Representative in Congress from this State.

HENRY C. URNER, President.
JOHN H. LONG, Secretary.

I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON presented a petition of ex-Union soldiers of Indiana, praying for an amendment of the existing militia law; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented two petitions of citizens of Indiana, praying for legislation regulating charges for railroad transportation; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BROWN presented a petition of citizens of Albany, Georgia, praying for an appropriation for the improvement of the harbor at Savannah; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the mayor and council of Brunswick, Georgia, praying for an increased appropriation for the improvement of the harbor of that city; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

Mr. PLUMB. The Committee on Appropriations have instructed me to report back the bill (H. R. No. 3548) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, with amendments.

I desire to give notice that to-morrow, immediately after the conclusion of the morning business, I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill for consideration.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair,) from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 420) to establish a court of appeals, reported it with amendments.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on Rules, who were instructed by a resolution of the Senate adopted on the 9th of January to consider and report upon the expediency of adding to the committees of the Senate a committee to be known as the "Committee on Expenditures of Public Money," to report a resolve for the appointment of such a committee. The resolve is in two or three lines. I should like to have it read, and then placed upon the Calendar of Resolutions.

The resolution was read, and ordered to be placed upon the Calendar, as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be a Committee on Expenditures of Public Money, composed of seven Senators, who shall consider such measures tending to economy in public expenditure as shall be referred to it, and conduct all investigations into the expenditure of public money which shall be ordered by the Senate.

EULOGIES UPON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE O'CONNOR.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 140) to print certain eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Michael P. O'Connor, to report it without amendment and recommend its passage. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER LEVEES.

Mr. GARLAND. On the 8th instant, when I introduced the bill (S. No. 1414) providing for the construction, completion, repairing, and preservation of levees on the Mississippi River, I gave notice that last Friday I should call it up and submit some remarks on the subject. I missed the opportunity then on account of the engagements of gentlemen who had previously notified the Senate that they would address it on different matters. I will ask the favor of the Senate day after to-morrow, at the conclusion of the morning hour, to explain the bill I introduced. I shall not occupy more than twenty-five or thirty minutes of the time of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GARLAND asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1456) to secure the safe-keeping of money paid into court; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ROLLINS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1457) to amend section 3 of the act of February 21, 1879, to fix the pay of letter-carriers, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. HARRIS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1458) for the relief of J. W. Newman, administrator of Jacob Newman, deceased, of Tennessee; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GORMAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1459) for the relief of the North German Lloyd Steamship Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MAXEY asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1460) directing the mode of appointment of assistant quartermasters in the Army, and providing for a board of examiners, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WINDOM (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1461) for the relief of Willis N. Arnold; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MILLER, of California, (by request,) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1462) for the relief of E. J. Baldwin; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ANTHONY asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1463) for the relief of the administratrix of Joseph Wheaton, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. FARLEY (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1464) to abolish prize-money, and to regulate pensions in the Navy; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HOAR asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1465) to provide for the ascertainment of claims of American citizens for spoliations committed by the French prior to the 31st day of July, 1801; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CONGER asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1466) for the relief of Henry F. Brownson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MCMILLAN (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1467) to establish a foot and carriage bridge across the Mississippi River at Saint Paul, in the State of Minnesota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. JACKSON asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 48) to provide for the settlement of accounts with the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Railroads.

A bill (H. R. No. 4787) for the relief of Benjamin F. Dobson.

The above bills were read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. SLATER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 4185) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WINDOM submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 171) in relation to certain fees allowed registers and receivers; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. LAPHAM, it was Ordered, That the memorials and papers on file with the Secretary relating to the bills to quiet the title of settlers on lands on the Des Moines River, in the State of Iowa, and presented in the third session of the Forty-fifth Congress, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

On motion of Mr. GORMAN, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Joseph H. Maddox be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

CONDUCT OF TROOPS ON INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

Mr. LAPHAM submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate a list of all Indian reservations upon which troops are stationed; also such information as may be on file in his Department touching the destruction and inordinate consumption of timber by the troops upon such reservations, with a statement of his opinion as to the necessity for the continuance of the military thereon, respectively.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no further morning business, the Chair announces the closing of the morning hour and the consideration of the Calendar under the Anthony rule.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask to take up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate refused to order the bill (S. No. 173) for the relief of Herman Biggs to be engrossed for a third reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider was made by the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS,] March 3——

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill lost its place on the Calendar. The defeat of the bill would certainly prevent its taking its place at the head of the Calendar.

Mr. SEWELL. The bill is still on the Calendar, a motion having been entered to reconsider.

Mr. COCKRELL. But it is not at the head of the Calendar. It is not the regular order under the Anthony rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has lost its place.

Mr. SHERMAN. It can be taken up at some other time by a motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill can be taken up on motion now.

Mr. FERRY. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have had referred to them several bills for the relief of postmasters who have lost stamps by fire or by burglary. The House passed a bill covering all such cases to the maximum of $2,000, authorizing the Postmaster-General, in his discretion, to adjust those cases. That bill was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and reported favorably without amendment. It is on the Calendar, and far back on the Calendar. I ask that that bill be taken up and passed. It will cover all these cases, in which many Senators are interested, and I have been requested to ask that the bill be taken up and passed, so that all cases within $2,000 may be adjusted by the Postmaster-General. It will relieve the committee and relieve Congress of these applications.

Mr. HALE. What has become of the motion made by the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. SEWELL?]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not in order now. The regular order has been called for by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. COCKRELL,] which is the first case on the Calendar under the Anthony rule. The Herman Biggs bill has lost its place on the Calendar.

Mr. HALE. At what time will action on the motion to reconsider the vote on that bill be in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At any time when there is no other business before the Senate. The Senator can ask to consider the motion now or at any time between now and half past one, but he will meet with the objection that the Senate is proceeding under the Anthony rule.

Mr. HALE. Can it be made any time after half past one?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can be made after half past one if there is no pending business. The Senator can ask for action on the motion now if he chooses, and if the Senate will by a majority agree to it the regular order called for by the Senator from Missouri will be postponed.

Mr. SEWELL. I propose to move to consider the motion, but I yield to the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. FERRY.]

LOSSES OF POSTMASTERS.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator from New Jersey yields to me. It will take but a moment to pass House bill No. 3251. I think all Senators are in favor of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan asks that the Senate pass over the Calendar under the Anthony rule and take up the bill which he has indicated. The bill will be announced by its title.

The ACTING SECRETARY. "A bill (H. R. No. 3251) authorizing the Postmaster-General to adjust certain claims of postmasters for loss by buglary, fire, or other unavoidable casualty."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan wish to have the bill read at length?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is usual in such a case to have the bill read at length before objections are called.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized to investigate all claims of postmasters for the loss of money-order funds, postage-stamps, stamped envelopes, newspaper-wrappers, and postal cards belonging to the United States in the hands of such postmasters, resulting from burglary, fire, or other unavoidable casualty; and, if he shall determine that such loss resulted from no fault or negligence on the part of such postmasters, to pay to such postmasters or credit them with the amount so ascertained to have been lost or destroyed, and also to credit postmasters with the amount of any remittance of money-order funds made by them in compliance with the instructions of the Postmaster-General which shall have been lost or stolen while in transit by mail from the office of the remitting postmaster to the office designated as his depository: Provided, That no claim exceeding the sum of $2,000 shall be paid or credited until after the facts shall have been ascertained by the Postmaster-General and reported to Congress, together with his recommendation thereon, and an appropriation made therefor: And provided further, That this act shall not embrace any claim for losses as aforesaid which accrued more than fifteen years prior to its passage; and all such claims must be presented to the Postmaster-General within six months after the taking effect of this act; and no claim for losses which may hereafter accrue shall be allowed unless presented within three months from the time the loss accrued.

SEC. 2. That it is hereby made the duty of the Postmaster-General to report his action herein to Congress annually, with his reasons therefor in each particular case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to proceeding to the consideration of the bill just read, postponing the regular order under the Anthony rule? The Chair hears no objection, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to a third reading.

Mr. MORRILL. Let the bill be read at length the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been read at length.

Mr. FERRY. The bill simply gives the Postmaster-General authority to adjust such cases within $2,000, cases that take up so much of the time of the committee, and it requires the Postmaster-General to report to Congress all cases above $2,000. I think it is perfectly safe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont wish to have the bill read again at length?

Mr. MORRILL. I do not.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

HERMAN BIGGS.

Mr. SEWELL. I now call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate refused to order to be engrossed for a third reading the bill (S. No. 173) for the relief of Herman Biggs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on proceeding to the motion to reconsider the vote in order to take up the bill indicated, to the displacement of other bills on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope that motion will not prevail. That case has had its day, it has been adversely acted upon by the Senate, and this is a motion to reconsider it in the morning hour to the prejudice of many unobjectionable cases. I trust the Senate will not set aside the Anthony rule in the morning hour in order to take up that bill.

Mr. HAMPTON. Through the kindness of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to myself, the motion to reconsider was entered. I asked that he would do so in order that I might suggest to the Senate that its action the other day was taken through a misunderstanding of the case. I do not propose to detain the Senate, but wish simply to bring to its attention——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The merits of the bill cannot be discussed upon the pending motion. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey to displace the order of business under the Anthony rule for the purpose of taking up the bill for the relief of Herman Biggs, the third reading of which was refused the other day, and which it is now moved to reconsider. [Putting the question.] The Chair is unable to decide from the sound, and those who are in favor of the motion of the Senator from New Jersey will rise and stand until counted.

The ayes were 32.

Mr. TELLER. Let us have the yeas and nays. Let us see whether we are going to displace the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have the yeas and nays and see what the Senate is going to do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays are demanded. Is there a second?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say that while I am as much opposed as any Senator to displacing the Anthony rule, the Senate consented to consider this case under the Anthony rule and it was so considered and disposed of, and now some Senators say that it was disposed of in part under a misapprehension by the Senate. So I regard it as within the spirit of the Anthony rule to let this reconsideration take place at once and letthe bill then stand as an original case.

Mr. TELLER. If the bill is to be considered under the Anthony rule and if the Senate votes to reconsider, I suppose it will be liable to objection. I do not understand that is the purpose. The purpose is to dispace the Calendar and to take up a case that has already been acted on and which has been decided. I am willing to vote to replace this case at any other time except when the Calendar is being called. After we are through with the morning hour, I am willing to vote to reconsider the case and give this man a chance, but I am not willing to displace the Calendar.

Mr. HALE. How can the Senator say that the case has been decided, when under the rules of the Senate, after action in a thin Senate, a motion was at once made to reconsider, thus keeping, as the Senator from Massachusetts has so well said, the matter in the morning hour?

Mr. TELLER. I understand that it has not been finally disposed of, beyond the power of the Senate to call it back; but the case has been discussed, it has been considered and disposed of, so far as the Senate could then dispose of it. Of course the friends of the bill had the right to interpose a motion to reconsider and to bring it back, and I should not object to its coming back and going on the Calendar, if it took its place with every other case, but it displaces every other case on the Calendar, and it is beyond our power to object to it.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am the last man, as the Senate knows, who objects to cases for personal relief, and I do not object to this now except in the sense that I think it is asking too much to postpone all the business concerning which Senators are so anxious upon the Calendar to give this case another hearing at this time. I am perfectly willing for it to have another hearing, but the case has not been treated in any hard or stinted measure so far as the time of the Senate is concerned. It has been here this session, it was here last session, and at how many former sessions I am not able to say.

While I am perfectly willing to have this matter heard again, I cannot sit here and see the whole of this precious hour that is set apart for the Calendar taken up by a case that has already been discussed as much as this has, and which has once been defeated. The Senator from Maine says truly that it is not finally disposed of as long as a motion to reconsider can be made, but the motion to reconsider being pressed upon our attention at this time I do not think is a modest thing toward the rest of the Calendar.

I am perfectly willing to suggest to my friend from South Carolina that we put the bill back on the Calendar and let it stand there, but I do not want it to antagonize the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is on the Calendar already, just like any other of the hundred cases passed over.

Mr. VOORHEES. I mean for it to be passed over without prejudice. Let it stand on the Calendar as having been passed over without prejudice, for that matter, but I do not wish to block the passage to business at this time.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana has expressed my views. A number of meritorious cases have been passed over on a single objection, among them one that I felt some interest in myself, because it was presumed they would lead to debate. The Anthony rule operates only until half past one, and was intended, as I understand, for the purpose of considering cases to which there is no objection. There are a hundred-odd cases, perhaps two hundred, passed over already on the Calendar; and if this question, which has been so largely debated, is now to be taken up for debate, and that is to be the rule we are to follow hereafter, every gentleman can have reconsidered every case that has not yet been heard. In that way those bills to which there is no objection can get no hearing, and thus there is no use of the Anthony rule at all and we may as well set it aside. I am looking to a case, which I have endeavored for the last ten days to get a hearing upon, for a poor widow whose pension check was lost on its way in the mail to her home; but she cannot get a hearing because other cases press it out of the way. I object to anything that interferes with that class of cases. Let us have the yeas and nays on this question.

Mr. HAMPTON. Mr. President, I am sure that neither the Senator from New Jersey nor myself wishes to press this bill unduly and to the prejudice of any other busines before the Senate. For myself I shall be glad if the Senate will make any disposition of it by which it may be called up when it will not interfere with any other business, and any motion to that effect I shall sustain.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, this bill is precisely in the attitude of thirty others which have been passed over. The Senator from South Carolina can call it up at any moment after half past one o'clock, and like any other bill there will be no objection to it then. The objection is to taking it up in the morning hour under the Anthony rule and consuming this morning hour and to-morrow's morning hour and the next day's morning hour, because it will take that long to consider it.

Mr. SEWELL. Allow me to interrupt the Senator. I would ask unanimous consent to take up the bill immediately on the expiration of the morning hour to-day, laying aside all other orders. It will only take a short time to dispose of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When that time comes the unfinished business comes up. At half past one the unfinished business that the Senate has agreed upon is the tariff-commission bill.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask unanimous consent now that at the expiration of the morning hour to-day the Senate take up this bill at half past one.

Mr. MORRILL. I suggest to the Senator from New Jersey that he ask, whenever an opportune time comes, that his bill be taken up informally. I am in favor of his bill, but I am not in favor of displacing the regular order.

Mr. SEWELL. I should like to know when that time will be.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey changes his motion. The motion now is that at half past one o'clock the bill for the relief of Herman Biggs be considered.

Mr. HARRIS. That motion is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not suppose it is in order.

Mr. HARRIS. At half past one it will be in order, but not now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So the Chair supposed. At half past one the motion will be in order to set aside the unfinished business. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the motion to take up this bill now.

Mr. SEWELL. Suppose this bill is passed over now, when will it come up again?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not until there is a motion to take it up. It is like every other bill on the Calendar; there must be a motion to take it up.

Mr. SEWELL. Then I ask that the yeas and nays be called, and I am willing then to leave the further consideration of the bill open.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey to take up this bill now.

Mr. ANTHONY. To lay aside the Calendar.

Mr. SEWELL. To take up the motion to reconsider. I am then willing to let the bill lie.

Mr. HALE. As I understand, the Senator from New Jersey now proposes simply to pass upon the motion to reconsider, and then announces that, if that carries, he will not push the consideration of the bill to-day to the exclusion of other business, but will call it up at some future opportune time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is another thing entirely.

Mr. HALE. It seems to me that nobody can object to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on taking up the motion to reconsider. That is the first thing. Then the Senate can act upon it.

Mr. HALE. The Senator then gives notice that he will not push for action now upon the bill. After it is reconsidered it will stand as it did before on the Calendar. It seems to me that is very fair.

Mr. COCKRELL. This is a motion to take up the motion to reconsider, and when the motion to reconsider is taken up that will lead to the discussion of the merits of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the whole subject will be open for debate.

Mr. SEWELL. I desire to submit this motion to reconsider without any discussion. Then I desire to let the bill lie until some other time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on taking up the motion to reconsider the bill (S. No. 173) for the relief of Herman Biggs, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask the Chair what will be the effect of this vote on the regular order of business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be to take up the motion to reconsider, if the Senate agrees to it. Then that will be the question before the Senate.

Mr. BAYARD. Then I understand the effect of this motion is to displace the Anthony rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Entirely.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to call the attention of my honorable friend from Missouri. I do not think he quite appreciated the force of the proposition of the Senator from New Jersey who has charge of this bill. The Senator from New Jersey says that if he can have consent simply to the reconsideration of the vote defeating the bill—which I agree is debatable—if that can be done without objection, then he will not ask at present any action on the passage of the bill, but will let it stand as a pending bill to be taken up hereafter, or never, as the Senate shall please. It does not, of course, give him any parliamentary advantage in actually procuring the passage of his bill merely to have the defeat reconsidered without objection. I submit, whether a large majority of the Senate having once voted to set this aside on the call, it would not save the time of the Senate to assent to the proposition of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. COCKRELL. I differ with my good friend from Massachusetts; I do not think it will save time at all. The bill has been acted upon by the Senate; the motion is to reconsider, and upon that motion when the bill is taken up the merits of the bill will be discussed, and if the motion to reconsider is carried, then as a matter of course immediately follows the question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. But the Senator from New Jersey proposes to have the motion to reconsider adopted by general consent without any discussion, and to postpone the discussion of the merits of the bill to the next step, and to do that he will consent to have the bill immediately displaced by the Anthony rule and stand for future action. That is his proposition.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think that that changes it at all. The motion is now to dispense with the Anthony rule, put this bill back, and displace all other cases on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will have to call gentlemen to order who speak twice on this subject. We shall never get through if it is done. The simple question is, will the Senate take up this bill which is pending on a motion to reconsider? The third reading of the bill has been refused by the Senate, and a motion to reconsider that refusal has been made. The question is, will the Senate take up the motion to reconsider? When it is taken up, then it will be open for debate.

Mr. BAYARD. I hope the Senate will comprehend that the effect of taking up this bill now is to displace the regular order of business.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 36, nays 20; as follows:

So the motion of Mr. SEWELL was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is now on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate refused to order the bill to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask unanimous consent that the motion to reconsider may be voted on now without debate, and then I shall agree to let the bill go over to a future time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That will not do any good. We may as well dispose of it at once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks that the motion to reconsider be taken without debate. The question is on the reconsideration.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to—ayes 38, noes not counted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When the bill is called up again the question will recur——

Mr. EDMUNDS. The bill is now before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct. The bill is before the Senate, and the question now is on ordering it to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose it is now subject to the Anthony rule, and open to objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is subject to objection, and a majority of the Senate can determine. A majority has voted to take it up.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose the true way to reach the agreement which the Senator from New Jersey made is to move that the bill be postponed until to-morrow, and then it stands at the foot of all to-morrow's business, unless the Senate, by a majority vote, takes it up. I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the bill be postponed until to-morrow, of course that will be done.

Mr. SEWELL. Then I ask that the bill be laid over informally.

Mr. HAMPTON. Subject to be called up by the Senator.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not informally.

Mr. TELLER. Why should this bill come up and displace everything else on the Calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Because the Senate has so voted.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that very well; but now the Senate having voted to take it up, it comes here like any other case to be diposed of. Now the Senator from New Jersey says he wants it put on the Calendar—at the head of the Calendar—to be taken up to-morrow or some other day.

Mr. HALE. Is it not now, the Senate having vacated its former action upon the Calendar, in its original position?

Mr. TELLER. That is what I want to know.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is up for consideration to-day.

Mr. TELLER. If it is on the Calendar, all right.

Mr. HOAR. As I understand it, when the bill was reconsidered the Anthony rule had been laid aside by a vote of the Senate and the Calendar had been laid aside. The motion to reconsider this bill has been taken up and passed by a vote of the Senate, and the bill is now before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On its third reading.

Mr. HOAR. The vote defeating the bill has been reconsidered. The Senator from New Jersey announced that he did not desire to ask a vote upon the merits of the bill at this time. Now, this motion to postpone it until to-morrow does not leave it on the Calendar for to-morrow under the Anthony rule, but it puts it at the foot of all to-morrow's business, after the Anthony rule and after the special order, the tariff-commission bill, and probably it never will be heard of again unless at some time the Senator from New Jersey moves to take it up and gets the affirmative vote of the Senate to do it, just as the Senator from Vermont did with his tariff bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the statement of the case.

Mr. TELLER. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to postpone the further consideration of this bill until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

FEES AND PRACTICE IN EXTRADITION CASES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first bill on the Calendar is the bill (S. No. 979) regulating fees and the practice in extradition cases, which is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill provides in the first section that all hearings in cases of extradition under treaty stipulation or convention shall be held on land, publicly, and in a room or office easily accessible to the public.

The second section prescribes the fees to be paid to commissioners in cases of extradition under treaty stipulation or convention between the Government of the United States and any foreign government.

The third section provides that on the hearing of any case under a claim of extradition by any foreign government, upon affidavit being filed by the person charged setting forth that there are witnesses whose evidence is material to his defense, that he cannot safely go to trial without them, what he expects to prove by each of them, and that he is not possessed of sufficient means, and is actually unable to pay the fees of such witnesses, the judge or commissioner before whom such claim for extradition is heard may order that such witnesses be subpœnaed; and in such cases the costs incurred by the process, and the fees of witnesses, shall be paid in the same manner that similar fees are paid in the case of witnesses subpœnaed in behalf of the United States.

Section four provides that all witness fees and costs of every nature in cases of extradition, including the fees of the commissioner, shall be certified by the judge or commissioner before whom the hearing shall take place to the Secretary of State of the United States, who is authorized to allow the payment thereof out of the appropriation to defray the expenses of the judiciary; and the Secretary of State is to cause the amount of the fees and costs so allowed to be reimbursed to the Government of the United States by the foreign government by whom the proceedings for extradition may have been instituted.

Mr. GARLAND. There is a mistake in the print. In line 27, section 2, the word "said" where it first occurs should be stricken out and the word "any" inserted, and in the same line the words "of said," before "convention," should be stricken out; so as to read:

> For hearing and deciding upon the case of any person charged with any crime or offense, and arrested under the provisions of any treaty or convention, $5 a day for the time necessarily employed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. These amendments will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. GARLAND. These are not amendments properly, but corrections of mistakes in the print.

The bill was reported to the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have the bill read again. I have no copy of it here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The bill was read.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 11th instant approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

An act (S. No. 387) directing the Secretary of War to pay over to the Society of the Army of the Cumberland $7,500, to aid in the erection of a statue or monument to General James A. Garfield;

A bill (S. No. 1092) authorizing and directing the purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the public use, of the property known as the Freedman's Bank, and the real estate and parcels of ground adjacent thereto, belonging to the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and located on Pennsylvania avenue, between Fifteenth and Fifteenth-and-a-half streets, Washington, District of Columbia; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 47) authorizing the Secretary of War to use Government vessels for the transportation and distribution of rations furnished by the United States to the sufferers by the Mississippi overflow.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. No. 54) for the relief of Charles A. Luke; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1957) for the relief of William Wallace Screws.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (H. R. No. 2156) for the relief of certain owners of the steamer Jackson;

A bill (H. R. No. 2851) for the relief of Moses R. Russell; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3542) for the relief of Charles F. Benjamin and Henry H. Smith.

The bill (H. R. No. 1143) for the relief of Timothy E. Ellsworth was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 54) to authorize Lieutenant Henry R. Lemly, United States Army, to accept a position under the Government of the United States of Colombia was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The bill (H. R. No. 3541) directing the issue of a check to the Pequonnock National Bank in place of one heretofore issued to Juliaett Prescott, a pensioner of the United States, and lost, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

TARIFF AND TAX COMMISSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of half past one having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. No. 22) to provide for the appointment of a commission to investigate the question of the tariff and internal-revenue laws, on which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. SLATER] has the floor.

Mr. SLATER. Mr. President, one so little accustomed to engage in general debate in this body as myself may well hesitate to enter into a discussion of the great questions which underlie tariff legislation; and particularly so in the presence of Senators who by years of study and long service here and elsewhere have familiarized themselves not only with the great economic questions directly connected with this and all other forms of taxation, but with the vast accumulation of facts, statistics, and detail necessary to be examined and understood before intelligent action can be had, and are always alert to detect, criticise, and expose false reasoning or error of statement.

But coming from a State where the chief resources of the people spring directly from agricultural pursuits, and believing as I do that the present system of tariff exactions is needlessly oppressive and burdensome to their particular interests, I venture to ask the attention of the Senate for a brief time to enable me to present, as best I may, some arguments against their continuance.

At the last session of Congress I favored the Eaton bill, and gave it my support, for the reason that it had become apparent that no immediate relief could then be had. The passage of that bill then would have brought the subject fully before the present Congress for early action. The necessity of some change in our tariff legislation, so urgent during the Forty-sixth Congress, is even more so now, and it seems to me that the best interests of the country imperatively demand prompt and decisive action at this session of Congress.

The bill which has been reported by the committee postpones far into the future any action looking to a reform in our present system of oppressive tariff taxation. The commission, if it shall be created, is not to report until January, 1883, and all effort to remove any of the burdens under which the agricultural interests of the country are so severely suffering are to be wholly ignored until then; and when that time shall have come it can hardly be doubted that some expedient or other will be resorted to to carry the matter over to another Congress to become the foot-ball in the next Presidential canvass. The protectionists now feel that they have a good thing, and they are extremely desirous to be let alone. The only things that trouble them just now are the decisions of the Treasury Department respecting hosiery and cotton-ties. If they could reform them they would be entirely happy.

Mr. President, there is only one condition worse to my mind than the adoption of this bill, and that is non-action. Possibly, sir, if the majority has determined that there shall be no change in our tariff legislation this Congress, some good in a negative way may come from the passage of this bill. For, although the commission will undoubtedly be composed of high-tariff men, put upon it to serve the manufacturing interests as far as those interests can be served, the discussions and investigations it will provoke and set on foot will, sooner or later, arouse the country to a better knowledge of tariff exactions and impositions.

The question which lies at the base of this whole subject is whether the country shall continue indefinitely under a policy which has for its prime object the creation and support of privileged classes by class legislation, or whether it shall be remitted to a system of taxation which shall not rob the many to enrich the few, but shall distribute the burdens of taxation equally among all classes without favor or oppression. Any system of legislation having for its purpose the imposition of taxes in such form or manner as to build up one interest or class to the detriment of another interest or class is fundamentally wrong, and may well be stigmatized as anti-republican; nay, more, sir, it is but legalized robbery.

The controversy between protection and free trade, as these terms are applied to different methods of laying duties on foreign imports, is not recent, but is as old as the legislation of the country upon the subject of raising revenue. Simultaneous with the assembling of the First Congress came the advocates of discriminating duties, asking for the protection of certain industries. From that day to this the contest has continued with varying intensity. Year after year and from Congress to Congress the protectionists have come up to the capital city of the nation with the plea that the manufacturing interests of the country should have special favors, conferred by the imposition of such partial duties upon foreign imports as would enable them to procure higher prices for their wares when brought to market than they otherwise could.

Prior to the late war the maximum of protective taxation was reached in about 1830; from that time it began to decline, until 1847, when a tariff for revenue in all, or mostly all, of its features was enacted, under which the country prospered as it had never prospered before. Manufacturing industries were greatly extended and our commerce rapidly increased, and through all the channels of trade and business unusual activity prevailed. The controversy seemed practically to be nearing its final solution in a permanent policy of equitable laws, free from unjust or partial discriminations. New questions were claiming the attention of the people and new parties forming upon new ideas when the late war broke upon the country, the exigencies of which made enormous demands upon the Treasury for means for its prosecution. This furnished the protectionist an occasion, which was seized with avidity and worked with relentless ingenuity, to put upon the statute-book a tariff the most burdensome in character and the most discriminating in its provisions ever known to the country.

In the meshes of this tariff the people found themselves bound and trammeled at the close of the war, compelled to pay unjust tribute to the manufacturing classes, from which entanglement all efforts to release themselves have thus far proven unavailing. Their appeals for relief are now met with the tantalizing proposition of a commission of high tariff men to consider the matter, gather facts and statistics, and report their conclusions nine months or a year hence. And we are told in advance that the work of revision should be done "by just and friendly hands," by which I understand, and the country will understand, that this commission is to be packed in advance with men friendly to one side of the question, and who will have but one object to gain and that object the perpetuation of our present unjust tariff laws, and this is called just.

Is it just, Mr. President, to exclude from this inquest of tariff taxation the men who represent the great agricultural classes? Is it just to hear only the claims of the manufacturers and leave them to say how much protection they shall have and at the same time deny to those upon whom the burdens of protection must ultimately fall no voice on the commission and no chance to present facts or arguments in their own behalf? If this is just, there is a perversion of terms, and wrong has become right, and iniquity has purloined the garb of righteousness. What, sir, can be expected of a commission of friendly hands, protectionists, organized under an administration avowedly protective in policy and principle, filled up from the ranks of the protectionists, reflecting the interests and wishes of the manufacturing classes, bound and wedded to their theories of partial duties in aid of domestic manufactures?

Why, sir, there can be but one result: at the end of this Congress we shall be just where we started. To be sure, sir, we may have a report from the friendly hands of this commission, lauding protection, furnishing with painstaking particularity every fact which can be tortured into the support of protective theories, and as carefully excluding from its pages everything that would break down or militate against those theories. In the mean time the present tariff legislation remains upon the statute-books. The consumers are still plundered in the name of protection, and no relief is brought to the agricultural classes, while the friendly hands of the manufacturer, through this commission, is binding more tightly and securely the chains of exhaustive taxation upon them. This, sir, is the tariff reform the people were beguiled into accepting at the hands of the Republican party in the late campaign. What is wanted by the people is sweeping legislation, a cutting down of your tariff and a remodeling of it upon principles of justice and equity, and not so arranged that in getting one dollar into the Treasury somebody is robbed of three or five dollars, and some other body enabled to put them into his own pocket as bounty to a protected industry.

Mr. President, no principle is better settled than that partial duties levied upon imported goods so as to benefit particular industries are bounties in every sense of that term. Hamilton, who brought forward the protective scheme in the First Congress, said, in his famous letter transmitted to Congress December 5, 1790, in which he discussed at length the whole subject of protection by the National Government:

Duties of this nature evidently amount to a virtual bounty on domestic fabrics, since by enhancing the charges on foreign articles they enable the national manufacturers to undersell their foreign competitors.

It is evident, sir, that Hamilton had not reached that exalted state of reasoning to which modern protectionists have, which enables them to reason out the modern proposition that the importer instead of the consumer pays the tax levied as import dues, or he would not have been led into the statement referred to. Modern protectionists are far too shrewd to ever admit that protective duties are virtual bounties. But with all their ingenuity of reasoning they cannot relieve such duties from the odium which pertains to bounties—bounties, too, levied in the most objectionable form, the real amount and weight of which are concealed from those upon whom they are levied—levied in the name of revenue but paid into the pockets of the manufacturer as bounties instead of being paid into the people's treasury, compelling the purchaser to pay tribute to the manufacturer instead of revenue to the Government.

In 1880 there was imported into this country and put upon the market of dutiable foreign merchandise $419,506,090.99, a great part of which was manufactures and sold to consumers in competition with like manufactures of home production, every dollar's worth of which was enhanced in price by just the per cent. of duty which the competing foreign article had to pay as the price to enter the American market; but while the duty paid upon an article of foreign manufacture furnishes the measure of the protection given to like articles of home production competing with the foreign, it does not disclose the aggregate of bounties which the people who consume the home productions are compelled to pay and do pay. These are necessarily concealed from the people under the forms of law and the conditions of trade.

The consumers when they enter a store, whether in the city, town, or country, do not find lists and tables posted up exhibiting the rates of duty under tariff laws by which they may be able to tell at a glance what proportion of the price of a coat, a hat, a bolt of domestic, a few yards of prints or flannels, a plow or a harvester, is attributable to the duties levied in the name of protection upon like articles of foreign make competing in the same market with those they have occasion to purchase from day to day. These things are only brought to light and to the attention of the people by those who dig them up from musty statutes, from census reports, and statistics compiled in the Treasury Department. And when they are brought to light and the extent and amount of these bounties are shown, and the robberies of the system exposed, every effort is made to cast a glamour of justification over the whole thing, sophistry and false reasoning are resorted to to hide and conceal the enormities which flourish under a system of partial duties.

Mr. President, in the year 1880, as shown by the census returns, the value of the manufactured product of the cotton-mills in the United States was $192,773,960. Of this product $9,981,418 was exported to foreign countries, leaving $182,792,542 of these manufactures for home consumption, which went into our markets with like manufactures imported from foreign countries. These foreign goods paid an average duty of 38.8 per cent. at the custom-house as the price of the privilege of being offered in American markets. This enabled the American manufacturer to advance the price of like articles 38.8 per cent. before the point of actual competition was reached with the foreign goods. We imported that year of the manufactures of cotton $25,723,251, and received as revenue into the Treasury $9,976,417.95 from the duty paid upon these importations. When the consumer purchased these imported goods, enhanced by 38.8 per cent. duty, the enhancement was a tax; but when he purchased those manufactured in this country, enhanced to the price of the foreign article, duty added, he paid a bounty to the home manufacturer equal to the duty paid on the foreign one. The amount of these bounties thus paid to the American manufacturers of cotton goods in 1880 was equal to $51,097,628. That is, sir, the American manufacturers had that much margin within which to increase the price of their productions before the point of competition was reached, and it is safe to say that they uniformly availed themselves of it. Thus, sir, for every dollar of revenue the tariff upon cotton goods produced in that year it enabled the home manufacturer of cotton to exact $4.50 tribute from the consumers of their own fabrics.

Again, sir, the value of the manufacture of iron and steel in the United States in 1880 is returned at $296,557,685, of which we exported $14,716,520, leaving for home consumption $281,841,165. The same year we imported from foreign countries $45,180,624 worth of like manufactures, which paid an average duty of over 42 per cent., and produced $19,180,624 of revenue. The levying of these duties enabled the home manufacturers to add 42 per cent. to the value of their products, making a bounty to them in that year of $83,361,474, or more than $4 of bounty to the home manufacturers to $1 of revenue paid to the Government from duties upon iron and steel.

Take another example. The census returns as far as completed show that the value of woolen manufactures in the United States for 1880 was $265,684,796; exports were $216,576, leaving for home consumption $265,468,220. At the same time we imported from foreign countries, and which went into consumption in 1880, $31,854,546 of the manufactures of wool, upon which was paid an average duty of 68.68 per cent. The foreign goods and the home products competed in the same market, the same grade and quality of each class selling for like prices. Upon the foreign, the consumers paid duty into the Treasury to the amount of $21,864,153, and the consumers of the home product paid a bounty to the amount of $108,070,435 to the home manufacturers, or more than $5 of bounty to $1 of revenue; and deducting from this margin of bounty the duty the manufacturer paid to the Government upon foreign wools used in the manufacture of these home products, the bounty is largely more than $4 to $1 of revenue collected upon goods of a like character imported.

On these three great lines of manufactures, cotton, wool, iron and steel, these marginal bounties conferred by the operation of our tariff laws in the year 1880 were equal to $242,629,837, while all the wages paid to all the employés engaged in them was only $144,473,505, or $98,156,332 less than the margin of protection. And now, when it is proposed to reform some of these abuses, the consumers who have patiently borne these unjust exactions for twenty years are told that they can have no voice in the work; that it must be done by the friendly hands of protection.

It is true, sir, revenue must be had to carry on the Government, and it cannot be raised except by taxes in some form, and so far in the history of the country it has been more convenient to raise it mainly by duties levied upon foreign imports rather than by other forms of taxation. The controversy is not whether there shall be no tariff, as opposed to a high protective tariff, for all parties agree that the greater portion of needed revenue should be raised by tariff duties, but whether our tariff laws shall be adjusted upon strictly revenue principles, looking solely to the maximum of revenue that can be raised by duties upon foreign imports rather than their adjustment upon that system which demands that protection to class interests shall be the first and main object of all tariff legislation and the procuring of revenue wholly secondary and subordinate.

The constant and persistent effort made to lead the country to believe that the Democracy propose to repeal all tariff laws by calling them free-traders, is misleading and is one of the devices of protectionists to alarm the people and in the end defeat any substantial reform in our tariff laws. It is a weak appeal to a prejudice which is supposed to still linger in the minds of the American people against anything English. Great Britain having adopted free trade in her intercourse with other countries, the protectionists seek to frighten the American people by raising the cry of free trade against any reform in our tariff law which looks to an equalization of the burdens of taxation and the bringing of our system of tariff duties to a revenue basis. Bestowed in derision, "free trade" is becoming a watchword and a rallying cry of the people who suffer from the extortions of protection. Sir, it may be difficult to fix the duties of a tariff for revenue, but whether difficult or not, we are not without precedent in that direction. The path is not entirely an untrodden one, and while it is true that there has been no tariff in this country wholly free from protective features, the tariff of 1847 was a very near approach to the ideal of a tariff for revenue only, and yet it was stigmatized as a "British free-trade tariff."

The average per cent. of duty under the tariff of 1828 for the six years of its existence was about 42.45 per cent. upon all merchandise paying duty, and this was the tariff which, in connection with the acts of 1830 and 1832, gave so much dissatisfaction in certain sections of the country. It was the highest tariff known to the country before the civil war. Under the tariff of 1842, which is one of the landmarks of tariff legislation and protective in a large degree, though much modified as compared with former tariffs, the average per cent. upon all dutiable goods imported was about 28.74 per cent. Under the tariff of 1846, which continued in force ten years, the average per cent. was 25.73. Under this later tariff the country was greatly prospered; our commerce was on every sea; our tonnage increasing from 2,839,046 tons in 1847 to 5,049,808 tons in 1858, an increase of nearly 80 per cent. in ten years. Our exports increased from $158,648,622 in 1847 to $383,960,682 in 1857, an increase of 142 per cent. in ten years. Our imports increased from $146,545,638 in 1847 to $360,840,140 in 1857, an increase of 147 per cent. in ten years. Our revenues from customs ran up from $23,747,864 in 1847 to $63,875,905 in 1857, an increase of 268 per cent. in ten years, meeting all the expenses of the Government and leaving a large surplus in the Treasury. Railroads increased from 5,598 miles in 1847 to 24,503 miles in 1857, an increase of 439 per cent.

Now, Mr. President, contrast these results with the last ten years of our history under our present system about which we hear so much. Exports increased in the last period under protection 103 per cent. against an increase of 142 per cent. in the former period under a revenue system. Our imports increased only 2 per cent. in the last period against 147 per cent. in the former, and our revenues from customs actually declined in the later period against an increase of 289 per cent. in the former. During the period from 1847 to 1857, of which I have been speaking, our manufacturing industries kept fully abreast with the general improvement and development of the country.

While it is not to be supposed or argued that the great and general prosperity which prevailed throughout the country from 1847 to 1857 should be attributed solely to the tariff of that period, it does furnish proof that one of the most prosperous periods the country has ever had in its industrial development was under a low tariff adjusted mainly upon revenue principles.

It cannot be denied that any tariff, however low its percentage, levied upon foreign articles imported in competition with like articles of home production gives incidental protection, and in that view the tariff of 1847 afforded no inconsiderable protection, but that protection was secondary and incidental. It is conceded that there should be a very considerable reduction of taxation in view of the fact that our revenues have swolen to such a large surplus. The total receipts for last year were $360,782,292.57, and total expenses $260,712,887.59, leaving over $100,000,000 surplus. The receipts of the present year are expected to reach $400,000,000, while the necessary expenses are estimated at $270,000,000, giving an estimated surplus of $130,000,000. These figures show that there should be a reduction of from $90,000,000 to $100,000,000 in the amount of money raised from the people by taxes. Of this reduction $60,000,000 or $70,000,000 ought to come from a decrease in tariff duties.

The per cent. of duties collected last year to total of imports was 30.8 per cent. The tariff of 1847 during the ten years of its life averaged of duties collected 20.89 per cent. of total value of imports. A like tariff would have produced in 1881 upon foreign imports more than $134,000,000 in revenue, a sum sixty-four millions less than the amount collected under present tariff laws. But, Mr. President, under such a reduction of the tariff there would undoubtedly be a relative increase of revenue, as our present tariff is prohibitive in many instances and in nearly all cases above that point productive of the largest revenue. So that, if the tariff of 1847 were readopted now, the revenue it would produce would in all reasonable probability reach $140,000,000, or a reduction of about $58,000,000 from present revenues from customs. Such a reduction might then be supplemented by a reduction of at least twenty-five millions in internal taxation.

From all these facts it is quite apparent that at least 32 per cent. of our present tariff impositions are levied directly and solely for protective purposes, in addition to all the incidental protection which a tariff for revenue would afford our manufacturing industries, and must be regarded as bounties to such industries. Apply this principle to the three leading manufacturing interests referred to, cotton, iron and steel, and woolen, and how does the account stand? Cotton goods have an average of 12 per cent. protection above the necessary tariff on that class of imports, iron and steel have 13 per cent., and woolens have 21 per cent.

Mr. President, I have already given the amount of bounty these several manufactures enjoy, from the stand-point that all duties levied upon like products imported into the United States from foreign countries give the home manufacturers just that much margin within which to advance the price of their own wares to the consumer, who has the poor privilege of buying the foreign article enhanced by the duty, or of buying the home product increased to the same price as the foreign one after the duty has been paid. Now, sir, let me state the case under a tariff such as I have suggested:

Cotton manufactures of 1880.

Capital invested	$207,781,868
Wages paid	41,921,106
Value of production, less amount exported	182,792,542
Bounty above a revenue tariff	20,742,417

Or about one-half of the wages paid to the employés is made up by these bounties over and above the incidental protection which would be afforded under a tariff adjusted upon correct revenue principles. And it must be borne in mind that such a tariff would afford fully 26 per cent. protection upon dutiable cotton goods.

Iron and steel manufactures of 1880.

Capital invested	$230,971,884
Wages paid	55,476,785
Value of production, less amount exported	281,841,165
Amount of bounty above revenue tariff	33,424,205

A bounty of about 15 per cent. on the capital invested and over 60 per cent. of all the wages paid the employés in all the iron and steel foundries, mills, and factories in the United States.

Woolen manufactures of 1880.

Capital invested	$155,454,105
Wages	47,115,614
Value of production, less exportation	265,468,220
Amount of bounty over revenue tariff	44,420,105

The bounty in this case being more than 25 per cent. upon the capital invested and very nearly equal to the entire wages paid to all the employés engaged in the industry. Thus it will be seen that the consumers of this country have paid in bounties to the manufacturers of cotton, woolens, and iron and steel in one year more than ninety-eight and one-half millions of dollars in excess of the incidental protection of a properly adjusted tariff, taking the tariff of 1847 as the standard, or more than $2 of bounty to the manufacturer for every dollar of revenue paid into the Treasury upon like goods of foreign make.

Mr. President, recently the honorable Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] made a very elaborate speech on tariff questions. I listened to him quite attentively and have since read his speech. It is full of statistics, replete with sarcasm and irony, and while I listened to him and while I subsequently read his speech I could not keep out of my mind the query whether it had ever occurred to that honorable Senator that he might not have somewhat overdrawn the Democratic position and put its adherents in a wholly different one from that they really occupy. It also occurred to me, when he so significantly waived a consideration of the facts so pertinently and forcibly put by the honorable Senator from Texas, [Mr. COKE,] contained in the official statements of ex-Secretaries Evarts and Blaine, showing the practical equalization of the price of labor in England and America, based as they were upon consular reports, that he had forgotten the fact that both these gentlemen were members of his own party and both pronounced protectionists and would not be likely to make official statements not based on accurate data, which might be taken against themselves and party friends. Besides, sir, it did not seem to occur to the honorable Senator that Messrs. Evarts and Blaine stood in the position of impartial officials, while those he quoted from occupied the position of interested parties. It is hardly the correct thing to do to push aside the official statements of these gentlemen, gathered as they were from official sources and placed before Congress in the discharge of official duty, and take statements of manufacturers interested in maintaining protection. I do not, however, propose to enter into a discussion of the relative price of labor in England and America, but I do propose to take the principal case given by the honorable Senator as an illustration of what he said free trade would do, and which he styled the "free-trade Democratic way," and show from his own facts, taken from his own lips, what protection is. In his remarks he says:

I do not propose to discuss the abstruse theories or attempt to dissect the cunning sophistries of free trade, but will offer a single problem for the American workingmen of the country to solve. Can we compete with Europe, paying wages on the average not over half as high as ours, in the manufacture of cotton, wool, silk, iron, steel, and wood, when the perfected article represents from 80 to 90 per cent. of labor, without degrading our workmen and cutting down their wages? We build a mill in New England, quarry the stones and excavate the earth for its foundation, convert the forest trees into lumber, the iron ore in the earth into bolts, rods, spikes, and nails, the clay from its banks into bricks, and with laborers, masons, carpenters, slaters, painters, and glaziers, complete the structure. For this we pay—

	Per week.
Laborers	$7 00 to $9 00
Bricklayers	12 00 to 18 00
Masons	9 00 to 15 00
Gas-fitters	10 00 to 18 00
Carpenters	10 00 to 15 00
Painters	12 00 to 16 00
Plasterers	10 00 to 15 00
Plumbers	12 00 to 18 00
Slaters	10 00 to 15 00
Granite-workers	12 00 to 18 00
Millwrights	12 00 to 18 00

Then we make the necessary machinery, and for the skilled workmen required we pay from $12 to $24 a week. Now, ready for operation, it has cost $300,000, 90 per cent. of which, or $270,000, represents labor. For our capital we pay from 6 to 8 per cent. interest.

To our operatives we pay about as follows:

	Per week.
Card-grinders	$9 00 to $10 00
Cloth-haulers	8 00 to 9 00
Drawers in	7 00 to 9 00
Peckers	9 00 to 13 50
Spinners	9 00 to 12 00
Mule-spinners	9 50 to 10 00
Weavers	7 00 to 12 00
Rollers	8 00 to 9 00
Overseers of carding	8 00 to 9 00
Spinning and weaving	14 00 to 21 00

The finished piece of cloth, ready for the market, has cost $100.

The Englishman builds the same mill, the same number of sets of cards, equipped with like machinery; makes a piece of goods the exact counterpart of ours. The wages he has paid on the structure and machinery are as follows:

	Per week.
Laborers	$5 82
Bricklayers	9 25
Masons	8 70
Gas-fitters	7 80
Carpenters	9 00
Painters	8 50
Plasterers	9 72
Plumbers	9 00
Slaters	9 72
Granite-workers	8 00
Millwrights and machinists	7 00 to 10 00

To the operatives as follows:

	Per week.
Wool-sorters	$6 24 to $6 72
Scourers and dyers	4 80 to 5 75
Dyers, (not foremen)	5 25 to 5 75
Teasers	4 32 to 5 25
Scribblers, (foremen)	9 60 to 14 40
Fitters	4 32 to 5 75
Feeders	1 92 to 2 88
Spinners	7 70 to 9 69
Piecers	1 92 to 2 40
Weavers, men	6 00 to 8 40
women	3 60 to 4 80
Millers	4 80 to 5 75
(foremen)	9 60 to 14 40
Raisers and cutters	6 00 to 7 20
(boys)	1 92 to 2 88
Burlers	1 92 to 2 40
Pressers	5 75 to 6 72
Laborers	4 32 to 5 25

The average wages being less than two-thirds of ours. The mill, equipped, has not cost over $200,000. The annual interest for the capital 4 per cent. The cost of the piece of goods will not exceed $70. Now, if the English mill-owner can send that piece of goods into our market free of duty he can sell it for $80, $20 less than the actual cost of ours, and make a profit of $10. Can the New England mill run? Yes, but only in one way. Reduce the cost of our mill, of our machinery, and of our goods by cutting down the wages of all the men and women who have labored from the laying of the mill's foundation to the finishing of the cloth, so that our piece shall cost but $70.

This is the free-trade Democratic way. But the workingmen of America pay the penalty in poor living, less comforts in their homes, less schools for their children.

Mr. President, this is the actual or supposititious case upon which the honorable Senator rests his whole argument. The facts and figures are all his own. Now, sir, turning to the reports of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics for 1880, on page 552 I find that the rates of duty upon cloth, such I suppose as the Senator refers to, is 72.80 per cent., which would make the English cloth costing $70 at the mill cost $120.96 at the custom-house in the United States duty paid. Add freight, insurance, and other charges, and it would cost on the shelf of the importer without profit, say $123, or $23 more than the New England manufactured price, which cost the maker $100, everything included; for the honorable Senator was particular in this respect. No shrinkage in the price of labor or the investment was contemplated; that could only occur under the "free-trade Democratic way." Interest upon the plant at 6 or 8 per cent. has been computed for; the high wages of the day, under which the employés of the New England factories are prosperous, well fed, educated, and housed, are taken into the account. Everything has been remembered. Nothing has been overlooked which should be taken account of in making up the cost of the American cloth, and it foots up just $100.

Now, sir, how stands the case? The two pieces of cloth, one English and the other American, go into the same market. The English cloth pays $50.96 as the price of the privilege of competing with the American manufacturer, and by reason of this tariff duty the American cloth has a margin of 23 per cent. on its cost, in which it may be enhanced in price before it can be affected by competition with its rival. The two pieces are sold for like prices, say $130 each. The importer of the English goods has made 5.6 per cent. profit, and the American manufacturer 30 per cent. The purchaser of the English cloth paid $50.96 tax, which went to the support of the Government, $2.04 freights, insurance, &c., and $7 profits. The purchaser of the American cloth paid the same for his piece as was paid for the English goods, $50.96 of which represents the enhancement in the price of the cloth by reason of the tariff duty exacted from the imported article as the price of its admission to American markets. The duty paid on the imported article was revenue; the enhancement of the price of the American product was a bounty exacted under the forms of law, and greatly in excess of what was required for protection from the stand-point of the protectionists.

Why, sir, the American manufacturer needed but 40 per cent. protection upon the cost of the foreign article to be on an absolute equality with his English rival; and this would be about the rate upon this class of goods under a tariff for revenue only. This being so, what shall be said of the extra 32 per cent. of protection which enables the honorable Senator's New England manufacturer of woolen cloths to exact from his customer upon one piece of goods, costing $100, $23 in addition to its cost and an equal profit with his competing rival? Is this extra 32 per cent. needed to enable the manufacturer to continue to run his mill? No, sir. Is it just? No, sir. Then, sir, it is unjust, and the law that permits it and makes its exaction possible is anti-republican and tyrannical, and the exaction may well be termed legalized robbery.

The unjust taking of $23 from the consumer without an equivalent upon one piece of American cloth costing $100 to make and giving it to the manufacturer, who makes no return therefor, is no better in principle than the forcible taking of the same amount from one upon a public highway. One is rightly called robbery and the other is miscalled protection.

What the output of American cloths in the year 1880 was in value I have no certain data to show; but, if that line of manufactures held a like ratio to the total of woolen manufactures as the imported cloths did to the total of the imports of the manufactures of wool, the amount was over $55,000,000. Taking these figures as representing the proximate value of American cloths produced in 1880, the exactions of the American manufacturers from the consumers of American cloths in that year upon the basis of cost given by the honorable Senator from Maine amount to over $14,000,000. That is protection. That is the protective Republican way. The solution of the honorable Senator's problem is a simple matter of arithmetic, and the logic of that solution is an unanswerable argument and protest against the robberies perpetrated in the name of protection. The American workingmen who till the soil all over this broad land will solve this problem of the honorable Senator at the ballot-box at no distant day. This, Mr. President, is a fair illustration of the workings of our present tariff laws and of the robberies and injustice done under them; and these laws were enacted in compliance with the demands of class interest, backed by the sophistical reasoning of protectionists, which required Congress, in exercising the constitutional power, "to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the public debt, and provide for the common defense of the United States," that it should so exercise these great powers that certain class interests might thereby be enabled to extort unwilling and concealed tribute from every other interest and industry in the land; doing by indirection what no man then or at any time has dared to openly advocate, and that is the levying of taxes upon the whole mass of the people for the purpose of, when collected, bestowing the revenues thus raised upon favorite interests or individuals.

Mr. President, some days since we were told that the tariff of 1861 had proven more satisfactory to the people and to the various industries of the country than any on record. And we were also informed that prices were in every way more remunerative, "agricultural products being higher and manufactures lower." That the country and people were prosperous, our Treasury full and overflowing, and large balances in our foreign trade standing in our favor, all of which was presented as so many results attributable to our tariff laws. It is true, Mr. President, that we have had some three years of unusual prosperity, but how this prosperity has any relation to our tariff laws is very difficult to discover, except that it has occurred during the time of their existence. When it is shown that sunshine and rain, winter and summer, heat and cold, and those climatic changes which have so much to do with our agricultural crops are dependent upon tariff legislation, then, sir, I shall be willing to believe that our present prosperity is to be referred to the benign influence of the present tariff, but not before.

No, Mr. President, the people who delve and dig in the field and upon the farms all over this country achieved this prosperity, and they achieved it in spite of your tariff. I do not underrate manufacturing and other mechanical industries, or their general importance, when I state that all prosperity in this country is based on agricultural pursuits. When the tillers of the soil are prosperous then will your manufactures flourish, the trains upon your railroads will come and go laden with the product of the soil and its exchanges. But if these languish through failure or blight of their crops, or if the foreign demand be insufficient, or prices too low to meet the expense of production, distress is at once abroad in your cities, towns, and manufacturing sections. The mill and factory close or run upon short time, freight upon your railroads slackens, consumption is checked, importations fall off, revenues decline, and the balance of trade in foreign commerce changes to the other side of the ledger.

Why, Mr. President, of the total exports of 1880, which amounted to $823,946,353, the products of domestic agriculture amounted to $683,010,976, or 82.99 per cent. of it all. In 1870 these products amounted to 81.14 per cent. of exports, from which point they declined year by year until 1877, when they were 72.63 of total exports, and it will be remembered that it was in 1877 that there were so many thousands of people out of employment, by reason of the pressure of the times and its depressing influences upon all classes of manufacturing industries, which ended in disastrous riots and vast destruction of property. Slowly the financial crisis which began, or rather burst, upon us in 1872, gradually passed away and confidence was again restored. All the while, however, from 1872, with the exception of 1875 and 1876, our exports were swelling while our imports were falling off, leaving year by year, beginning with 1874, a balance in our favor, which last year swelled to nearly $260,000,000 and a grand aggregate since 1875 of $1,478,065,307.

The tariff had very little to do with this grand result, except to interpose hinderances in the way of its accomplishment. The connection of the tariff with the revenues is more apparent. It did furnish the authority and the rule of assessment. But, while it caused one dollar to fall into the Treasury as revenue, it caused two to fall into the pockets of those engaged in favored industries, thereby exacting unjust tribute from the consumer. To this extent the admirers of this tariff may take credit to it and themselves for its aid in filling the Treasury and a consequent reduction of the national debt. But at last the foreign merchandise upon which the duty was paid which went to swell our vast revenues was but the exchange which was returned to us in payment for our exports, so largely composed of farm products.

It has always been a favorite argument with those favoring high protective tariffs, that one of the results of such enactment would be the creation of home markets for the consumption of our own agricultural products. That competition would bring manufactures to a proper level as to prices, and at the same time furnish the surest and most reliable market for the farmer's surplus, and now it is claimed that this result has been accomplished; that manufactures are lower and agricultural products higher than formerly. Sir, it would be strange, indeed, if in 1882 we did not have some articles of manufactures cheaper than they were twenty years ago, and it would be equally strange if some agricultural products were not higher now than in 1861.

We have had twenty years of high tariff, and I ask, sir, where is the market for our surplus farm products? The returns of the Bureau of Statistics show that in 1881 we sold in Europe breadstuffs to the value of $268,322,510; provisions, $152,853,223; cotton in the raw state, $245,534,510, and tobacco, $18,442,273, besides many other items of smaller moment. It is true, sir, the home market is of great importance; but it will not be questioned that all our staple products are governed in price at home by the price the surplus will bring abroad. So at last we are governed by the state of the foreign market. Of course the amount shipped abroad is but a small share of the whole product; but, however small it may be, the price which that surplus will bring regulates the price and value of the whole, be it much or little.

Then, sir, after all the talk about a home market and the consumption of American farm products by a manufacturing population, we find ourselves just where we were twenty years ago, still largely dependent upon foreign markets for purchasers for our surplus agricultural products, and for all that appears in prospective will continue to be so dependent for years to come. Then, sir, whatever of advance there may have been of farm products must be attributed to the demand in the foreign market quite as much as to increased home consumption. Upon an examination of a table of prices, furnished by the Bureau of Statistics, it will be found that butter, cheese, lard, pork, bacon and hams, and salted beef sold at lower prices for export during the three years ending with 1880 than the same articles were selling for in the same market the three years ending with 1860. Cotton has advanced, but no one would for a moment suppose that the home price of what cotton is consumed here fixed the price of the whole crop. No principle is better understood than that the foreign demand determines the price. If cotton advances in Europe the mills and factories at home must pay the advance for their supplies; if cotton falls abroad the planter must sell at the declining rate. There is no escape from this law, as every cotton merchant and planter will testify.

Mr. President, since the statement was made some days ago that agricultural products had advanced under our present tariff, I have taken occasion to hunt up price-lists from the most reliable sources attainable, and have prepared tables from these price-lists showing the price of wheat, flour, and corn in the city of New York, which will go far to refute the statement:

Yearly average price of wheat, flour, and corn in New York from 1848 to 1857, both years included, and the average price of each for the ten years.

Year.	Wheat, per bushel.	Flour, per barrel.	Corn, per bushel.
1848	$1 17.5	$5 98	$0 63.5
1849	1 24.0	4 51	62.7
1850	1 27.5	5 55	62.5
1851	1 07.5	4 52	61.7
1852	1 10.5	5 05	67.5
1853	1 39.0	5 78	71.0
1854	2 21.0	8 94	84.5
1855	2 43.5	8 76	99.0
1856	1 75.5	6 42	70.5
1857	1 67.5	5 75	81.0
Average price for ten years	1 53.3	6 18	72.3

Yearly average price of wheat, flour, and corn in New York from 1858 to 1861, both years included, and average price of each for four years.

Year.	Wheat, per bushel.	Flour, per barrel.	Corn, per bushel.
1858	$1 32.5	$4 29.5	$0 80.5
1859	1 43.5	5 11.0	86.2
1860	1 49.5	5 19.0	74.0
1861	1 42.7	4 56.0	61.0
Average price for four years	1 41.8	4 78.8	75.4

Yearly average price in gold of wheat, flour, and corn in New York from 1862 to 1871, both years included, and the average price of each for the ten years.

Year.	Wheat, per bushel.	Flour, per barrel.	Corn, per bushel.
1862	$1 29.0	$4 56.0	$0 55.2
1863	1 12.9	3 99.0	61.3
1864	95.5	3 96.6	73.9
1865	1 37.3	4 90.1	78.6
1866	2 09.0	5 62.3	64.2
1867	2 05.9	6 63.4	87.6
1868	1 81.9	5 66.4	84.6
1869	1 24.1	4 30.5	76.2
1870	1 19.4	4 37.5	84.8
1871	1 41.4	5 38.8	68.1
Average price for ten years	1 45.6	4 94	73.4

Yearly average price in gold of wheat, flour, and corn in New York from 1872 to 1880, both years included, and the average price of each for the nine years.

Year.	Wheat, per bushel.	Flour, per barrel.	Corn, per bushel.
1872	$1 58.4	$5 52.6
1873	1 57.0	5 13.4	$0 60.7
1874	1 36.3	4 61.2	55.0
1875	1 22.0	4 28.1	80.6
1876	1 18.5	3 92.6	70.2
1877	1 60.7	5 40.3	51.2
1878	1 24.2	3 92.4	51.3
1879	1 22.3	4 10.5	49.0
1880	1 25.3	4 13.5	54.7
Average for nine years	1 36.6	4 56.0	59.6

From these tables it appears that the average price of wheat in the city of New York in 1857, after ten years' trial of a revenue tariff, was $1.75 per bushel, and for the ten years then ending its average price was $1.53.3 per bushel; while the average for 1880, after nineteen years of protection, was $1.25.3 in coin per bushel, and for the nine years then ending the average price was $1.36.6 in coin per bushel, showing an average decline of 16.7 cents per bushel in the latter period when compared with the former.

The average price of corn in New York City for 1857 was 81 cents per bushel, and for the ten years then ending 72.3 cents per bushel; while in 1880 the average price for the year was 54.7 cents per bushel, and for the nine years then ending the average price was 57 cents per bushel, showing a decline for the last years compared of 26.3 cents per bushel, and for the last periods a decline of 14.3 cents per bushel.

Why, Mr. President, if we compare the prices of these products for the four years from 1877 to 1880, those years too in which such marvelous prosperity came to this country, with those other four years from 1858 to 1861 inclusive, years of despised low tariff under which the duties collected averaged about one-half the per cent. of duties assessed under the present tariff, we shall find that the prices of these great staples ruled considerably higher from 1858 to 1861 than from 1877 to 1880; so much higher, sir, that if we had received the prices which ruled in the former period for the wheat, flour, and corn exported from the United States to foreign countries from 1877 to 1880, the aggregate of our foreign balances would be many millions greater than they were. The exports of these three staples in 1880 amounted to over $280,000,000 in value, and if they had brought the average prices which ruled from 1858 to 1861, their value would have been swolen by about forty-eight millions of dollars for that one year alone.

Great claims are constantly put forth to the effect that the wool product has been greatly increased in quantity and price by reason of the benefits this industry has derived from protection given by our present tariff. A little examination, Mr. President, will dissipate a great deal if not all of this claim. That there has been a very large increase in the wool product of the country is not to be denied. So also has there been a very large increase in many and indeed in all other agricultural products. The fact is, everything pertaining to agricultural pursuits has assumed vastly greater proportions since the close of the war than before it opened. The increase, therefore, of wool is not to be regarded as phenomenal when considered in connection with the very great and proportionate progress in every other branch of agricultural pursuits.

From 1867 to 1877, a period of ten years, with all the benefits of a high protective tariff, the number of sheep in the States of Ohio, Michigan, Pennsylvania, New York, Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin decreased from something over 27,000,000 in the former year to less than half that number in the latter year. It is both a significant and a damaging fact that in three years after the present tariff on wool was passed, in 1867, the number of sheep in the United States declined from 42,000,000 to 28,500,000, a decrease of about 34 per cent., and the clip had fallen from 140,000,000 to 100,102,387 pounds, marking a decrease of about 29 per cent. As late as the 5th of April, 1879, Mr. Joseph Walworth, of the Pacific Mills, Lawrence, Massachusetts, says:

> In the Middle and near-by Western States, where the best wools were grown, and where they were mostly washed before being shorn, there are not half the sheep kept now that there were in 1867.

And this, too, after twelve years of high tariff. These facts indicate that too much protection is neither healthy for sheep nor profitable to wool-growers.

But, Mr. President, while decline has marked the last thirteen or fourteen years in all the older States, there has been an increase in the Western States and Territories, where sheep-walks have been opened under most favorable circumstances, and where sheep husbandry has been developed with surprising rapidity. This rapid development in the West served to check the disastrous decline and finally turned the scale upward, and, as a consequence, the last few years has marked a considerable increase in herd and a very large increase in clip. And because of these results, with which the tariff has had little to do, protectionists make haste to proclaim them as wholly attributable to the tariff; just as if tariffs made the nutritious grasses to grow on the western plains, and infused better blood into the herds, and thereby caused the fleece to become finer and heavier.

In 1867 the estimated average weight of fleece was three and one-half pounds per head, while in 1878 it had risen to five and six-tenths pounds per head, so that, while there were more than 6,000,000 less sheep in the country in 1878 than in 1867, there was an increase of 64,000,000 pounds in the wool product.

The account then stands substantially this way: thirteen years of high protection to wool, with an actual decrease in the number of sheep in the United States, but by a transfer of sheep husbandry largely to the far Western States and Territories, and well-directed effort, with large infusion of better blood, so large an increase in the weight of the fleece has been obtained as to make an actual increase of the wool product in 1880 of about eighty million pounds. If the tariff has had anything to do with these results the irresistible logic is: the higher the tariff and the fewer the sheep the greater the product of wool.

But it is claimed also, Mr. President, that the tariff has caused wool to bring better prices in the market than it formerly did, and every man engaged in sheep husbandry is appealed to to stand by the Republican party and the tariff, on the ground of course that if the number of sheep has been decreased in the last thirteen years the weight of fleece and the price of wool have increased. For the purpose of testing this claim, so often and so vehemently asserted, I have some tables here, showing the price of wool in gold coin in the city of New York from 1825 to 1880:

Yearly average price of wool in gold in New York from 1825 to 1836, both years included, with the average for the period.

Year.	Common, per lb.	Merino, per lb.	Pulled, per lb.
1825	$0 33.5	$0 58.5	$0 32.6
1826	30.0	49.5	28.7
1827	25.0	39.0	21.6
1828	25.0	37.0	24.0
1829	21.5	34.5	25.0
1830	22.0	39.0	28.5
1831	27.5	53.5	55.0
1832	27.5	47.5	42.7
1833	31.5	49.0	46.7
1834	30.2	48.8	46.3
1835	33.7	53.9	47.1

It appears from these tables that there has been considerable fluctuation in the price of wool in the period covered, but these fluctuations have not been confined to any period as relates to high or low tariffs, but they have occurred under all and during the existence of the different tariff statutes. It also appears that the grade of "common" wool was selling in New York in 1880 at an average price of 25.4 cents per pound, and for the period of thirteen years then ending at 26.8 cents per pound; while the average price for the year 1861 was 32.5 cents per pound, and for the period of fourteen years then ending was 33.3 cents per pound, showing a decrease of 7.1 cents per pound in 1880 as compared with 1861, and a decrease in the latter as compared with the former period of 6.5 cents per pound. In the grade merino there was an advance of 5.4 cents per pound, and in pulled 6.6 cents in the later period. But when it is remembered that by far the largest amount of American wools are classed as common wools in the market it will be seen that upon the whole the decline in the grade common more than off-sets the increase in the other two grades; besides it must not be forgotten that the improvement in quality must have been equal to a very considerable per cent. in price, for there cannot be a very large increase in the weight of fleece unless there is to some extent a corresponding increase in fineness. Thus, it will be seen that while the weight and fineness of the fleece has been very materially increased the price has not been maintained, furnishing another illustration of what may be met at every turn in the history of protective legislation; results at variance with and contradictory of the theories of its advocates, which in many instances come from the inherent defects of the system.

One of the vices of protective legislation is that it creates a class privileged to extort tribute from the consumer, while the very benefit proposed to be conferred by the system is in a large measure defeated and destroyed by the countervailing provisions of which it is composed. Manufactures are so interlocked and interdependent that hardly a single industry can be touched so as to affect the cost of its production without affecting other industries directly or remotely. What is the finished product in one case is but the raw material in other lines of manufacture. If the production of the first form be protected by an import duty upon a like foreign product, so that the home article may be enhanced in price when it goes upon the market, the enhancement follows and affects the cost of each successive new product, however removed or divergent, into which the first article may enter. If an import duty be levied upon pig-iron, from necessity each successive form it may take in other manufactures, and each diverging industry based upon it, must be considered and compensating duties must be laid to protect the new products and divergent industries. Hence the complications in our present tariff laws which spring from various forms of direct and compensating duties, which in iron and the manufactures of iron and steel range from 37 to 93.33 per cent.

But the evil does not stop at the boundary of any given line of manufactures in which iron or steel may constitute the base or material used in the industry or of the finished product into which iron or steel may be wrought. Every water-wheel, every engine, boiler, driving-shaft, and pulley, every nail, screw, and bolt, every carding-machine, spinning-jenny, loom, and knitting-machine, and a thousand other forms in every mill and factory in the land take with them the mildew of this tax, which has gone to swell the cost and expense of starting every new industry or enterprise, and has swollen the cost of conducting every old one. The manufacturers of cotton and woolens, and indeed every other class of manufactures, have felt the effects of these taxes and have claimed compensating duties, and all have had them. The cotton manufacturers have an average protection of 33.8 per cent., the manufacturers of iron and steel an average of 42 per cent., and woolens an average of 68.68 per cent. Yet when they bring their finished product into market with their price-lists, in which, of course, all the items of cost and a liberal profit is included, they find the importer of foreign goods who has paid these enormous duties competing with them in the shadows of their own mills.

Why, Mr. President, last year there was imported into this country of the manufactures of cotton $31,219,329, of the manufactures of wool $31,156,426, and of the manufactures of iron and steel $46,439,749. All of which went into our markets in competition with our domestic manufactures, paying all these enormous duties, which, of course, were added to them as they passed from the importers to the consumers, with profit added. This could only have been done because the American manufacturers were greedy of gain, or else could not sell at a price sufficiently low to shut out the foreign goods.

There is another fact or condition which has grown out of the existence of these tariff laws which should not be overlooked. After a twenty years' trial of the highest protective laws known in our history, the duties under which have ranged from 43 to 48 per cent. upon dutiable goods, we find our own manufactures practically excluded from foreign markets. In the pursuit of this policy of protection to home manufactures we have built a wall to keep out the products of foreign make, and now find that while we have not succeeded in shutting them out we have succeeded in shutting our own manufactures in. This may not be a Chinese wall, for that shut the Tartars out. Ours has failed to keep out what we desired to keep out, but keeps in what we desire should go out. But how could it be otherwise? If it is true that our manufacturers are unable to compete with foreign goods in their own markets of course they cannot compete with foreign goods in the outside markets of the world, their own goods having been necessarily enhanced in the cost of their production by the effects of the protection under which they are made. No, Mr. President, protection is a foe to foreign trade; it impedes commerce by restricting and discouraging the exchange of the products and manufactures of one country with another. Our exports of manufactures are in no kind of proportion to our other exports or to our importance as commercial people.

We have scarcely held the ground we occupied in this respect twenty years ago. In 1860 our exports of cotton goods were $7,957,038 against $9,981,414 in 1880. Of iron and steel manufactures we exported in 1860 $5,928,637 against $14,716,526 in 1880, and of woolens we have no exports worth mentioning. The steady adherence to this policy has transferred our carrying trade from our own hands to other countries. The magnificent merchant fleet which had grown up so rapidly and steadily under a low revenue tariff from 1847 to 1861, numbering in the latter year 2,496,894 registered tons engaged in foreign trade, 2,704,544 tons in the coastwise trade, with a grand total of 5,539,813 tons, having doubled our tonnage in fourteen years, has dwindled to comparatively insignificant proportions. In 1880 the tonnage of American vessels engaged in the foreign trade had declined to 1,314,402 tons and our entire tonnage of all classes to 4,068,034. In 1861, 65 per cent. of our foreign carrying trade was done in American vessels, owned and manned by Americans, while in 1881 but 16 per cent. of this trade was done in American vessels. Not only has our merchant marine shrunk to inconsiderable proportions, our carrying trade been driven out of American into foreign hands, but our shipbuilding industry, of which we were wont to be so proud in the days of low tariffs, has been completely crushed and destroyed, and the thousands of skilled workmen who swarmed in our ship-yards have been driven into other avocations of employment. In 1855, the very noon of low tariffs, the tonnage of shipping built was 588,450 tons, while in 1880 the tonnage built was only 157,409 tons.

It is no answer to these facts to say that since 1855 the change from wooden to iron vessels in the shipping of the world has caused all these results. That fact only emphasizes the other. Formerly we constructed ships from materials from our own forests, unaffected by tariffs. Since the change they must be constructed of materials enhanced in cost by protection from 37 to 93 per cent. The materials in a state of nature from which iron or steel ships are wrought are found broadcast, as it were, over the entire extent of our country, in such vast profusion that ages of activity in working them into forms for ship-building and other uses cannot exhaust them. Yet, sir, not one ton of pig-iron can be extracted from native ore except it be enhanced $7 per ton, or about 37 per cent., in its commercial value by protection. It is this protection that makes it impossible to construct iron and steel ships in America. Take these taxes from the material entering into the construction of ships, and new life will be infused into every ship-yard in the land, and you will again see the American ensign in the ports of all countries and American ships on every sea.

Sir, the cry of "free trade" will not much longer serve to frighten the people or keep them from understanding that it is the shackles of protection which are weighting down our country in the grand rivalry for commercial supremacy which we so auspiciously entered between 1847 and 1861; but there will come, from the millions of voters who hold the destinies of parties in their keeping, a demand that these weights to our advancement be removed.

Grand as has been our progress in the past, and great as have been our achievements, the future has in store for us still greater progress and higher achievements. Possessed of greater resources in iron and coal than any other nation or people on the face of the earth, planted upon a soil of unexampled fertility, yielding a vast and rich abundance of everything necessary for the support of man or beast, having almost a monopoly of cotton growing, from the fiber of which more than half the fabrics which serve to clothe the human family are made, and not inferior to any country in capacity to grow wool, either in quantity or quality, what is there to hold us back in the race for commercial supremacy? Nothing, sir, but the weight and hinderance of protective taxation.

Mr. President, recently the State Department, with commendable zeal, required reports from our foreign consuls respecting the condition of the cotton-goods trade in their respective consulates, with a view of gathering information to be laid before our own manufacturers for their benefit, to enable them to push more systematically their cotton goods into foreign markets. In submitting these reports to the other branch of Congress the honorable Secretary very significantly remarks:

> The cotton-goods trade of the world is a vast subject and requires the best consideration of American manufacturers—united consideration to be followed by united action; but if the same masterly direction of forces be applied to its diversion to the United States as has been applied by the statesmen and manufacturers of Great Britain to the development of their trade, the world offers a field large enough for the consumption of all the manufactures we can produce, even were our entire product of raw material converted into American cloth, instead of being exported in such large quantities as it is at present.

To this statement I most heartily subscribe. But what were the forces applied by the statesmen and manufacturers of Great Britain to retain trade to themselves which if used with the same masterly direction to secure a diversion of the cotton-goods trade to the United States will bring results so much to be desired? The answer is, "free trade."

It is a matter of history, Mr. President, that England, to maintain her supremacy in the commercial affairs of the world, struck down every tax that impeded the exchange of her manufactures with other countries, even to her corn laws, that the employés in her factories and machine-shops might have cheap bread. And we, sir, if we are to win the place in the great trade of the world to which we aspire, and which our position and circumstances entitle us, must strike down every restriction and impediment to a free exchange of the commodities and products of our people with all other countries. This done, and the future opens to us as a people and a nation a career of unexampled prosperity. Our greatest hinderance is protection, and the only condition upon which we may win success is free trade.

Mr. BAYARD. I understood that the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] desired to submit some remarks upon another subject, and to accommodate him I will consent that this bill be laid aside informally for the purpose of permitting him to make his speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair.) Is there objection to laying aside this bill?

Mr. CALL. I move that the pending bill be informally laid aside in order to take up the resolution I submitted on the 20th of February.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It can be done by unanimous consent without a motion.

Mr. HARRIS. I understand the Senator from Florida to ask that the bill be informally laid aside, in order that he may call up his resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida asks that the pending bill be laid aside informally in order that he may call up a resolution on which he desires to submit some remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. ROLLINS. What is the resolution that it is desired to take up?

Mr. CALL. A resolution relative to a congress of all the States of North, Central, and South America.

Mr. ROLLINS. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Florida will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the following resolution, submitted by Mr. CALL on the 20th of February:

> Resolved, That the interests of peace between nations, the obligations and rights which are reciprocal between the United States of America and all the other peoples and governments of the Americas, as well as the commercial interests of the people of the United States, render it proper that the Government of the United States should, in some proper form, adopt measures to settle the controversy between Chili and Peru, and prevent the forcible dismemberment of Peru.
>
> That a congress, to be convened in Washington City and composed of representatives from the peoples and governments of the different states of North and South and Central America, for the purpose of agreeing on some just method of settlement of all questions now existing or that shall hereafter arise between these governments, would be a wise and beneficial measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No objection being made, the resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Florida will yield to me for that purpose, I will ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, so that he may proceed to-morrow with his remarks.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask why we cannot take a vote on the question of the tariff commission? I ask the Senator from Delaware why we cannot vote on that bill?

Mr. BAYARD. Because I understand a number of Senators desire to be heard, the Senator's colleague [Mr. PENDLETON] among others; the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Vermont. I am very desirous of reaching a vote myself.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator from Florida yield to my motion?

Mr. CALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MORRILL. So far as I am concerned, I am ready to vote on the tariff-commission bill without further debate, if others are ready.

Mr. HARRIS. By no means is the Senate ready for that question, I am sure, at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the question is put, if there is no special occasion to go into executive session, I suggest that we take up the Calendar under the Anthony rule.

Mr. MORRILL. Why not allow the Senator from Florida to go on with his speech?

Mr. BAYARD. He does not desire to speak now.

Mr. SHERMAN. Why not go on with the Calendar under the Anthony rule?

Mr. HARRIS. When we have got through with the executive business, if it is desirable that the Senate shall sit longer, we can take up the Calendar of General Orders or the Calendar under the Anthony rule.

Mr. SHERMAN. As a matter of course the business in executive session will not occupy much time.

Mr. BAYARD. I apprehend there is no displacement of the regular order before the Senate except the informal displacement for the purpose of allowing the Senator from Florida to submit his remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The tariff-commission bill was informally laid aside.

Mr. HARRIS. The tariff-commission bill was informally laid aside for the purpose of allowing the Senator from Florida to submit some remarks upon his resolution, and whether they be submitted to-day or to-morrow, the unanimous consent of the Senate is that that bill is laid aside only for that purpose, and it continues the unfinished business.

Mr. ROLLINS. Does not the Senator from Florida desire to proceed to-day?

Mr. HARRIS. He prefers to speak to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 743) granting a pension to Elizabeth Wirt Goldsborough.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4440) to establish a railway bridge across the Mississippi River extending from a point between Wabasha and Read's Landing, in Minnesota, to a point below the mouth of the Chippewa River, in Wisconsin; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three hours and nine minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened; and (at five o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 13, 1882.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of Friday was read and approved.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the appointment of the following gentlemen as the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage authorized by the House: Mr. CAMP, of New York; Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky; Mr. SHERWIN, of Illinois; Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts; Mr. HEPBURN, of Iowa; Mr. SPRINGER, of Illinois; Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina; Mr. MULDROW, of Mississippi, and Mr. STOCKSLAGER, of Indiana.

POLYGAMY.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, asking Congress to suspend action upon Utah affairs until by a committee of investigation the facts are learned, and a tangible foundation is laid for rational proceedings in which no violence will be done to the institutions of that Territory; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that there are several gentlemen who desire to present resolutions on the subject of polygamy.

Mr. LORD. I present a concurrent resolution of the Michigan Legislature, relating to polygamy, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that it be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and the resolution will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I object for this reason, that all those memorials can be introduced under the regular call.

The SPEAKER. The objection is made too late. Some other gentlemen have like resolutions to present.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let them all come in under the regular call of States.

The concurrent resolution presented by Mr. LORD is as follows:

Concurrent resolution.

Whereas the system of polgamy existing in certain sections of our country is degrading to the individuals and demoralizing to the communities adopting it, and is both repugnant to the Christian sentiments of the age and is a national disgrace: Therefore,

Resolved, (the senate concurring,) That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be respectfully requested to use all reasonable and honorable means to procure Congressional legislation which shall promptly and effectually extirpate such system from our midst.

Resolved, That the governor be requested to forward copies of these resolutions to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

MOREAU S. CROSBY,
President of the Senate.
SETH. C. MOFFATT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved March 9, 1882.

DAVID H. JEROME,
Governor.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had adopted a resolution in which the concurrence of the House was desired, requesting the President to bring to the attention of the Government of Nicaragua the necessity of arranging for a convention for the final settlement of all unadjusted claims existing between the Government of the United States and the Government of Nicaragua and claims of citizens of the United States against the Government of Nicaragua.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 861) to provide for a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic;

A bill (S. No. 1361) to provide for additional accommodations for the Department of the Interior; and

A bill (S. No. 1415) to provide for the closing of an alley in square 195 in the city of Washington, District of Columbia.

ADDITIONAL LAND DISTRICTS IN DAKOTA.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask that by unanimous consent the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4698) to create two additional land districts, and to change the boundaries of the Watertown land district, in the Territory of Dakota, and that the same be now brought before the House for consideration and passage.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object.

ENVOY TO SOUTH AMERICAN GOVERNMENTS.

Mr. BELMONT. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of the resolution which I send to the desk.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let it come in under the call of States.

The SPEAKER. This is a resolution of inquiry, which it is desired to have considered at this time. The Clerk will read the resolution, after which objections, if any, will be in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested to inform the House what compensation has been paid or is to be paid by the Department of State to Mr. Trescot as envoy to the South American governments; also out of what appropriation any money has been paid or is to be paid to him as such envoy; also by what law Mr. Trescot has been appointed or employed in the Department of State since or at any time after March 4, 1877, and what compensation since that date has been paid to Mr. Trescot and out of what appropriation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I object.

Mr. BELMONT. Then I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

ELIZABETH WIRT GOLDSBOROUGH.

Mr. JOYCE. I ask unanimous consent to take a bill from the Speaker's table for present consideration.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

Mr. JOYCE. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to wait a moment before insisting on the regular order. The Senate has passed this bill, and the House the other evening passed a similar bill. I desire to take the Senate bill from the Speaker's table and substitute it for the House bill and pass it. It is for the widow of Admiral Goldsborough.

Mr. RANDALL. Is it a pension bill?

Mr. JOYCE. It is.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I do not object.

There being no objection, the bill (S. No. 743) granting a pension to Elizabeth Wirt Goldsborough was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth Wirt Goldsborough, widow of the late Rear-Admiral Goldsborough, and pay her a pension of $50 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOYCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the call for the regular order is renewed.

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw the call for the regular order.

Mr. MURCH. I ask the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

Mr. YOUNG. I desire to submit a resolution for consideration at this time.

Mr. MILLER. I call for the regular order.

MARTHA A. LACHMAN.

Mr. ATHERTON. I desire to be recognized for a moment to make a request to which I think there will be no objection. On Friday last a bill (H. R. No. 4393) for the relief of Martha A. Lachman was reported from the Committee on War Claims with an adverse recommendation, and was ordered to lie on the table. I desire the case shall go to the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it is the right of the gentleman to have the report go on the Calendar, and it is so ordered.

RAILWAY BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. STRAIT. I ask that by unanimous consent the bill (H. R. No. 4440) to establish a railway bridge acrossthe Mississippi River, extending from a point between Wabasha and Read's Landing, in Minnesota, to a point below the mouth of the Chippewa River, in Wisconsin, be taken from the House Calendar for present consideration. I will say that this is reported unanimously by the Committee on Commerce. The material is on the ground for the building of the bridge, and the parties are anxious that it should be proceeded with at once.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. Let it be read, subject to objection.

Mr. WASHBURN. I think I can satisfy the gentleman from Illinois by a brief statement.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the bill be read.

The bill was then read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Chippewa Valley and Superior Railway Company, its successors and assigns, are hereby authorized and empowered to erect, establish, and maintain a railway bridge across the Mississippi River, extending from a point to be by them selected in the State of Minnesota, between Read's Landing and a point in the State of Minnesota opposite the foot of Crat's Island, about two miles below Wabasha, across the said river to a point in the State of Wisconsin to be by them selected, below the mouth of the Chippewa River; that said bridge shall not interfere with the free navigation of said river beyond what is necessary in order to carry into effect the rights and privileges hereby granted; and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river, the cause may be tried before the district court of the United States of any State in which any portion of said obstruction or bridge touches.

SEC. 2. That any bridge built under the provisions of this act may, at the option of the company building the same, be built as a draw-bridge, with a pivot or other form of draw, or with unbroken or continuous spans, or as a pile or ponton bridge, similar to John Lawler's railway ponton bridge at Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin: Provided, That if the said bridge shall be made with unbroken and continuous spans, it shall not be of less elevation in any case than fifty feet above extreme high-water mark, as understood at the point of location, to the bottom chord of the bridge, nor shall the spans of said bridge be less than two hundred and fifty feet in length, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of said river, and the main span shall be over the main channel of the river and not less than three hundred feet in length: And provided also, That if any bridge built under this act shall be constructed as a draw-bridge, the same shall be constructed as a pivot-draw bridge, with a draw over the main channel of the river at an accessible and navigable point, and with spans of not less than one hundred and sixty feet in length in the clear on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw, and the next adjoining spans to the draw shall not be less than two hundred and fifty feet, and said spans shall not be less than thirty feet above low-water mark and not less than ten feet above extreme high-water mark, measuring to the bottom chord of the bridge, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of the river where said bridge may be erected: And provided further, That if said company shall elect to construct a pile or ponton bridge, the Secretary of War may, if he deem it advisable and not inconsistent with the free navigation of said river, authorize said company to construct such bridge as a pile or ponton bridge, subject to the restrictions and requirements relating to the construction thereof contained in an act entitled "An act to legalize and establish a ponton bridge across the Mississippi River at Prairie du Chien," approved June 6, 1874, except that in the bridge herein authorized one draw only shall be required, which shall not be less than three hundred and fifty feet in width in the clear: And provided also, That said draw shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signal for the passage of boats.

SEC. 3. That any bridge constructed under this act and according to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be known and recognized as a post-route, and the same is hereby declared to be a post-route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States, or for passengers or freight passing over said bridge, than the rate per mile paid for their transportation over the railroads and public highways leading to the said bridge; and the United States shall have the right of way for a postal telegraph across said bridge.

SEC. 4. That all railway companies desiring to use said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges in the passage of the same, and in the use of the machinery and fixtures thereof and of all the approaches thereto, under and upon such terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War upon hearing the allegations and proofs of the parties in case they shall not agree.

SEC. 5. That the structure herein authorized shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War for his examination and approval a design and drawings of said bridge, and a map of the location, giving for the space of one mile above and one mile below the proposed location the topography of the banks of the river, the shore-lines at high and low water, the direction and strength of the current at all stages, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, the location of any other bridge or bridges, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until the said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be built; and should any change be made in the plan of said bridge during the process of construction, such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War. And the said structure shall be at all times so kept and managed as to offer reasonable and proper means for the passage of vessels through or under said structure; and to secure the safe passage of vessels at night there shall be displayed on said bridge, from the hour of sunset to that of sunrise, such lights as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War; and the said structure shall be changed, at the cost and expense of the owners thereof, from time to time, as Congress may direct, so as to preserve the free and convenient navigation of said river; and the authority to erect and continue said bridge shall be subject to revocation and modification by law, whenever the public good shall in the judgment of Congress so require, without any expense or charge to the United States.

SEC. 6. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

SEC. 7. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I do not rise for the purpose of objecting at this time to this bill, but I wish to inquire whether it has been submitted to any of the engineer corps upon the Mississippi River.

Mr. STRAIT. It has been; and it is also the unanimous report of the Committee on Commerce of this House.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. WASHBURN. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SINGLETON] that this bill was reported unanimously from the Committee on Commerce. It has every safeguard so far as the protection of the navigation of the river is concerned, and there is no possible reason why it should not pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the fourth section of the bill be again read; it was not heard distinctly.

The SPEAKER. The fourth section will be again read.

The Clerk read the fourth section of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was accordingly taken from the House Calendar, the amendments reported from the Committee on Commerce agreed to, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STRAIT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KASSON. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of States for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions.

Mr. WILSON. I hope the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] will withdraw for a moment his call for the regular order.

Mr. KASSON. For what purpose?

Mr. WILSON. It is for the purpose of considering a concurrent resolution from the Senate which should be passed.

Mr. MILLER. What has become of my call for the regular order, which I made ten minutes ago and have not withdrawn?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood that after business had intervened it was withdrawn, not being renewed.

Mr. MILLER. I again renew it.

The SPEAKER. Then the regular order is the call of States.

Mr. WILSON. If the gentleman across the way will yield for one moment, I simply desire to take from the Speaker's table and pass a concurrent resolution of the Senate, which will not take more than two minutes' time, and it is very important that it should be passed now.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw his call for the regular order?

Mr. MILLER. Yes; and I will not insist upon it again to-day. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the concurrent resolution, after which objections to its consideration will be in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the President be requested to bring to the attention of the Government of Nicaragua the necessity of arranging by a convention for the final settlement of all unadjusted claims existing between the Government of the United States and the Government of Nicaragua, and claims of citizens of the United States against the Government of Nicaragua.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to considering this concurrent resolution at this time?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I object.

Mr. KASSON. I call for the regular order.

Mr. WILSON. Let it go the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I rise to submit a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will present it.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5040) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. McMILLIN. I reserve all points of order on that bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman reporting the bill be kind enough to state on what day he proposes to call it up?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. At an early day.

Mr. RANDALL. We want time to examine the bill before it is called up.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Well, I will say on Thursday or Friday next.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday, the first business in order is the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference to their appropriate committees. Under this call memorials and resolutions of State and Territorial Legislatures and resolutions calling for Executive information are in order for reference.

ESTATE OF JOSEPH L. LEWIS, DECEASED.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Whereas Joseph L. Lewis, deceased, formerly of the city of Hoboken, State of New Jersey, by his will dated 1st October, 1873, and a codicil thereto dated 5th June, 1875, bequeathed certain legacies amounting in all to about forty thousand dollars, and devised and bequeathed the residue of his estate, real and personal, now estimated to be of the value of one million of dollars and upwards, unto his executors therein named, in trust to apply the same according to their discretion in reducing part of the national debt of the United States, they personally superintending such application in order to prevent waste by dishonest officials; and

Whereas the said will and codicil are now the subject of contestation in the courts of the State of New Jersey by Frances Grace and Catharine G. Ward, claiming as the surviving sisters, and John S. Cathcart as the nephew of Joseph L. Lewis, in which the Government of the United States has been, and is, represented by legal counsel; and it is further claimed that said bequest is void, and that the testator had no power to dispose of his said property by his said will in derogation of a prior deed of trust; and

Whereas it was thereupon enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled that the Attorney-General and Secretary of the Treasury are hereby authorized, if they see fit, to adjust or compromise the claims of the United States under the said devise or bequest, upon such terms and conditions as shall be deemed by them fair and reasonable: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be directed to report to this House whether any compromise has been made or recommended in the said case, and what recommendations have been made, and by whom; and, if any compromise has been made or recommended therein, what the terms and conditions of said compromise were, and how the said estate was, or was recommended to be, divided, and what charges or expenses have been or were agreed or recommended to be paid, and to whom and for what services or reasons, and generally all other matters of record in his office in relation to said suit and its compromise.

POLYGAMY.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a communication which I have received upon the Mormon question, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The communication is as follows:

SYRACUSE, February 22, 1882.

DEAR SIR: A large and earnest citizens' meeting was held last Monday evening in Shakspeare Hall, of this city, to give expression to the public sentiment of this community against polygamy in Utah. Resolutions were unanimously passed, which are appended, and, in accordance with a vote of the meeting, are hereby forwarded to you.

Yours, respectfully,

CHAS. ANDREWS,
Chairman of meeting.
NELSON MILLARD,
GEO. N. KENNEDY,
J. G. K. TONAIR,
Committee on Resolutions.

Hon. FRANK HISCOCK.

Whereas a community known as Mormons have long lived in one of the Territories of the United States in the open practice of polygamy; and

Whereas they have resisted the measures instituted by the United States authorities for the suppression of this unlawful and immoral practice, and still maintain an attitude of insubordination and defiance that is utterly incompatible with good order and with the supremacy of the General Government; and

Whereas polygamy is rapidly spreading into parts of our land contiguous to Utah, and is therefore assuming proportions more and more menacing to the welfare of our country and the stability of our institutions; and

Whereas its existence is a foul blot upon the fair fame of our nation: Therefore,

Resolved, That in the sentiment of this meeting it is high time that Congress provide decisive and effective legislation against this gross and growing evil.

Resolved, That we regard with satisfaction the evident sense of the importance of this subject which the Senate of the United States has shown in its recent action.

Resolved, That we will second and support the Representative in Congress from this district in doing all in his power to secure prompt and adequate legislation in the lower House against this national dishonor.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to our Representative in Congress at Washington.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution introduced by me this morning be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The joint resolution is as follows:

Whereas our civilization is distinguished by its respect for the purity of woman and the preservation of the sacred bonds of matrimony; and

Whereas the evils of polygamy cannot be prevented in the States except by an amendment of the Constitution of the United States: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the following article be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of said Legislatures, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of said Constitution:

ARTICLE XVI.

SECTION 1. Neither polygamy nor bigamy shall exist within the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction of the same; and no person convicted of the crime of polygamy or bigamy shall be eligible to any office under the United States or any State, or be qualified as a voter in any State, Territory, or other place within the jurisdiction of the United States.

SEC. 2. Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of this article by all appropriate legislation.

SUFFERERS BY THE MISSISSIPPI OVERFLOW.

Mr. YOUNG. It will be remembered that a short time since the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] introduced a joint resolution to appropriate money for the relief of the people rendered destitute by the devastation of the floods in the Mississippi Valley. I ask to have read a memorial sent to me by the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Cincinnati with a view to hasten action on the part of this House for the relief of these people.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

CINCINNATI, OHIO, March 10.

To the Representatives in Congress from the State of Ohio:

At a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce held to-day the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

Whereas there has been considerable loss of life, attended with great suffering and immense destruction of property, along the entire length of the Mississippi

River below the mouth of the Ohio, occasioned by the unprecedented floods now devastating that territory; and

Whereas common humanity demands that such terrible suffering should be alleviated as far as possible: Therefore,

Resolved by the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Ohio be requested to favor appropriations by the Government immediately, for the purpose of supplying the inhabitants of the inundated territory with such rations as may be necessary to supply immediate needs; the same to be distributed under the directions of the Secretary of War.

Resolved, That a copy of this preamble and resolutions be transmitted to each Senator and Representative in Congress from this State.

HENRY C. URNER, President.
JOHN H. LONG, Secretary.

Mr. YOUNG. If it is in order I would respectfully request this House to take up the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Mississippi and act upon it at this time. If it is to be of any service to these people it should be acted on at once.

Mr. CHALMERS. If the gentleman will allow me a moment, I would suggest to him to ask consent that the Committee on Military Affairs, to which, I believe, the joint resolution was referred, be discharged from its further consideration and that it be at once passed.

Mr. YOUNG. I do not know to what committee the joint resolution was referred. I presume it would go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CHALMERS. It was introduced this morning by my colleague, [Mr. HOOKER.]

The SPEAKER. That joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HISCOCK. A resolution was referred the other day to the Committee on Appropriations, and the one introduced this morning by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] was also referred to that committee. We have the subject under consideration, and are in communication with the War Department investigating the needs of these people who are suffering in consequence of the overflow.

Mr. YOUNG. I am glad to hear the explanation of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK,] and hope that he will push the matter in his committee.

Mr. DUNN. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York a question.

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. DUNN. It is whether the Secretary of War has made any report to the committee on the subject since last Saturday?

Mr. HISCOCK. He has not made any formal report, but has stated to several gentlemen that he has ample funds to supply those in need to as late a period as the 20th of this month and probably the 1st of April.

Mr. DUNN. That is the report which I have seen. But since then I have seen a newspaper report from an Army officer sent there to investigate the matter to the effect that the number of sufferers is much greater than heretofore reported.

Mr. HISCOCK. The Secretary of War exhibited to me informally one of the reports to which the gentleman refers, and which reports the facts as I have stated, that there were sufficient supplies to last probably through this month.

OWNERS OF STEAMER PLANTER.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5195) for the relief of H. W. Phillips, Clark Hanes, and —— Beam; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

LIGHT-HOUSE AT GREAT SHOALS—SURVEY OF WICOMICO RIVER.

Mr. COVINGTON. I ask unanimous consent that the two resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Maryland which I presented to-day may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The joint resolutions are as follows:

Joint resolution requesting the General Government to erect a light-house on Great Shoals, in Dorchester County.

Resolved by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the Senators and Representatives of this State in the Congress of the United States be, and they are hereby, requested to urge the appropriation of a sum of money from the national Treasury sufficient to erect a light-house on the Great Shoals, in Dorchester County, Maryland, at or near a point nearly opposite the place now marked by the "Shark Fin" buoy.

I hereby certify that the above is a true copy of a joint resolution passed by the General Assembly of Maryland at the session of 1882.

J. M. MILLER,
Secretary Senate of Maryland.

Joint resolution in relation to a survey by the General Government of the Wicomico River, of this State.

Resolved by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the Senators and Representatives of this State in the Congress of the United States be, and they are hereby, requested to introduce and press the passage of a resolution through their bodies requiring the War Department to cause a survey of the Wicomico River, in this State, from its mouth to the town of Salisbury, to be made with a view to the improvement of navigation of said river, and an estimate of the cost of such improvement.

I hereby certify that the above is a true copy of a joint resolution passed by the General Assembly of Maryland at the session of 1882.

J. M. MILLER, Secretary Senate.

LIGHT-HOUSE AT BOOTH BAY HARBOR, MAINE.

Mr. CANDLER, from the Committee on Commerce, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 607, a bill (H. R. No. 5196) to provide for the construction of a light-house on Ram Island, Booth Bay Harbor, on the coast of Maine; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PETER CAMPBELL.

Mr. MURCH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5197) granting a pension to Peter Campbell; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF BOARD OF MEDICAL EXPERTS.

Mr. HERNDON, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 168) to print the report of the board of medical experts, and appropriating money therefor; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

TREASURY RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES, 1875.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Ways and Means a resolution for the printing of the statement of receipts and expenditures of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875. Gentlemen, by looking at last Tuesday's RECORD, will see that the Treasury Department has called the attention of the House to the neglect to print this valuable paper.

There being no objection, the following resolution, reported by Mr. KELLEY from the Committee on Ways and Means, was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the statement of receipts and expenditures of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, which was transmitted to Congress in pursuance of law by the Secretary of the Treasury on May 25, 1878, and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, be printed in the usual form.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Commerce with a favorable recommendation Senate bill No. 308.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I call for the regular order, which is, I understand, the call of committees for reports, so that the report of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] can come in under that call.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States was communicated to the House, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed joint resolution (H. R. No. 80) in behalf of the American Company of Revisers of the New Testament for return and remission of duties.

FUNERAL EXPENSES OF A HOUSE EMPLOYÉ.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives of the United States, to the Sergeant-at-Arms thereof, the sum of $300, or so much as may be necessary thereof, to pay the funeral and other expenses contracted by the sickness and death of William F. C. Gregory, jr., late employé of the folding-room of this House; and there shall also be paid out of the contingent fund of this House three months' pay from September, 1881, to his mother, Mrs. W. F. C. Gregory. Both sums appropriated by this resolution shall be subject to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. MARTIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LAND IN PHILADELPHIA FOR PUBLIC PURPOSES.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, reported, as a substitute for House bills Nos. 2745 and 2773, a bill (H. R. No. 5198) for the purchase or condemnation of land in the city of Philadelphia for public purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRANCH MINT AT SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI.

Mr. BLAND, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 2489, a bill (H. R. No. 5199) to establish a branch mint of the United States at Saint Louis, Missouri; which was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BLAND. This bill makes no appropriation of money.

The SPEAKER. It would be difficult to establish a mint without an appropriation.

Mr. BLAND. There is no appropriation in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the bill, unless referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, might be subject to a point of order when reached.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

STEAM-VESSELS ON OHIO RIVER.

Mr. WARD, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 2355) in relation to vessels operated by steam navigating the Ohio River; which was placed on the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

HARBOR OF NEW YORK.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 1132) in relation to the port and harbor of New York and the waters near the same; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER.

Mr. WASHBURN, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back the bill (S. No. 308) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the most accessible point within five miles above the city of Saint Charles, Missouri; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ASSAY OFFICE AT DEADWOOD.

Mr. ROSECRANS, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 1887) to establish an assay office at Deadwood, in the Territory of Dakota; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HENRY O. WAGGONER.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 4246) to pay the creditors of the late Henry O. Waggoner, late consular clerk at Lyons, France; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SCHOOL LANDS, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. No. 77) to donate certain military lands and possessions in the county of Inyo, State of California, for school purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CAMP INDEPENDENCE, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. SPOONER also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 78) for the relief of certain citizens of the United States and occupants of lands within one mile of the military post of Camp Independence, Inyo County, California, with the recommendation that it be laid on the table, as it is covered by the preceding report.

The bill was laid on the table.

POSTMASTERS' SALARIES.

Mr. MOREY, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 853, a bill (H. R. No. 5200) authorizing and directing the Postmaster-General to readjust the salaries of certain postmasters in accordance with the provision of section 8 of the act of June 12, 1866; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

INDIAN RESERVATIONS TIMBER.

Mr. BLANCHARD, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5201) authorizing the cutting and sale of dead and fallen timber upon Indian reservations under the direction of the Department of the Interior; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

P. B. PERRY, SR.

Mr. STEELE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back the bill (S. No. 228) granting a pension to P. B. Perry, sr.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DICEY BOBBITT.

Mr. STEELE also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 2481) for the relief of Dicey Bobbitt; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ANDREW J. HOOPER.

Mr. FULKERSON, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 1638) to restore the name of Andrew J. Hooper to the pension-roll; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PERRY P. WILSON.

Mr. MASON, from the Committee on Claims, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 91) for the relief of Perry P. Wilson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

W. W. WELSH.

Mr. HOUK, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back the petition of W. W. Welsh, asking compensation for services alleged to have been rendered as local mail agent at Meridian, Mississippi, in 1872; and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

MAUMEE LIGHT-HOUSE.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 4068) making an appropriation for the erection of a light and range beacons at the turn of the channel in Maumee Bay, in the State of Ohio; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JAMES ROGERS.

Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5202) granting a pension to James Rogers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

SPEAKER'S TABLE.

Mr. HASKELL. I now move, Mr. Speaker, the House proceed to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table for the purpose of reaching and taking up the Senate polygamy bill.

The motion was agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF CONTAGIOUS AND INFECTIOUS DISEASES.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Public Health, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the President of the National Board of Health, calling attention to the necessity for additional legislation to prevent the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States from foreign countries. The subject is commended to the careful consideration of Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 13, 1882.

CLAIM OF MRS. VAN ZANDT.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a House resolution of the 14th ultimo, the reports of the Second Comptroller in the claim of Mrs. Van Zandt; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

POLYGAMY, ETC.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that on the 8th of March the House was considering business on the Speaker's table. When Senate bill No. 353, to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes, was reached, a point of order was made against it by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CONVERSE,] which point of order is still pending.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to a decision embracing the same point which I understand to be embraced in this. I find it in volume 3 of the RECORD of 1873–'74, page 1961, and I will ask the Clerk to read the statements made by Mr. McKee, Mr. GEORGE F. HOAR, and others in relation to the subject, and the rulings of Speaker Blaine upon the same point.

I desire also in that connection to call the attention of the Speaker to the language of the present rule as compared with that in force at the time the decision to which I refer was made by Speaker Blaine, to show the fact that the language of the present rule is even broader than that upon which the decision was based.

I desire also to call attention to the fact that the bill now before the House on the Speaker's table provides for the appointment of five commissioners, who are to be appointed by the President of the United States, with the advice and consent of the Senate. Their salary is fixed in the bill at $3,000 each per annum. The bill provides what duties they are to perform. They are to register the voters in that Territory, to conduct the election there, to count the votes, and to give certificates of election, which certificates are to be final. It was suggested by some one the other day, when this subject was up, that this bill did not provide for the payment of these commissioners out of the Treasury of the United States, but it was intimated that the salaries were to be left to be paid out of the treasuries of the Territories. I hardly think, sir, that such a position will be seriously maintained, or such a claim seriously advocated, for the reason that the Government of the United States certainly cannot appoint officers and fix their salaries unless the Government itself expects to pay the salaries.

This commission is created and its duties are prescribed by a law of Congress; the salaries are fixed by a law of Congress, and of course the Government has no power to authorize or require their payment out of the treasury of the Territory.

The Speaker will notice also, in connection with the case I ask to have read from the Clerk's desk, that Speaker Blaine held that the bill was subject to the point of order, wherever an amendment would be germane to the bill, fixing the salary of the appointee of the United States.

I now ask the Clerk to read from the RECORD the rulings and arguments to which I have referred.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXECUTION OF LAWS IN UTAH.

Mr. MCKEE, from the Committee on the Territories, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 2204) concerning the execution of laws in the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, but was interrupted by Mr. G. F. HOAR who said: I desire to make a point of order on this bill. The bill is very long, and perhaps it may save time to make the point now, though I will reserve it until the close of the reading, if the Chair deems that course best.

The SPEAKER. What point does the gentleman make.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. The rule adopted by the House at the present session provides that—

"Bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriations to be made, shall be first discussed in Committee of the Whole."

Now, this bill provides for a large number of new offices. For instance, in the first section it provides for the appointment of deputy marshals, and in the third section for the appointment of assistant district attorneys. It prescribes the duties of these new officers, and that "the same fees and emoluments as the district attorney would be entitled to for the same service shall be allowed for the services of assistant district attorneys." Then the twenty-third section provides for the appointment of other new officers of the United States, to wit, judges and clerks of election. All these provisions peremptorily require an appropriation of money from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MCKEE. The bill makes no appropriation of money and requires no new appropriation. A deputy marshal or an assistant district attorney will draw but the same pay which the marshal or the district attorney would have drawn. The bill creates no new office, but merely assistants; and it makes no appropriation of money.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. There may be ten of these assistant district attorneys trying different causes at different times; and they are all to be paid by fees from the Treasury of the United States; and an appropriation of money must be made to provide for their compensation. It must be manifest that the creation of a dozen new offices must impose additional expense upon the United States. Under this bill the Government may be paying from the Treasury ten men when without the bill it would be paying but one man.

Mr. MCKEE. To speak more correctly, the United States will be paying for so many prosecutions—no more, no less. If an assistant district attorney, instead of the district attorney himself, attends to a prosecution, the assistant receives the pay instead of the district attorney. The bill requires no new appropriation.

The SPEAKER. Does the bill authorize the appointment of any officer not already authorized by the Government of the United States?

Mr. KCKEE. It requires the appointment of assistant attorneys.

The SPEAKER. Not now authorized by law?

Mr. POTTER. And assistant marshals.

The SPEAKER. The point which the Chair wants to get at is this: Does the bill create any additional office or officers for which the United States will be responsible and which do not now exist by law?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Eight or ten.

Mr. MCKEE. I say they are not new offices.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts, in making his point of order, directed attention to the twenty-third section, among others. As that section is brief, the Chair will ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

"SEC. 23. That at any general or special election held in the Territory of Utah, the election precincts shall be established and designated at least thirty days before the election. The governor, United States attorney, and secretary of the Territory shall have power to appoint one judge and one clerk of election for each election precinct in the Territory so established, and to establish such additional precincts as may be necessary to secure to the people a free and fair election, and to appoint the judges and clerks of election at such additional precincts."

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Let me make one suggestion. Will it be germane for me to move a provision specifically establishing the salary of these officers?

The SPEAKER. The Chair was coming to that. He will direct the Clerk to read the first section of the bill.

Mr. MCKEE. Right here I should like to say these are Territorial officers, and that the Government does not pay them at all.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read a portion of the first section of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

"That the United States marshal of Utah Territory may appoint deputies in each of the judicial districts of said Territory; said deputies shall be authorized to enter upon the discharge of their duties upon the approval of such appointments by the judge of the district court of the district in which each is appointed."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will also read a part of the third section of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That the United States district attorney of said Territory may also appoint assistants in each of the judicial districts of said Territory: Provided, That before any such assistant shall enter upon the discharge of his duties, his appointment shall be approved by the presiding judge of the district court of the district for which such appointment is made; and said assistant shall take and subscribe to the same oath prescribed by law to be taken by the district attorney, and said appointment, approval, and oath shall be entered upon the records of said courts."

The SPEAKER. The Chair directs particular attention to the following paragraph:

The Clerk read as follows:

"The same fees and emoluments as the district attorney would be entitled to for the same service shall be allowed for the services of assistant district attorneys."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi, who reports the bill from the Committee on the Territories, will observe this does actually create a large number of new offices under the authority of the United States; and although it does not designate any special salary to be paid to them except in the case just read, yet it would be perfectly germane to move as an amendment to the bill an appropriation of a sum of money specifically fixing their salaries. The rule which the House is now acting under, adopted at the beginning of this session, was intended to entirely do away with any indirect appropriation from the Treasury; and the Chair thinks this does bind and require the United States to make an appropriation of money should it become a law. The Chair further thinks an amendment to this bill, should it be considered in the House, fixing a specific salary for the officers authorized in this bill, would be a germane amendment which he could not rule out.

Mr. MCKEE. I submit to the Speaker that when a proposition is made to give salaries to these officers, then, and not till then, does this question of order arise.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi contemplate that all the officers provided for in this bill shall serve without salary?

Mr. MCKEE. Only with such salary as is now allowed by law; that, and not one dollar more.

The SPEAKER. But these offices do not now exist.

Mr. MCKEE. An assistant attorney can hardly be considered an officer at all, because at all times any United States attorney may get any other attorney to assist him in the discharge of his duties.

The SPEAKER. But how will it be in regard to the different judges of election precincts throughout the Territory?

Mr. MCKEE. They would come in under the Territorial law. There are such judges of election precincts in existence in that Territory now.

The SPEAKER. And they are authorized to be appointed by the United States for this purpose.

Mr. MCKEE. There is a provision as to who shall appoint them, and that one at least shall be appointed by the governor instead of allowing the Territorial Legislature to appoint them all. It merely provides for the appointment of one by the governor, and does not change the source of their pay in any respect whatever. It does not make any change in the least in that respect, but merely provides the governor shall appoint in certain cases.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Committee on Appropriations now reports appropriations to pay for prosecutions by the United States district attorneys in the Territories. Such appropriations come regularly in the appropriation bill, and in case any new offices are provided by this bill, we would have, of course, to provide for an appropriation to pay for their services.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot help thinking this bill will require for its enforcement a considerable appropriation of money from the United States Treasury. Does the gentleman himself state that it would not require any appropriation?

Mr. MCKEE. I certainly do; and I also state that I would oppose any amendment offered to the bill in the House which would propose any appropriation, as I would oppose any appropriation bill to pay these officers any further salary than that which they now get. They do not get more money than the district attorney would get for discharging these duties without the assistance of these persons.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Mississippi will pardon me for a single observation. Now all the fees go to the district attorney up to a certain point. When he gets his salary the remainder is covered into the Treasury of the United States. The fees may amount to $100,000, but he only gets a certain amount. If he has so many assistants authorized by law, who are to receive pay under this bill, then they are to be paid out of the fees and emoluments, and to that extent the money is taken out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. POTTER. They would have to be paid by appropriation either in this or some other bill.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I wish to make a suggestion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to hear suggestions, because on a point of this kind he wishes to decide after the fullest deliberation.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I suggest that that bill is so framed that an amendment could properly be added to it which would pay these additional officers, even if the bill should not provide that.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair has already suggested.

Mr. MCKEE. Could not the same amendments be put into other bills?

The SPEAKER. They would not be germane. Any bill that can be considered in the House, as against the point that it should go to the Committee of the Whole, cannot have a germane amendment made to it appropriating money. The point is whether, if this bill is allowed to be considered in the House, an amendment affixing different salaries to the offices from what the committee proposes is not germane. The Chair does not wish to put himself in this attitude, that a bill shall be considered in the House, as against the point that it should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole, and then exclude an amendment which would be obviously a germane amendment to the bill. Suppose for one moment—and the Chair invites the attention of the chairman of the committee to this—suppose for one moment that, where a bill reports certain fees and emoluments to be allowed to the assistant attorney, some gentleman proposes double those fees and emoluments, on what ground can the Chair rule that out as an amendment not germane?

Mr. MCKEE. Then I contend that in all cases we shall have a strict construction of this rule.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair has been trying to do for the past three months—to give a very strict construction to the rule. And the Chair begs the attention of the House to this point, that any bill which may be legitimately considered in the House, as against the point that it shall go to the Committee of the Whole, cannot have a germane amendment appropriating money or property, and any amendment of that nature would therefore be ruled out at once. And that is one of the touch-stones whereby to test the rule, that if a bill, even against the apparent wording of the text, is open to a germane amendment, making an appropriation, the bill becomes obnoxious to the point of order.

Mr. MCKEE. Then we can hardly introduce any bill that touches in any way upon any office but it may be ruled that it shall go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The rule simply is that the Committee of the Whole shall first discuss the bill. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MCKEE] will observe that this is merely as to the process—the parliamentary process—not affecting the merits of the bill at all. The Chair has no right to rule, and does not desire to rule in any way at all touching the provisions of a bill. He merely rules as to the parliamentary process to which it shall be subjected. And the Chair thinks, after having looked at the matter carefully, that this bill is unquestionably liable to the point of order, and must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CONVERSE. I have no further suggestion to make. There are other gentlemen here who desire I think to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. HASKELL. If the gentleman from Ohio has concluded I would like to say a word.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] has yielded the floor.

Mr. HASKELL. To the doctrine set forth in what has been read from the RECORD as applicable to amendments pending to any bill providing for appropriations I heartily agree. But the matter that has been cited to the House is entirely foreign to the scope and intent of this bill and not applicable to it in any way.

Let us examine this point of order from the stand-point of the rule and determine what phrase of the rule is supposed to be violated by the point raised by the gentleman from Ohio:

All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people—

Says the first clause of this paragraph of Rule XXIII. That we brush aside without further consideration, merely asserting that that applies to revenue bills and other bills coming from the Ways and Means Committee levying a tax for the support of the Government. That proposition is not called in question by this bill at all. Again:

All proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property.

There is not a line in this bill that calls for an appropriation or has a color even of appropriating money. That phrase of the rule cannot be applicable. Again:

Or requiring such appropriations to be made.

I apprehend that it is upon this part of the rule which provides that any bill requiring appropriations to be made from the public Treasury shall be first considered in Committee of the Whole that the point of order of the gentleman from Ohio is based.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have carefully examined this law, or this bill that is sought to be made a law; and nowhere from beginning to end is there an appropriation; nowhere from beginning to end is there a word touching the liability of the Government for the payment of these officers. What is Congress about to do in enacting this law? It is about to assert itself, as it has the right to do, as the Legislature of the Territory of Utah. It proposes by this bill to go into the Territory of Utah (no place else) and to make in Utah (no place else) a system of election laws—that is all it proposes—to create there an election system, a local election system, an election system so broad and comprehensive and so local that you can elect road-overseers under it, and under it you can elect every local municipal officer in the Territory of Utah. There is not an idea of government about it. There is not a Federal idea about it. It is a local election law for the Territory of Utah. It repeals a portion of the existing laws of Utah and injects into the statute that remains these local provisions. And in the statute that remains unrepealed, and to which I desire to call the attention of the Speaker, is this provision:

All officers acting in elections—

This is a part of the law of Utah, enacted by the Legislature of Utah, not repealed by the proceedings of this body—

All officers acting in elections in Utah shall be allowed a reasonable compensation.

Now, then, there is the provision distinct and clear for the payment by the Legislature of Utah of every election officer. This bill simply provides five election officers there, by whose authority the other election officers shall be appointed; and over them and including them all, including our appointees, is this provision already in existence, unrepealed, providing for their being paid by the Territory of Utah.

Now, the case quoted, Mr. Speaker, is for officers of the Territory appointed on behalf of the General Government, officers that are appointed in all the Territories, Federal officers, whose tenure of office is subject to the will of the President, whose duty it is to execute law, Federal law, in Utah. But this bill does not provide any such set of officers. This bill, unlike the provisions which send there a marshal or a governor or a secretary, provides for the execution of the local law of the Territory. If these five men were duly appointed United States officers, if they held their office subject to the will of the President, if they were there merely to execute the general Federal law of all the Territories and all the United States, there would be no other place for them to go except to the Treasury of the United States to get their money.

But there is here this provision making it utterly impossible to contemplate these men as Federal officers. What is it? It is the provision that the members of the board so appointed by the President shall each receive a salary at the rate of $3,000 per annum, and shall continue in office—how long?

Shall continue in office until the Legislative Assembly of said Territory shall make provision for filling said offices.

By processes directed by the law their tenure of office is dependent upon the will of the Legislative Assembly of Utah Territory. They have reached no further than that, and by the very nature of the duties which they have to perform in that Territory, it will be absolutely impossible to appoint anybody but citizens of the Territory to fill the offices.

Now, then, Mr. Speaker, we have before us—what? Acting as the Legislature of that Territory of Utah, we have a bill directing the payment of officers subject to the will of the Territorial Legislature, directing the appointment of officers who enter into only the local municipal affairs, even, of that Territory, men that are appointed to discharge only the duties that might rightly devolve upon them by enactment of the Territorial Legislature; nothing else. They are not Federal officers in any sense of the term. Hereafter, Mr. Speaker, it may become necessary to make a further law, granting that there is doubt about this, as suggested by my friend from Ohio, that there is doubt as to whether they are Federal officers or not; and I admit my friend from Ohio has a right to express his doubt, and believe they are Federal officers, to be paid out of the Treasury as he thinks. But I assert, on the other hand, that the machinery for the payment is provided for by law; that they are Territorial officers, and that there is no way of settling the controversy except by a subsequent act of Congress which shall substantially settle whether they shall be paid by the people of the Territory or out of the Treasury of the United States.

Against that act of Congress, that subsequent act of Congress, that prospective act of Congress, defining the liability of the Government of the United States or of the Territory of Utah, whichever is held liable for the payment of these officers, a point of order might lie. But a point of order cannot lie against this bill, and a point of order cannot lie against two bills which, by the admission of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CONVERSE,] are made absolutely necessary before an appropriation can follow.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HASKELL. Certainly.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to ask the gentleman who is to pay the five commissioners to be appointed by the President until the Legislative Assembly of Utah shall make provision for filling the office?

Mr. HASKELL. The Legislature of Utah has made provision for their pay.

Mr. SPRINGER. The Legislative Assembly of Utah is abolished by this bill.

Mr. HASKELL. Then there is no provision for their payment, and it is a matter to be determined hereafter, it may be.

Mr. SPRINGER. Would not these officers created by this bill to receive a salary at the rate of $3,000 per annum, and to continue in office for a certain time here mentioned, be entitled to that salary from the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. HASKELL. No, sir; that is just the point I make.

Mr. SPRINGER. If we do not make an appropriation to pay them would not they be entitled to sue in the Court of Claims and recover the amount?

Mr. HASKELL. Not until the United States by law has adopted them as Federal officers.

Mr. SPRINGER. Are they not adopted as public officers by the creation of their offices by act of Congress?

Mr. HASKELL. No.

Mr. SPRINGER. The act of Congress alone gives them any legal existence.

Mr. HASKELL. Ah!

Mr. SPRINGER. And the President of the United States appoints them, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Now I wish to ask the gentleman whether these officers have any other legal status than that which is derived from the law of Congress and from their appointment by the President of the United States; and whether there is any other body-politic in existence that can be required to pay them for their services?

Mr. HASKELL. Certainly. The gentleman seems to be somewhat confused in his mind as to what the power of Congress in this bill really is and what the bill really does.

So far as this bill goes Congress is not legislating for the people of the United States; Congress is not making a general law for the people of the United States; Congress is not providing for the appointment of general officers, such as are appointed in all the Territories of the United States. Congress by this bill is taking upon itself its constitutional power to be the Legislature of Utah. That is what it is doing in this bill.

Congress by this bill is within the Territory of Utah reaching down even to municipal corporations and making a law for their action; acting as its own local authority in that Territory, which it has the right to do. Congress has the power to designate any officer in that Territory, and it also has the power to provide that that officer shall be paid out of the funds of the Territory.

I desire to call the attention of the Speaker to the law of Congress in regard to the penitentiary in Utah. Congress provided for a penitentiary in Utah, and also provided for officers of that penitentiary. But it left the entire expense of maintaining that penitentiary to the citizens of Utah. The officers of that penitentiary are Federal officers, every one of them created by Federal law, and the penitentiary is authorized by Federal law. But the whole expense of maintaining that penitentiary was devolved by Congress upon the citizens of that Territory.

This bill provides a local election law for Utah. By the laws of that Territory, by their own Territorial law, not repealed by this bill, it is provided that all officers of election in that Territory shall receive a reasonable compensation. Now, we have a right to make these officers, to create them. They will be officers acting in the elections of Utah, and their pay is already provided for by the Territorial law.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] and the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. HASKELL,] who seem to assume that by the terms of this bill the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah is abolished. The Chair would be greatly obliged to either of those gentlemen who would call its attention to that portion of the bill which abolishes the Legislative Assembly of Utah.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will answer that question. The bill does not in terms abolish the Legislative Assembly of Utah. The Legislative Assembly exists under other laws of Congress. But this bill does provide that there shall be no other Legislative Assembly in that Territory until elected by the terms of this bill. And this bill provides the means by which the members of that Legislative Assembly can be elected. The registration officers now in that Territory are abolished by this bill, and all election offices now in that Territory are declared vacant. The Legislature of Utah has now adjourned, and will not be reassembled until a new Legislature is elected. Under the terms of this bill that new Legislature is to be elected according to the provisions of this bill, and election officers are to be appointed hereafter under the returning board provided by this bill. And no person can be elected to any office in that Territory except under the provisions of this bill and under the election officers provided for in this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asked what provision of the bill abolished the Territorial Legislature of Utah?

Mr. SPRINGER. The election officers in Utah will derive their existence from the board of commissioners to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. I hold that those officers are Federal officers. They are created by law of Congress under the Constitution of the United States. They are to be appointed by the President, who has authority to appoint officers of the United States, and who has authority to appoint no other kind of officers. They will be entitled to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States; they will not be paid at any other place, for I do not understand that we are providing an expenditure to be paid out of an appropriation made by the Legislature of Utah. If that Legislature shall refuse to make an appropriation, even assuming that there is an obligation on them to provide for the payment of these officers, who will pay them? They must be paid by some one. I hold that they can sue for their salary in the Court of Claims and recover it whether Congress makes an appropriation to pay them or not.

Mr. CAMP obtained the floor.

The SPEAKER. Before the gentleman from New York [Mr. CAMP] proceeds, the Chair will state that it was under the impression that the gentleman from Illinois stated the Legislative Assembly would be abolished by the bill. On the contrary, the Chair supposes that the bill recognizes the continuing existence of the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. SPRINGER. The fact is, however, that the Legislature of Utah has adjourned without day; and it will not be assembled again until convened under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to discuss this point of order, but to call attention to a decision made by the Speaker in the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress. A bill was then pending which provided that the Secretary of the Treasury should issue coin certificates in denominations of $50 and multiples thereof up to $10,000; that these coin certificates should be sent to the various mints throughout the United States—New York, San Francisco, Philadelphia, and elsewhere—and that the mint officers should use those certificates for the purpose of purchasing bullion. When that bill was under consideration the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] raised the point that it should be first considered in Committee of the Whole, because it required an appropriation of money. It will be observed that the Secretary of the Treasury, in order to carry out the provisions of that bill, must have an appropriation of money made in some form or other to pay the expense of engraving and printing these certificates. It was urged, therefore, that the bill required an appropriation. In the discussion of that point General Banks, then a member of the House, took the adverse position, and said:

> Sir, this bill is just like a thousand other bills that are passed by the House of Representatives. They declare a fact. They declare a purpose. And if afterward that declaration requires an appropriation of money, that appropriation must be made in terms and in figures. There must be such a specification of an appropriation, of the application of money, as will justify some officer of the Government in taking that money out of the Treasury. And no man can point here to any such use of words or collocation of words as this.

It will be observed by turning to the rules in force at that time that Rules 110 and 112 were the same in substance, if not in phraseology, as subdivision 3 of Rule XXIII, under which the House is now acting. The Speaker in rendering his decision in that case said—and I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the phraseology of the decision:

> The Chair is convinced that there is a growing evil in the fact that we do not consider bills of importance in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to the extent that was formerly done. But that is a matter for the House, and not for the Chair. The Chair has carefully examined this bill. He is unable to regard it as a bill in any sense making appropriations of money or property, or in any sense requiring such appropriations to be made. He certainly cannot see in what possible sense it can be regarded as a proposition for "a tax or charge upon the people," or how it can possibly come under the one hundred and eleventh rule, which simply provides that no increase of the sum or quantum of tax or duty voted by Committee of the Whole House shall be made in the House without being first discussed and voted on in the Committee of the Whole House. The mere fact that this bill may involve expense does not bring it within the rule. Gentlemen will notice that the word used in the rule is "requiring," not "involving." And the mere fact that the bill may in some incidental or remote way involve expense, or that in some form or other to carry out its provisions expense may be incurred and even necessarily incurred by additional legislation, cannot bring it within the rule. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Now, that bill necessarily required, in order to carry it into effect, further legislation appropriating money to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to print the coin certificates, to meet the expense of the transfer of bullion, &c. But the Chair held that so long as the bill itself did not appropriate any money, did not authorize any officer of the Government to draw any money out of the Treasury, but additional legislation must be had before money for the purpose could be expended, the bill was not obnoxious to the rule, and was not required to be first considered in Committee of the Whole. An appeal was taken from that decision; and the ruling of the Speaker was ratified by the House on a vote of 158 to 24.

Now, if that was a good ruling then—and the rules at that time were substantially the same upon this point as they now are—the ruling should be the same with reference to this bill, which does not require the appropriation of one cent of money. Although it creates five officers, if you please, and fixes their salaries, not a dollar can be drawn from the Treasury under this bill until an appropriation is made for the purpose. The constitutional provision stands in the way of any such expenditure, for it provides that "no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law." Here is no appropriation of money. A bill appropriating money, not a bill which may render necessary further legislation appropriating money, would be obnoxious to the point of order and would have to be first considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CARLISLE. If the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CAMP] had not spoken so earnestly in opposition to this point of order, I should have thought there was very little room for difference of opinion in regard to it.

It is not necessary for me to read again the rule to which the attention of the Chair has been called and with which the Chair is already familiar. Nor is it necessary for me to read again the provision of the ninth section of the pending bill, which provides for the appointment by the President and the confirmation by the Senate of a board of five men to execute this law—officers who are to receive a salary of $3,000 each per annum, $15,000 per annum in the aggregate. Nor is it necessary for me to enter into any nice discrimination as to the character of these officers—whether they are local Territorial officers or officers of the United States. The simple question here presented is whether or not this bill in its present form requires an appropriation of money to execute it; and in this respect the gentleman from New York must allow me to say that it is quite different from the bill to which he has called the attention of the House. That was a bill which authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to do certain things, in the doing of which certain expenses would necessarily be incurred, but if it made no appropriation to defray those expenses we have a statute which provides that no head of a Department shall enter into contracts which will involve a liability upon the part of the Government in excess of actual appropriations previously made and without previous authority of law.

So that in the case to which the gentleman alludes no claim could possibly be created against the Government of the United States by any act which the Secretary of the Treasury might have performed under it. But it is very different here. By the very terms of the act now under consideration officers are created, public officers are provided to execute a Federal law in the Territory of Utah, and this very statute is to be executed, if it be executed at all, by these officers provided for in the ninth section of this bill. And the only limitation upon the duration of their term of office is in that section, which provides that they shall continue to discharge the duties of this board until their successors shall be provided by the Territorial Legislature. No requirement being inserted in the bill that the Legislature shall at any time whatever provide for their successors, the consequence is that in case the Territorial Legislature of Utah shall fail, as in all human probability it will, to provide any successors for this board, its members will remain in office until further legislation by the Congress of the United States, having of course a valid legal claim against the Government for the sum of $3,000 a year each.

And here is where it differs widely from the bill alluded to by the gentleman. This bill gives to these officers at once a valid legal claim against the Government, without any further action on the part of Congress, or upon the part of the head of a Department or of the Legislature of the Territory of Utah.

The Supreme Court and the Court of Claims have decided that where a statute of the United States fixes the compensation of a public officer, and Congress fails to appropriate a sufficient amount of money to pay that sum, without repealing the law creating the office, or providing that the salary itself shall be diminished, the officer has a claim against the Government which he can enforce in a court of justice.

Why, sir, a short time since the court decided that the Government of the United States was liable for the sum of $15,000 per annum for rent of the building belonging to the Freedman's Bank, under a contract which had been made, although Congress had failed to pass the appropriation necessary to pay it.

The bill, therefore, creates public officers, whether they be officers of the United States or officers of the Territory, to execute this particular law of Congress; and unlike the bill in relation to the penitentiary, alluded to by the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. HASKELL,] it fails to provide that the Legislature shall pay these officers.

I admit that it is entirely competent for Congress in the exercise of its power over the Territories to provide that the Legislature shall or shall not do certain things; and if there had been inserted in this bill a provision that the Legislature of that Territory should pay these officers, then I concede that it would not be subject to the point of order now made against it, because it would not then require an appropriation out of the public Treasury. The provision already in the law of the Territory of Utah as read by the gentleman from Kansas to the effect that officers of election shall receive a reasonable compensation——

Mr. HASKELL. Now, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CARLISLE. Certainly.

Mr. HASKELL. When you admit that there might have been a provision attached requiring the Territorial authorities to pay, then you give away your case, because an amendment germane to the bill, of such a character as that allowing that Territory to pay those officers, gives me the right to raise the presumption that they are Territorial officers now, as otherwise the amendment would not be germane.

Mr. CARLISLE. Not at all. We must consider this point of order, Mr. Speaker, on the bill as it now stands before the House, not as it may be framed hereafter by some amendment which the gentleman from Kansas might offer, and which the House might or might not adopt, as it saw proper. The gentleman had as well say that because it is competent for Congress to put into its bill organizing the Territorial government a provision that the Legislature should levy taxes to pay the governor and secretary of state, therefore they were not such officers as could be paid otherwise out of the Federal Treasury, and that such a bill ought not to go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HASKELL. I was referring to a ruling of a previous Speaker brought up by the gentleman from Ohio, not because it was particularly pertinent to the case, but I was referring to a ruling of his own Speaker.

Mr. CARLISLE. Mr. Speaker Blaine ruled in that case that one of the tests as to whether or not a bill should have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was whether an amendment making an appropriation immediately to pay for the services provided for by the bill, or to pay for the salaries of officers created by the bill, would be germane and in order.

Mr. HASKELL. I applied the same argument to the proposition that an amendment which provided the Territory should pay being germane under the same ruling of Mr. Speaker Blaine this bill was taken out of the rule. And let me call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky further to this point, that these very Territorial officers now in existence, in which scheme or code these five provided by this bill are to be placed, are paid by the Legislature of the Territory of Utah, and the provisions of the law requiring them to be paid by the Territory of Utah is still upon the statute-book of that Territory and unrepealed.

Mr. CARLISLE. But the gentleman from Kansas must take note of the fact that there is no such board as this bill contemplates now existing under the laws of the Territory of Utah, as I understand the law; nor has the gentleman from Kansas shown that there is.

Mr. HASKELL. It is not necessary that there shall be a specific clause fixing the mode of this payment. We may devise some other scheme or some other code, or provide another election board the machinery of which is local and to be paid by the Territory of Utah.

Mr. CARLISLE. The gentleman from Kansas certainly does not mean to be understood as contending that an act passed by the Territorial Legislature of Utah providing for the payment of officers selected under its own authority would remain in force and apply to the appointment of officers created by an act of Congress which expressly abolishes the previous officers, and which fixes a compensation for the new officers differing entirely from the compensation fixed by the act of the Territorial Legislature.

Mr. HASKELL. Have we not a right to levy a tax?

Mr. CARLISLE. But you do not say it——

Mr. HASKELL. But have we not the right?

Mr. CARLISLE. There is no doubt of the right to levy a tax.

Mr. HASKELL. Then, if we have the right and do not repeal the law, do not we have that law still in force?

Mr. CARLISLE. Certainly. But the act of the Territorial Legislature applies, and was intended to apply, only to the specific officers created by that act. It has no reference and cannot by any possible construction have any reference to officers appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate, with altogether different salaries fixed as compensation for their services.

Mr. ROBESON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CARLISLE. Certainly.

Mr. ROBESON. The gentleman from Kentucky has stated that if this bill provided that this Territorial commission should be paid out of the Territorial treasury, then the point of order would not be applicable to it?

Mr. CARLISLE. Certainly, because it would not require an appropriation by Congress.

Mr. ROBESON. Very well. Then such a provision as that would have been in the power of Congress?

Mr. CARLISLE. Certainly.

Mr. ROBESON. Then if that is true, it will be still in the power of Congress if this bill is passed to frame a law supplementary to this saying that those men shall be paid out of the treasury of the Territory of Utah. Now, if that be so, how does this bill require an appropriation from the United States Treasury, and wherein is it subject to the point of order?

Mr. CARLISLE. That is, to say the least, a very curious argument. Because Congress has the power at some time hereafter to change this law by passing another law inconsistent with it in some respects, therefore this bill may stand upon its own merits, as if that supplemental law were a part of it, and therefore the point of order is not well taken upon this bill! For illustration, if this bill in so many words provided an appropriation of $15,000 per annum to be paid to this board in the Territory of Utah, if a subsequent Congress, or the same Congress at a subsequent time, should pass a bill requiring that an appropriation necessary to pay the amount should be made by the local authorities of Utah, then the point of order is not properly made against this bill. We are to consider this bill, as I stated before, as it is presented now for the consideration of the House, and cannot consider it in connection with the future action or the constitutional power of Congress to change it hereafter.

If the bill does not, as it now stands, require an appropriation of money to compensate these officers for services to the extent the bill requires, then it is not amenable to the point of order; but if the bill does require an appropriation of money for their payment, then unquestionably it is under the rules of the House subject to the point of order. Then, if it is conceded that this bill, as it stands, gives to these officers a valid legal claim against the Government of the United States for compensation at the rate of $3,000 per annum for the time they may serve in the execution of these provisions, it is a bill which requires an appropriation of money by Congress, and, as such, is subject to the point of order. On that proposition I submit, with all deference to gentlemen upon the other side, that it seems to me there can be no room for difference of opinion among lawyers. If this bill passes, each and every one of the persons to be appointed by the President and constituting this board for the Territory of Utah has a valid claim against the Government of the United States, which he can enforce in the courts of justice, for the sum of $3,000 per annum as compensation for his services.

We are, Mr. Speaker, it is true, legislating for the Territory of Utah as if we were in the position of its Legislature; but we are still the Congress of the United States acting under the Constitution and under the rules of the House; and no matter what may be the extent of our power, or how it may be limited with respect to this subject-matter, we are to determine the question as if we were the Congress of the United States, and not the Legislature of the Territory.

Mr. HASKELL. Acting in the stead of the Legislature of that Territory, or acting as its Legislature, we have the power by our subsequent legislation to provide and to determine what appropriation of money shall be paid for the salaries or compensation of officers acting under the laws of that Territory. We have the power to legislate for Utah, but that power does not say that we must pay every bill incident upon our legislation. On the contrary, the whole statutes of Utah and of other Territories show that Congress has stepped in to legislate, has stepped in and provided officers and compelled the local Legislatures to do this and to do that; but when it comes to appropriating money Congress is supreme to say whether the Federal Government will pay or the Territory will pay. I say the Territory shall pay this bill, and it will require a subsequent act of Congress to determine that liability.

Mr. CARLISLE. I think I have already answered the gentleman's argument and I will not attempt to do so further by answering his last remarks. I submit that under the practice of this House and under the plain language of the rule the Speaker will be bound to send this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, where it can have a proper consideration and be open to debate and amendment.

Mr. ROBESON. It is not denied that if these men are Federal officers to be paid out of the Federal Treasury the bill is liable to the point of order. On the other hand it will not be denied that if they are Territorial officers, to be paid out of the Territorial treasury, this does not require an appropriation, and the bill is not liable to the point of order. There is no definite provision in this bill which says out of what treasury these officers are to be paid.

It will be admitted by my friend from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE,] and by all other men whose minds discriminate as his does, that although this is a statute of the United States, it is not in its full scope and purview a Federal statute. The Congress of the United States make Federal law to apply to the whole United States upon the subject-matters which, under the Constitution, are committed to their charge. They make certain other laws, for which they are enabled by that clause of the Constitution which gives them authority to make rules and regulations for the government of the Territories of the United States. They make certain other laws, which do not apply to the United States as a whole, and which apply only to the Territory toward which they are directed. In other words, when they do that they assume themselves the power, and become for all essential purposes the Legislature of the Territory. They have the right to accept the acts of the Legislature of that Territory; they have the right to amend them; they have the right to substitute others for them. And the question here is whether this bill, as it stands in the language in which it is written, requires an appropriation; whether it not only requires an appropriation but requires an appropriation from the United States Treasury.

Now, then, these are the election officers of that Territory. This act of Congress undertakes to make an election code for that Territory, and in doing so to amend and repeal a certain portion of the code already existing there, and put in the place of the officers who are thus swept out of existence by the act of Congress acting as the Legislature of the Territory and giving to it these local laws—put in their place certain other officers who they do provide, as they have a right to provide, shall be appointed by the President or shall be appointed in any other way that they choose.

Those election officers, in the system as it now stands, are paid out of the treasury of that Territory. The question here is: when this bill says that certain other election officers shall be appointed under our authority to take the place of those who are now paid out of the territorial treasury, whether that appointment by any implication requires an appropriation out of the United States Treasury. Why, sir, according to every rule of interpretation of law these new officers who do the duties of the old officers and take their places would be paid from the same fund and out of the same resources as the gentlemen whose duties they perform and whose places they take. And that is all there is of this question. If it is not here so clearly expressed in this bill as to remove all doubt, it is admitted that it remains in the power of Congress to make it clear. We declare these officers as they now stand are appointed by Federal authority; but not Federal authority for the appointment of Federal officers; only Federal authority acting as the Legislature of that Territory. No lawyer will deny that we have a right to appoint Federal officers by act of Congress and to provide that they shall be paid out of the treasury of the Territory of Utah. And nobody will deny that when we provide territorial officers who in their nature and in their duty are naturally, and according to all precedent and according to all law, paid out of the treasury of the Territory, or when we are providing a set of officers to take the places of others already existing, we provide that those officers, in the absence of any other provision, who are to take the places of the existing officers are to be paid out of the same treasury as the officers whose places they take and whose duties they perform.

Mr. CARLISLE. If the gentleman will allow me to ask him a question, I would inquire who pays now the salaries of the governors and the secretaries of the Territories?

Mr. ROBESON. That has nothing to do with this. Who pays now the salaries of the election officers, the inspectors of election, whose places are now abolished and whose places these officers take?

Mr. CARLISLE. I will repeat the gentleman's question. Who now pays the salary of these election officers—not the salaries of some other election officers in Utah, but the salaries of these officers?

Mr. ROBESON. These are not yet appointed.

Mr. CARLISLE. Certainly not.

Mr. ROBESON. Because the Legislature of the Territory has not yet appointed them. But when we pass this bill, acting as the Legislature of that Territory for that purpose, we will appoint them, and acting as that Legislature we will make them a charge on the Territorial treasury.

Mr. HOOKER. If it was not the purpose of the framer of this bill to create five commissioners to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate; if it was not the purpose of the framer of this bill to create five Federal offices to be filled by five Federal officers to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States, then he has been exceedingly unfortunate in the language which he has used in the 9th section of the bill.

When you look for the purpose and object of the bill you will see that the language used was not the language of the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON,] to appoint a new set of election officers for the Territory of Utah, but it was to create a commission, a Federal commission, the members of which were to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, which commission was to indicate who should be those election officers. Section 9 of this bill provides that—

> Each and every duty relating to the registration of voters, the conduct of elections, the receiving or rejection of votes, and the canvassing and returning of the same, and the issuing of certificates or other evidence of an election in the said Territory, shall—

I call the attention of the Speaker especially to the imperative language of this bill—> shall, until other provision shall be made by the Legislative Assembly of said Territory, as hereinafter by this section provided, be performed under the existing laws of the United States and of said Territory—

By whom?

> by proper persons who shall be appointed to execute such offices and perform such duties by a board of five persons—

How is that board of five persons to be appointed?

> to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, not more than three of whom shall be members of one political party, and a majority of whom shall be a quorum.

It was therefore evidently the purpose of the framer of this bill to create five Federal commissioners to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. To perform what functions? To perform the function of declaring the mode and manner and method of registration of voters, and the mode and manner of carrying on elections in the Territory of Utah.

These are therefore entirely new offices created by the Congress of the United States, the persons filling those offices to receive a compensation fixed by this bill, which declares that it shall be so much per annum.

Now, still further to confirm that view, I ask you to read a little further along in the bill and you will see that it is provided that the members of the commission so appointed by the President shall each receive a salary of $3,000 "and shall continue in office"—in what office? by whom created? by the Legislative Assembly of Utah? Not at all; but created by this very act of Congress, to be appointed by the Chief Executive of the United States by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The members of said board, so appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, "shall continue in office until"—until when? "Until the Legislative Assembly of said Territory shall make provision for filling said offices as herein authorized."

That shows conclusively that it was the purpose and object of the framer of this bill to create by act of Congress Federal officers, to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, to act as officers of the United States in the Territory of Utah for the purpose indicated in the bill, until the Territorial Legislature of Utah should make other and different provision. The language of the bill is too plain to admit of a doubt.

As to the point made by the gentlemen on the other side, with reference to the ruling made by my friend from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] when he temporarily occupied the chair, it will be observed that the language of the rule as it then existed was entirely different from the broad, comprehensive, and all-embracing terms of the rule as it now stands among the rules of this House.

The gentleman from Kentucky in his ruling called the attention of members of the House to the fact that the word used then in the rule was "requiring," not the word "involving," which is the word now used in the rule. He therefore predicated his decision upon that point, upon the different language used in the then rule of the House from that used in the rule as it now stands. When you look at the comprehensive terms of clause 3 of Rule XXIII, you will find that it was intended to provide that whenever and wherever a proposition to take money from the Treasury of the United States for any purpose was brought up, it must be first considered in Committee of the Whole before you are authorized to proceed to consider it in the House. The rule says "all motions or propositions," using language broad, general, and comprehensive in its character:

> All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriation to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced.

The rule, therefore, is explicit and clear. This bill, as it now stands, as it is now framed, with this ninth section, cannot be considered in the House until it has first been considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ROBESON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOOKER. Certainly.

Mr. ROBESON. Is it not competent for the Congress of the United States to provide by law that the President of the United States shall appoint a roadmaster in the Territory of Utah? And is it not competent also for the Congress of the United States to provide by law that such roadmaster shall be paid by taxes on the property in the Territory and out of the treasury of the Territory of Utah? And is it not also competent, if the Legislature of Utah does not provide the machinery for raising that tax and paying that money, for the Congress of the United States itself to provide that machinery and to raise that money to pay it?

Mr. HOOKER. I say, in answer to the gentleman, it is undoubtedly competent for the Congress of the United States to create any office in the Territory consonant with the government of the Territory, and to provide for the payment of the officer by the Territorial Legislature. But this bill provides in express terms that these officers shall be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and continue in office as Federal officers, controlling the methods of election in the Territory until, by the terms of the bill, the Territorial Legislature makes provision for other officers.

Mr. ROBESON. Until they are turned out by the Territorial Legislature, which, by the bill, is authorized to appoint others.

Mr. HOOKER. Exactly; that is what the bill provides.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, there are two questions involved in this controversy: first, are the officers provided for by this bill Federal officers? That will hardly be disputed. I do not think it has been contended in the course of the debate that they are not. The provision is that they are to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The second question is, are they to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States or out of the treasury of Utah? This bill does not contain any provision directing their payment out of the treasury of the Territory. These being Federal officers, the question therefore arises, on whom will they have a claim for payment; and does the provision of the bill come within the letter and spirit of the third clause of Rule XXIII? That clause provides that "all motions or propositions involving a charge upon the people" shall be first considered in Committee of the Whole. What is a "charge?" It is the creation of an indebtedness against the United States; and I submit that if the Federal authority creates officers and foists them upon the Territory it is bound to see that they are paid; and their claim is a charge against the people of the United States.

Moreover, in the same direction I submit the Congress of the United States has no power to force the Territory to pay these officers. This question has arisen before in instances where the Territories have refused to pay officers created by Congress, notwithstanding the act of Congress declared that they should be paid by the Territory, and claims for compensation of such officers were presented here in the Forty-fourth Congress.

Now, we are not to look at this rule technically, nor should we wrench the rule to escape the point of order; but we should put a common-sense construction on it. If this is done, there cannot, it seems to me, be a doubt in the mind of any one that these officers being created by this bill, and there being a total absence of any direction that they are to be paid from the treasury of the Territory of Utah, their payment becomes a claim, a "charge" against the United States. If this bill be enacted into law they will in the future come here to be paid. Why, sir, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] himself has conceded the fact that future legislation is necessary to define how and from what treasury these officers are to be paid. If no future legislation is had, therefore they will come here as claimants. Hence the creation of these officers is clearly within the letter and spirit of the rule.

Mr. REED. I confess I am somewhat surprised, although not for the first time, at the ideas entertained by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] on principles of parliamentary law. According to his notion every parliamentary rule is to be construed against the House, so as to prevent business being considered in the House and to cause it to be considered in Committee of the Whole. I have always understood that the principles of parliamentary law required a rule to be construed in furtherance of the business of the House, not in the direction of its obstruction. On this point, it seems, the gentleman from Pennsylvania and I radically differ.

Now, as I understand him, he contends that the contracting of a debt by the United States is the creation of a tax or charge. I must say that I am surprised to see this point of order defended upon that ground of all others. No one besides the gentleman from Pennsylvania has undertaken to put it upon that ground. Every other man has comprehended that a tax or charge is something in the nature of an impost, something which is put upon the people and which they must pay, not by some future action as resultant from a debt, but by the very bill imposing the charge or tax.

Now, as to the other ground on which the point is put by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE.] He asked the question of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] whether the governor and marshal were not paid by the United States. I was sorry the gentleman from New Jersey did not answer him. Those officers are paid by the United States; and why? Because the statute of the United States expressly declares that they are to be so paid; and unless there were an express statute so declaring they would not be paid by the United States but by local taxation in the Territory. Such being the case, it would follow that when a salary is provided for and it is not declared that the United States shall pay that salary, the Territory would then have to pay it.

Mr. McLANE. I wish to ask the gentleman to what statute he refers?

Mr. REED. The Revised Statutes of the United States, second edition.

Mr. McLANE. If the gentleman will allow the Clerk to read the statute he will find——

Mr. REED. I have not time for the Clerk to read the Revised Statutes.

Mr. McLANE. The gentleman will find that the provision of the statute is exactly the same as this bill.

Mr. REED. The gentleman, when he examines the statute, will find that there is a direct provision that payment is to be made by the United States. I have looked up the question. That being the fact, it would seem that the point of order is of no avail.

I am very glad for my part to see the gentlemen on the other side making such sedulous objection to this matter upon a point of order, because it reassures me that they do not intend to make any opposition when the bill is really presented for the consideration of the House. They prefer to fight it under cover rather than to fight it openly, and as I hope the bill may be speedily passed I am glad to see they take that attitude.

Mr. CARLISLE. I should like to ask the gentleman from Maine whether this is the provision to which he has referred.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I have the floor, but will yield for that purpose.

Mr. CARLISLE. Is this the provision of the Revised Statutes to which he refers? I read from section 1845, "from and after the 1st day of July, 1873, the annual salaries of the governors of the several Territories shall be $3,500, and the salaries of the secretaries shall be $2,500."

Mr. REED. No, sir.

Mr. CARLISLE. Is there any other statute?

Mr. REED. Yes, you will find a subsequent clause requiring them to be paid by the United States.

Mr. CARLISLE. It may be here, but I have not been able to find it.

The SPEAKER. Sections 9, 10, 11, and other sections of the original charter of the Territory, provide for the payment of salaries.

Mr. CARLISLE. But here is the statute, Mr. Speaker, which relates to the Territories of the United States.

Mr. HASKELL. I will quote it. Section 1886 provides that payment for the support of government in the Territories shall not be made until estimated for by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I wish to repudiate the idea entertained by my friend from Maine [Mr. REED] that the point of order has been raised on this side because gentlemen on this side favor polygamy in Utah, or that they are fighting in favor of it "under cover." [Laughter.] Now, the ground of opposition is apparent, and above cover. [Laughter.] As I understand the motive it is because it is apparent there is a disposition to force the bill through the House without opportunity for debate and amendment. The sole purpose of gentlemen on this side is that the bill may have discussion and there may be opportunity for amendment. I do not know a single member sitting on this side of the Chamber who is in favor of polygamy. I will go further and say I do not know a single member on this side who is not ready to demonstrate his opposition to polygamy, and who does not desire, within constitutional limits, to wipe out that stain upon our civilization.

Mr. REED. I hope the gentleman will confine himself to the point of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I have not risen so much to discuss the point of order as to appeal to gentlemen on this side to withdraw all technical questions or points of order, and that gentlemen on the opposite side will agree to allow full and free discussion as well as opportunity to offer amendments to the bill. There are many here who doubt the wisdom of this bill. I for one do not. I am ready to vote for this bill, because I think it a step in the right direction. I do not believe the bill will accomplish much, but I am in favor of taking this step, because it leads the way for stamping out this foul blot upon our country.

I hope then, sir, that the Democratic side of the House will, if the other side is willing to allow opportunity to offer amendments and have reasonable time for discussion of the bill, withdraw the point of order and let the bill come up at once for final action.

Why is the opposite side of this House not willing to allow opportunity for amendment and discussion? If the amendments offered are wrong they can be voted down, and I do not see how discussion can harm the bill.

Mr. CAMP. Of course.

Mr. CANNON. When it comes up the majority of the House will control it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Do I understand the opposite side is willing the bill may be discussed as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment?

Mr. CANNON. Are you authorized to withdraw the point of order?

Mr. McLANE. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Will you agree the bill shall be open to amendment and discussion as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. CANNON. I understand the gentleman speaks only for himself.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have the floor. Now, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] has fallen into an error in regard to the duties of the board provided by this law. He is of opinion, or at least I infer so from his remarks, that these five commissioners are to be superseded by other commissioners to be appointed by the Legislature of Utah. These commissioners to be appointed by the President are not to be superseded by other commissioners to be appointed by the Legislature, and the election officers of the Territory, the judges of election, and the registrars of election in the Territory, who are removed by this bill are to be provided for by future Legislatures, and when they do provide for filling those offices then the duties of this board will cease, and they will go out of office forever.

Mr. ROBESON. My point was not exactly that. The section as it stands is:

> That all the registration and election offices of every description in the Territory of Utah are hereby declared vacant; and each and every duty relating to the registration of voters, the conduct of elections, the receiving or rejection of votes, and the canvassing and returning of the same, and the issuing of certificates or other evidence of election in said Territory, shall, until other provision be made by the Legislative Assembly of said Territory as is hereinafter by this section provided, be performed, under the existing laws of the United States and of said Territory, by proper persons who shall be appointed to execute such offices and perform such duties by a board of five persons to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, not more than three of whom shall be members of one political party, and a majority of whom shall be a quorum.

Now, the question was, if the gentleman will pardon me, whether these officers so appointed are to be paid out of the United States Treasury or out of the treasury of the Territory?

Now, I would like to read the clause of the statute which distinguishes what officers shall be paid out of the United States Treasury and what shall not.

Mr. REED. Before the gentleman from New Jersey reads that I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE,] who had not seen the provision to which reference is now made, so that I may answer his point.

Mr. ROBESON. I read section 1882 of the Revised Statutes:

> The salaries provided for in this title—

And that is the general provision with reference to the officers in all the Territories—

> The salaries provided for in this title to be paid to the governor, secretary, chief justices, and associate justices, district attorney, and marshal of the several Territories shall be paid quarter-yearly at the Treasury of the United States.

Those are the Territorial officers that are to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States, and none others, until we make a law for their payment.

Mr. SPRINGER. But this law makes that provision.

And now, Mr. Speaker, a word further. This bill provides for the creation of officers hitherto unknown to the law of that Territory. There are no such officers there now, and, so far as I know, in no other Territory of the United States, and there never have been. This proposes the creation of a sort of "returning board," and it is something that does not exist now, and has not existed heretofore. There was never such a returning board created by Congress before. Therefore this is the creation of new officers, with new duties imposed upon them, duties which heretofore have been imposed upon the governor, the secretary of the Territory, and other Territorial officers. Therefore it is a new idea, a new notion, and I may say a new Daniel come to judgment, in the shape of a returning board for the Territory of Utah.

The whole question, Mr. Speaker, involved in this point of order, permit me to say, has been overlooked by gentlemen upon the other side. Speaker Blaine, in the decision which has been quoted here, has placed on record a ruling which has been read for the information of the House, but has not been met by gentlemen upon the other side. His ruling was to the effect that if the bill was subject to an amendment by which an appropriation should be directly made, then it would be subject to the point of order. Will any gentleman upon the other side of the House say that it would not be germane to this bill to offer an amendment providing that we appropriate $15,000 per annum as compensation for this board?

Mr. HASKELL. Would it not be germane to provide that it shall be paid out of the Territorial funds?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. HASKELL. Then that takes it out of the point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is just where the gentleman is mistaken. It is still within the range of the point of order, and it is proposed to be kept there. There is nothing which has yet been shown to take it out of the point of order; and no subsequent action which you may propose to take hereafter, or that Congress by any possibility may see proper to take at a future time, can remove the present bill from the influence of the point of order. The Speaker's opinion was—Speaker Blaine—that if a bill came before the House to be considered and the point of order was raised that it could thereafter be amended so as to increase the liability of the Government, that it came within the provision of the rule and was subject to the point of order. This bill, if it does nothing else, opens the door for such an appropriation, and you may amend by heaping up all the expense of the commission upon the United States. That is the point of order made against the bill.

Now, if this bill does not involve the United States in expense, if it does not pledge the faith of the Government to pay these officials which it proposes to create, then I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is impossible for Congress to create a charge upon the Treasury of the United States unless accompanied by an appropriation to pay that charge. If you authorize the funding of the public debt in the shape of bonds bearing a certain rate of interest, is not the faith of the Government pledged to pay the interest upon the bonds, although there may not be an appropriation in the bill? If you create a Federal officer in terms, define the duties which he is to perform, is not the good faith of the Government pledged to pay the salary of the officer? And suppose that this law were silent on this subject, which it is not, but suppose it left the Territorial treasury to pay the commission and the Territorial Legislature should refuse to do it, would any gentleman say that these five commissioners could not sue the United States in the Court of Claims and recover their salaries in that way?

Mr. CAMP. How would they get their judgments paid?

Mr. SPRINGER. The same as we pay all judgments.

Mr. CAMP. Yes, but the money would have to be appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. SPRINGER. It would be paid in the same way that other judgments against the Government are paid; and I apprehend that the gentleman from New York would not be willing to repudiate a debt created in that way.

Mr. CAMP. No; I would vote to appropriate the requisite money.

Mr. SPRINGER. Would the gentleman from New York repudiate a judgment of the Court of Claims? I think not. I ask any lawyer on that side of the House whether if any gentleman should accept this employment and go to Utah and perform the duties required by this bill, serving the United States in this capacity for twelve months, and the Territorial Legislature should refuse to pay that man, and he came to Congress and asked to be paid his salary, whether any honorable gentleman on this floor would refuse to pay him or whether we would not feel bound to pay him? I should myself feel in honor bound to pay such a bill, because the appointment was created under a law of Congress; the man was appointed by the President, by and with the advice and with the consent of the Senate; and having performed the duties of the office he is entitled to its emoluments. It was, Mr. Speaker, to meet just such cases that the rule was made to require all bills of that character to have their first consideration in a Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Our object on this side is not to delay this bill, but to have it considered as other bills are under the rules of the House; and when we go into Committee of the Whole to consider it, gentlemen will find this side of the House quite as disposed as the other to pass stringent measures upon this subject.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. RANDALL. It is this: If I direct the employment of an employé or employ him myself, whether I am not bound in law primarily to pay him or to see him paid?

Mr. SPRINGER. Of course the Government is bound; and I do not think any gentleman on the other side of the House will say the Government is not legally and morally bound to pay these officers.

Mr. REED. I rather thought the two gentlemen would agree in that opinion.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think it would be strengthened by the concurrence of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. REED. I do not think it would. You cannot build on nothing.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman from Maine, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, allow me to ask him this question: Is not the Government of the United States legally bound to pay the salaries under this bill?

Mr. REED. The gentleman knows it is not.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the gentleman mean to say the Government is not liable?

Mr. REED. Until Congress determines that the Government of the United States is to pay these officers Congress has not created a liability.

Mr. SPRINGER. If this bill should pass, has Congress not created an office?

Mr. REED. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPRINGER. And will the Government not put men into that office?

Mr. REED. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then who is to pay them?

Mr. REED. Of course, the Territory.

Mr. SPRINGER. There never was such a case heretofore, and I challenge the gentleman to produce such a case.

Mr. REED. The last gentleman on that side challenged me to find a law authorizing the payment of these officers out of the United States Treasury, and he could have found such a law by turning over a single leaf.

Mr. SPRINGER. I challenge the gentleman to show a case where Congress has passed a law creating an office where the Government of the United States has not been bound to pay the officer. I ask the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MAGINNIS] to state what has been the universal custom in the Territories.

Mr. MAGINNIS. If reference be made to the past there never has yet been a man appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate to an office in the Territories who has not been paid out of the Treasury of the United States, and in my judgment there never can be.

Mr. CARLISLE. As the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] announced that I had challenged him to produce a statute for the payment of these officers, and he has done so, I desire to say a word. I did not challenge him in the usual sense of the word.

Mr. REED. I did not refer to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE.] I referred to the equally distinguished gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. MCLANE.]

Mr. CARLISLE. He should say the more distinguished gentleman. But the gentleman from Maine has produced in response to that question section 1882 of the Revised Statutes which is very short, and which I will read:

> The salaries provided for in this title to be paid to the governor, secretary, chief justices and associate justices, district attorney, and marshal of the several Territories shall be paid quarter-yearly at the Treasury of the United States.

Now, I submit to my friend from Maine, the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the House, whether this statute is not based upon the assumption that the Government of the United States, by creating these officers, is bound to pay them, and that the only object of this section of the law is to provide the time and place when and where they shall receive their money.

I submit to my friend from Maine that there is no provision in this statute anywhere appropriating money for the payment of these officers, or providing in express terms that the United States shall pay them, except this clause, which proceeds upon the assumption that the Government is liable to pay them, and simply fixes the time and place when and where they shall receive their money; and that this statute was not intended to create a liability, but assumed that a liability already existed. No gentleman can put any other construction upon it.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill and a joint resolution of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 3251) authorizing the Postmaster-General to adjust certain claims of postmasters for loss by burglary, fire, or other casualty; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 140) to print certain eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Michael P. O'Connor.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. No. 979) regulating fees and the practice in extradition cases; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

POLYGAMY.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has found some difficulty in reaching a satisfactory conclusion upon this question. The discussion upon the point of order has ranged over a very wide field. The point of order made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] is, that under paragraph 3 of Rule XXIII this bill must be first considered in Committee of the Whole. The Chair directs the Clerk to read that paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

> All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriation to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced.

The SPEAKER. The bill under consideration in section 9 makes provision for a board of five officers to discharge certain election duties, and provides that the members of this board shall be paid a salary of $3,000 a year. The Clerk will read that portion of section 9 which relates to these officers and in part to their duties.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all the registration and election offices of every description in the Territory of Utah are hereby declared vacant; and each and every duty relating to the registration of voters, the conduct of elections, the receiving or rejection of votes, and the canvassing and returning of the same, and the issuing of certificates or other evidence of election, in said Territory, shall, until other provision be made by the Legislative Assembly of said Territory as is hereinafter by this section provided, be performed, under the existing laws of the United States and of said Territory, by proper persons who shall be appointed to execute such offices and perform such duties by a board of five persons to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, not more than three of whom shall be members of one political party, and a majority of whom shall be a quorum. The members of said board so appointed by the President shall each receive a salary at the rate of $3,000 per annum, and shall continue in office until the Legislative Assembly of said Territory shall make provision for filling said offices as herein authorized.

The SPEAKER. It should be conceded that this proposition does not, within the meaning of the rule, involve "a tax or charge upon the people;" that it is not a "proceeding touching an appropriation of money;" that it does not "make an appropriation of money or property;" that it does not "authorize a payment out of the appropriations already made;" that it does not "release any liability to the United States for money or property."

But it is contended that this bill, if it should become a law, would require an appropriation to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. The tax or charge referred to in the rule, as the Chair thinks, relates to a direct tax or charge on the people, and has no reference to an appropriation of money from the United States Treasury.

The five members of the board proposed to be created by this bill are to be paid a salary at the rate of $3,000 per annum. The claim is that an appropriation of money would have to be made to pay the members of that board; or, in other words, that the bill, if it should become a law, would require an appropriation of money to be made to execute it.

It is perhaps clear under the rule that if this bill does require an appropriation of money out of the Treasury of the United States to pay the salaries of the officers mentioned, it must be first considered in Committee of the Whole. A very strict construction of this rule would justify the Chair in holding that a bill must by its terms require an appropriation of money to make it liable to a point of order. The Chair, however, is not now disposed to give such a construction to the rule, but is strongly inclined to hold that in case a bill provides for new officers and fixes their salaries, which salaries must of necessity be paid out of the United States Treasury and from money to be appropriated, such bill may be said to require an appropriation of money within the meaning of the rule.

The Chair does not intend to intimate that a bill which if enacted into law would incidentally involve expense to execute it would therefore be subject to the point of order that it should be first considered in Committee of the Whole, unless the bill directly required an appropriation of money to pay such expense. The rule relates to bills "requiring," not "involving," an appropriation of money. Within the construction of the rule indicated, does this bill require an appropriation of money? If the five members of the board provided for in the bill must of necessity be paid their salaries out of money to be appropriated from the United States Treasury, then the bill would require an appropriation of money.

To determine the last proposition we must look to the laws in force especially relating to the Territory of Utah, and to the general laws of the United States relating to the organization of all the Territories.

By reference to the charter act of Utah, and to the general laws of the United States relating to the organization of Territories, it will be found that in the organization of the Territory of Utah Congress provided for a governor, a secretary, a Teritorial Assembly, justices of courts, an attorney, and a marshal, and their assistants and deputies, and perhaps some other officers for the government of the Territory. The salaries of those officers, including the pay of the members of the Legislative Assembly, are fixed and authorized to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. A fixed sum is established for the contingent expenses of the governor in each year, and a sufficient sum is authorized to defray the expenses of the Legislative Assembly, including printing and incidental expenses, to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. All other expenses necessary to carry on the Territorial government, not otherwise provided for in the laws of the United States, are required to be paid out of a fund to be raised by a tax imposed on property-owners in the Territory. By the express terms of the Territorial laws the election officers are required to be so paid.

This bill proposes to depose certain election officers, and to provide, temporarily, a board of officers for the conduct of elections and to execute the election laws of the Territory of Utah. The Legislative Assembly may again, as provided in the bill, fill the offices declared by this bill to be vacant, and the functions of the board proposed by the bill will then cease.

Such board becomes a part of the election system for the time being of the Territory of Utah; and it may be held that their salaries will be payable out of the treasury of the Territory, either by virtue of existing laws or by laws either Territorial or Federal, which may hereafter be enacted. If this be true then it follows that the bill does not require an appropriation of money out of the Treasury of the United States to pay the officers created by it.

The Chair will here observe, with reference to a decision said to have been made by Speaker Blaine, that upon an examination of the then pending bill it seems quite clear that his decision was properly made, and is within the views of the present occupant of the Chair. The class of officers that was proposed to be constituted by the bill then under consideration were assistants of the United States attorney and deputy marshals. Those officers, by the very terms of the then existing law, would have to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. They did not belong to any Territorial system, and it could not possibly have been then held that under any state of the law, in the absence of legislation directly upon the subject, any other treasury was to be drawn on for the payment of these assistant attorneys and deputy marshals than the Treasury of the United States.

The Chair cannot agree that any bill which might, if amended, require an appropriation of money from the Treasury of the United States must be first considered in Committee of the Whole. There are a vast number of bills pending that are under our rules and practice not referred to the Committee of the Whole House for consideration, which might be amended under the rules so as to finally involve an appropriation of money to execute the laws created should such bills pass.

The Chair is not disposed to hold that if a bill might by possibility require an appropriation of money it must first be considered in Committee of the Whole. The Chair thinks it goes far enough when it holds that a bill must on its face require an appropriation of money to carry it out, or to pay the salaries of the officers created by it.

It is not necessary to decide that the officers proposed to be created by this bill are or are not United States officers. They may be both United States and Territorial officers. The Chair has nothing to do with the question of the power or right of Congress to enact such a law as this bill proposes. The Chair is bound to assume that the proposed legislation is within the constitutional power of Congress.

It may be, perhaps, proper to remark that all the laws of the Territory of Utah enacted by its Assembly are, by the terms of the original act for the organization of that Territory, subject to be annulled by the mere disapproval of Congress. Entertaining these views, the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. CONVERSE. Inasmuch as the decision of the Chair involves a rule of the House of so much importance to the House itself and the entire country, I desire respectfully to make an appeal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio takes an appeal. The question is: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?

Mr. HASKELL. I move that the appeal be laid on the table.

Mr. CONVERSE. In view of the importance of the question to be determined by the House, I demand the yeas and nays on this proposition.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 119, nays 80, not voting 93; as follows:

YEAS—119.

So the appeal was laid on the table.

During the roll-call, the following announcements were made:

Mr. WEST. I desire to say that I am paired with the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. FORNEY.] Had I the right to vote, I would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. BLOUNT. My colleague [Mr. BLACK] is critically ill, and my other colleague [Mr. CLEMENTS] is with him.

Mr. WALKER. I am paired with the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FLOWER.] If he were present and voting, I should vote "aye."

The following pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. HOUK with Mr. WHITTHORNE.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, with Mr. SHERWIN.

Mr. LINDSEY with Mr. ATHERTON.

Mr. RYAN with Mr. LE FEVRE.

Mr. FORNEY with Mr. WEST.

Mr. THOMAS with Mr. DAVIDSON.

Mr. KETCHAM with Mr. COX, of New York.

Mr. ROSS with Mr. BREWER.

Mr. PIERCE with Mr. BARBOUR.

Mr. WALTER A. WOOD with Mr. LATHAM.

Mr. HARMER with Mr. ELLIS.

Mr. HARRIS, of New Jersey, with Mr. JONES, of New Jersey.

Mr. GODSHALK with Mr. DUNN.

Mr. BOWMAN with Mr. ALLEN.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, with Mr. SPAULDING.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, with Mr. TALBOTT.

Mr. SCOVILLE with Mr. CROWLEY.

Mr. CORNELL with Mr. HARDY.

Mr. WATSON with Mr. DUGRO.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, with Mr. ALDRICH.

Mr. MCLANE with Mr. URNER.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina, with Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York.

Mr. MORSE with Mr. RANNEY.

Mr. FLOWER with Mr. WALKER.

Mr. BROWNE with Mr. DOWD.

Mr. HERNDON with Mr. CASWELL.

Mr. ANDERSON with Mr. BLOUNT.

Mr. BRAGG with Mr. STRAIT.

Mr. HUBBELL with Mr. BLACKBURN.

Mr. WISE, of Virginia, with Mr. DEZENDORF.

Mr. CHACE with Mr. WILSON.

Mr. WILSON. A pair is announced between myself and Mr. CHACE of which I know nothing, and there must be some mistake about it.

On motion of Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. HASKELL. I demand the previous question. I believe there is no desire to debate it.

Mr. REAGAN. Let me offer two amendments to the bill.

Mr. HASKELL. I would be glad to yield as much time to the opponents of the bill as is taken up on this side. In fact, we only desire a moment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the previous question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I hope gentlemen will not verify the prediction I made that debate would be suppressed and amendment denied.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Allow opportunity for debate and amendment. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The House divided; and there were—ayes 99, noes 4.

Mr. REAGAN, and Mr. TOWNSHEND of Illinois. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints Mr. HASKELL and Mr. REAGAN as tellers.

Mr. CALKINS. One moment; I desire to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Permit opportunity for debate and amendment.

Mr. ATKINS. I trust gentlemen will not press this measure. For one I have not read this bill, and I want time to read it. [Cries of "Order!"]

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 93, noes 4.

Mr. MOULTON. I move the House adjourn.

Mr. KASSON. Let me call attention to this proposition, that the gentleman from Texas be permitted to offer his amendments and debate them, and that then the previous question be considered as ordered.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let others have an opportunity to offer amendments.

Mr. ROBESON. I object.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will resume their places.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. We only desire opportunity for debate and amendment. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls attention to the fact that a quorum has not voted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I say this is bad faith.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. ROBESON. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. ATKINS. That is a thin advantage. [Cries of "Order!"] I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I have a right to do that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ATKINS. Has this bill been sent to any committee of this House?

The SPEAKER. That is a question of fact, and not one of parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ATKINS. I make the statement it has not been so referred.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. RANDALL. I rise to make a suggestion to prevent delay, and that is to allow debate for two hours and opportunity for amendments.

Mr. HASKELL. Several persons desire to be heard, and I wish to state to the House, and the country as well——

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. We want no statements unless we can reply.

Mr. SPARKS. As a question of parliamentary inquiry, can I ask—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen will be seated, as the regular order is called for.

Mr. SPARKS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. State it.

Mr. SPARKS. I wish to inquire from what committee this bill comes into this House.

Mr. CAMP. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated that is not a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman can go to the records and ascertain that fact for himself.

Mr. ROBESON's motion was agreed to.

Mr. MULDROW. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. REAGAN. And I move that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Wednesday at twelve o'clock m.

Mr. CAMP. As no quorum has voted only two motions are in order—that there be a call of the House and to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. As there is no quorum voting the motion to adjourn is in order. The question is on that motion.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 81, noes 93.

Mr. MULDROW demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 85, nays 112, not voting 95; as follows:

YEAS—85.

Cutts,	Houk,	Richardson, D. P.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. KNOTT with Mr. RICE, of Ohio.

Mr. CULBERSON with Mr. LINDSEY.

Mr. DEUSTER with Mr. GUENTHER.

Mr. JOYCE with Mr. MATSON.

Mr. MCCOOK with Mr. KING.

Mr. HENDERSON with Mr. HOBLITZELL.

Mr. ROBESON. In order to save time I move to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. SPARKS. I object.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. ROBESON. Since this result has revealed the presence of a quorum, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my motion for a call of the House.

Mr. CONVERSE. There will be no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands consent is not given.

Mr. ROBESON. Do I understand there is objection?

Mr. CONVERSE. There is no objection on this side.

Mr. ROBESON. Then my first proposition is for unanimous consent to withdraw my motion for a call of the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. That has been agreed to.

Mr. CONVERSE. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kansas if he is willing to allow one hour for amendments to this bill under the five-minute rule, and one hour further for debate; and if so, there will be no further delay.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HASKELL. We will give you all the time for debate you wish.

The SPEAKER. A call of the House having been ordered, the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. ROBESON. I have asked unanimous consent that the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that objection was made to dispensing with the call.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Nobody on this side objected.

Mr. ROBESON. Then if objection is made I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. There have been no proceedings under the call so far.

Mr. ROBESON. Then is there objection to my request to dispense with the call?

There was no objection.

So the call of the House was dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. CONVERSE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair must request the House to be in order, and will recognize no gentleman until all are seated.

Mr. MILLS. We are trying now to get at some understanding about this matter, and I hope the Chair will indulge us a little.

The SPEAKER. That is not the province of the Chair.

Mr. MILLS. But if the Speaker will not hurry us along, perhaps we may be able to come to some understanding that will meet the difficulty here.

Mr. CONVERSE. I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. CONVERSE. I understand that under the rule if the previous question is ordered we are still entitled to some debate—a half hour, I believe.

The SPEAKER. Unquestionably.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the Chair will not make such a ruling as that, which I think is erroneous.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the rule, and is clear in his opinion.

Mr. SPRINGER. But this presents a different case. This is not a motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is aware of the distinction.

Mr. CONVERSE. When may debate be indulged in?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the rule to be read, the last paragraph of Rule XXVIII.

The Clerk read as follows:

3. When a motion to suspend the rules has been seconded it shall be in order, before the final vote is taken thereon, to debate the proposition to be voted upon for thirty minutes, one-half of such time to be given to debate in favor of and one-half to debate in opposition to such proposition, and the same right of debate shall be allowed whenever the previous question has been ordered on any proposition on which there has been no debate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

Mr. MULDROW. And pending that, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HASKELL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer to the other side of the House a full hour for debate, after the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. And amendments.

Mr. SPEER. Will the gentleman from Kansas allow me to make a proposition? I am in favor of his bill, and therefore I think he should indulge me for a moment at any rate. Suppose those who desire to submit amendments to the bill send them all to the desk at this time to be read.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. And voted upon.

Mr. SPEER. And then have an hour's debate after the previous question. Let every one of the amendments be sent up at this time and have a vote upon them.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HASKELL. I am authorized on this side of the House only to say that there is no desire whatever to cut off debate. We are perfectly willing to give gentlemen who desire to discuss the question all the time they wish.

Mr. HOOKER. Then let us have four hours' debate.

Mr. REAGAN. Then why cut off all possibility of amendment?

Mr. HASKELL. I say that we are perfectly willing to allow all the debate that gentlemen desire. But we do wish to preserve this bill from amendment, and adopt it just as it is, knowing that the enemies of the bill have been working in these lobbies for the last two or three weeks.

Mr. KENNA. Is the gentleman from Kansas afraid to trust the majority of this House with the opportunity of voting upon amendments to his bill?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Why not give an opportunity for amendment, as well as debate? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair has indulged the House while gentlemen have been trying to come to an understanding. But all this has been proceeding by unanimous consent and the regular order is now demanded.

Mr. CONVERSE. I move to commit this bill to the Committee on the Judiciary. I understand one motion to commit is in order.

The SPEAKER. That motion is in order.

Mr. CONVERSE. I move to commit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary with the privilege to report at any time, and that it be made the special order when that report is made.

Mr. HASKELL. I hope the motion will be voted down.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Ohio, as he now states it, is not in order under the rule.

Mr. CONVERSE. If objection is made to the committee having the privilege to report at any time I withdraw that portion of the motion.

The SPEAKER. That would be in order.

Mr. CONVERSE. Then I leave that; and withdraw that part of the motion which makes the report a special order.

Mr. MULDROW. Pending that I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CONVERSE,] which is to commit this bill to the Committee on the Judiciary with permission to report at any time.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 59, noes 89.

Mr. REAGAN and Mr. SPARKS called for the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were ayes 45.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Before the roll is called I desire to make a personal request. I have been in the House since ten o'clock. It is now half past five. I was obliged to sit all night long last night with my colleague, Mr. BLACK, who is very ill; and I ask from the House leave of absence for the remainder of the evening.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 73, nays 96, not voting 123; as follows:

YEAS—73.

So the motion to commit was not agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois, with Mr. BUCKNER.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois, with Mr. NEAL.

Mr. SPARKS with Mr. MCKINLEY.

Mr. CURTIN with Mr. SCRANTON.

Mr. ATHERTON with Mr. UPDEGRAFF of Iowa.

Mr. WARD with Mr. AIKEN.

Mr. ROBESON with Mr. HAMMOND of Georgia.

Mr. BLANCHARD with Mr. LEWIS.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, with Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts.

Mr. WAIT with Mr. EVINS.

Mr. WEBBER with Mr. DUNN.

Mr. CAMP. I move to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. CONVERSE. I object.

The names of members voting were read, and the result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. MULDROW. I desire to inquire——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi rise to make a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. MULDROW. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MULDROW. Being myself in favor of the suppression of polygamy in the Territories——

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen is not in order to make a speech. If he has a parliamentary inquiry to make, he will state it.

Mr. MULDROW. It is this: that to give time for maturing the amendments to this bill, in order to suppress polygamy in the Territory of Utah——

Several MEMBERS. Order! Order!

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. MULDROW. Then I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes 33, noes 64.

Mr. MULDROW and Mr. MILLS called for the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were ayes 38.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 60, nays 83, not voting 149; as follows:

YEAS—60.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. BLANCHARD with Mr. LEWIS.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio, with Mr. MOREY.

Mr. WELLBORN with Mr. DEERING.

Mr. TUCKER with Mr. RUSSELL.

Mr. MOULTON with Mr. WADSWORTH.

Mr. PHISTER with Mr. POUND.

Mr. FISHER with Mr. WISE of Pennsylvania.

Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. HARDENBERGH with Mr. PAGE.

Mr. DUNNELL with Mr. ATKINS.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is upon ordering the previous question.

Mr. MULDROW. I move that the bill be committed to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions——

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. That motion has already been voted on.

Mr. MULDROW. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand, the motion heretofore made was to commit. Have I not the right now to move to commit with instructions?

The SPEAKER. The other motion was a motion also to commit with instructions. But in either case the motion of the gentleman is not in order.

Mr. MULDROW. I move to commit the bill to the Committee on the Territories with instructions——

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order.

Mr. MULDROW. I desire to read the instructions that I propose, so that the House may understand my purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his proposition.

Mr. MULDROW. It is simply that the eighth section of the bill——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his motion.

Mr. MULDROW. My motion is to commit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions——

The SPEAKER. That motion is ruled to be out of order.

Mr. MULDROW. Then I move to commit to the Committee on the Territories with instructions.

The SPEAKER. And that motion is out of order under the rules.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, there were ayes 76, noes none; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. HASKELL and Mr. MULDROW were appointed.

The House divided, and the tellers reported ayes 67, noes none.

Several MEMBERS. No quorum.

Mr. ROBESON. I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following-named members failed to answer:

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors.

Mr. HASKELL. I ask consent that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with, my object being to move that the House take a recess.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

Mr. RANDALL. With the understanding that a motion is to be made for a recess.

The SPEAKER. As many as are in favor of dispensing with all further proceedings under the call——

Mr. CALKINS. Wait a moment. It is understood that the gentleman from Kansas has a proposition to submit which if agreed to shall dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. CAMP. A motion for a recess is not in order in the absence of a quorum.

Mr. CALKINS. The gentleman from Kansas wishes to submit a proposition which we think all members will agree to; and if it be agreed to, further proceedings under the call will be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. HASKELL,] to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

The motion was not agreed to.

Several MEMBERS, (to Mr. HASKELL.) Now state your proposition.

Mr. HASKELL. I desired unanimous consent, if it could be granted, to dispense with further proceedings under the call and to take a recess until half past eleven o'clock to-morrow morning.

Many MEMBERS. That is all right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to dispensing with all further proceedings under the call?

Mr. CAMP. I object unless the proposition of the gentleman from Kansas for a recess is agreed to on the other side.

Mr. MANNING. There is no objection here.

Mr. HERBERT. What is the proposition?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas submits a request that by unanimous consent the House now take a recess till half past eleven o'clock to-morrow morning. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the proposition is agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ROBERTSON, for the remainder of this day's session, on account of indisposition; and

To Mr. LATHAM, from and after Wednesday next till April 3.

PRINTING A BILL.

The SPEAKER. It is desired that a bill on the Speaker's table, to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to the Chinese, be printed.

Mr. PACHECO. I make that request.

There being no objection, the order for printing was made.

The SPEAKER, (at six o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) In pursuance of the order just adopted by unanimous consent the House now takes a recess until half past eleven o'clock to-morrow.

MORNING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at eleven o'clock and thirty minutes a. m., (Tuesday, March 14, 1882.)

POLYGAMY.

The SPEAKER. When the House took a recess last evening it had under consideration the bill (S. No. 353) to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes. The pending question then was upon the demand of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] for the previous question upon ordering the bill to a third reading. The question now recurs upon the demand for the previous question.

Mr. PAGE. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAGE. What effect does the recess have upon the special order set apart for the second Tuesday of this month after the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. The legislative day of Monday is still continuing.

Mr. PAGE. And when this bill has been disposed of to-day, the House can adjourn and commence the legislative day of Tuesday?

The SPEAKER. If the House so decides.

Mr. PAGE. I shall enter a motion to adjourn five minutes before twelve o'clock to-day, unless my rights in regard to the special order of to-day be saved.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to make a suggestion. There are some amendments to this bill upon which we desire to vote. I desire to have a vote upon some amendments to the eighth section of the bill. Will it be assumed that the representatives of the people have no right to consider amendments and to debate the bill? I suppose there is not a gentleman on this floor who is not anxious to pass an efficient bill, and I think we will get through more quickly and more satisfactorily if opportunity is given for amendments to be proposed and voted upon. There is no disposition to delay action on this bill.

Mr. HASKELL. I would inquire how many amendments gentlemen on the other side desire to offer?

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to move two small amendments to the eighth section of the bill.

Mr. BUCKNER. And I desire to offer an amendment as to the effect of the bill.

Mr. PAGE. I have not concluded my parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I desire to say to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] that I have half a dozen small amendments which I desire to offer for the purpose of perfecting this bill.

Mr. HASKELL. It is the earnest desire of the friends of this bill to secure its passage without amendments even if with amendments the bill as a piece of legislation might be a little more conclusive or a little more accurate. It is understood that the opponents of this bill, those who desire no legislation at all upon this subject, are very anxious of tacking on some slight amendment merely for the purpose of hanging up the bill between the two Houses.

I know that many gentlemen on the other side of the House desire in good faith to offer amendments to perfect the bill. But we feel upon this side of the House that any amendment, however good, or however slight, if adopted, will accomplish the purpose of these emissaries of the Mormon Church who are here striving to defeat this bill. We therefore desire to pass the bill as it is, pure and simple.

Mr. CASSIDY. I desire to state to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] that there are a number of gentlemen on this side of the House who will vote for the clean bill as it came from the Senate.

Mr. HASKELL. How many such votes have you on that side?

Mr. CASSIDY. There is one that I know of.

Mr. REAGAN. I have heard what the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] has said. I desire to say that it is yet early in the session, and it is undoubtedly true that a bill will be passed in some shape by a large majority of the House. But there are a few of us who do not want to abolish the Constitution while we are endeavoring to abolish polygamy. The gentleman from Kansas asks a good deal of us when he asks us to surrender our representative duties, our respect for the Constitution, and when he denies to us the right to open our mouths in debate, or to offer amendments as we always have done on great measures.

Mr. HASKELL. But we offer an opportunity for debate and the printing of your amendments, and opportunity for personal explanations, and everything which is necessary to vindicate the personal standing of members upon this proposition.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. But if the bill is faulty you ought to allow it to be amended.

Mr. HASKELL. We think it is not faulty.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Then you can vote down the amendments.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HASKELL. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask it in all deference and with all respect. Is it the purpose of the gentleman to refuse this House the right to consider and vote upon any amendment that a majority of the House might probably want to put on this bill?

Mr. HASKELL. Oh, no; we do not want to deny the other side of the House the opportunity for debate or for amendment. But we want to convince that side of the House that it is good policy, that it is wise, to cease this factious opposition and to give us the bill as it is.

Mr. CAMP. Order the previous question and there will be opportunity for debate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. But that will cut off all opportunity to offer amendments. Will the gentleman from Kansas allow me to ask him this? I do not mean to refer to any sides in this House; but I believe there are amendments which the majority of this House, if it had the opportunity, would put upon this bill. Will the gentleman in charge of the bill give the majority an opportunity to do that?

Mr. HASKELL. Let me reply to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] by asking that side of the House if they will not first give us a square vote on the bill as it now stands? Then if the majority of the House desire to amend the bill——

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman undertake to deny to the majority of the House——

Mr. CAMP. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. May I be permitted just a word?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman from Kansas allow me a word?

Mr. HASKELL. I am trying to do so. I am entirely willing that this bill shall be open to debate and amendment, if the House will allow the majority first to express its opinion upon the bill as it now is.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Now will the gentleman answer me this. Here is the question——

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a single word.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to say a single word. The gentleman from Kansas has yielded to me for a question which I have not been permitted to ask.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, and the Chair will state that the regular order is on ordering the previous question, which is demanded by the gentleman from Kansas. The Chair understands this colloquy to be going on by unanimous consent only, and it is willing to indulge it provided unanimous consent is granted.

Mr. ATKINS. We have heard one side of the House on the question; now let us hear the other.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let me ask a question, and I will do it in one instant.

Mr. CAMP. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen insist on the regular order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I rise to this point of order——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman from Kansas was in possession of the floor, and very courteously yielded to me at my request to submit a question.

Mr. CAMP. Without preface?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I think I am entitled, therefore, to ask the question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas himself, except by unanimous consent, had no right to enter upon this colloquy. Of course the Chair is quite willing to recognize the gentleman from Kentucky or any other gentleman——

Mr. BLACKBURN. I hope the regular order will not be demanded.

The SPEAKER. If by unanimous consent it can be done.

Mr. BLACKBURN. One side of that colloquy has been heard, the other has not.

Mr. CAMP. I withdraw the demand for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is willing to hear the gentleman with the consent of the House. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, what I desire to say is this. I know no man in this House who is not willing to vote for any bill that looks toward the suppression of polygamous practices in any and every section of the country over which this Government holds executive jurisdiction.

I am sure, further, there is no man on this side of the House who will offer any obstruction or any dilatory motion toward the passage of this bill, which many of us believe to be bad in several regards, provided the rule adopted for the government of this House and for the government of every parliamentary body in the world is observed, which is to afford a majority of that body opportunity by amendment to perfect legislation before a vote is had upon the bill itself.

Mr. HASKELL. Let me reply to that.

Mr. McCOID. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa rises to a point of order.

Mr. HASKELL. Let me make reply to the gentleman from Kentucky, please.

Mr. McCOID. All right.

Mr. HASKELL. Now, the plea of the gentleman from Kentucky is that we may proceed under the rules of this House, and that a majority shall control whether this bill shall be amended or not. Now, I believe the majority of this House desire this bill as it is, and we offer to the gentleman from Kentucky now to call a vote on the bill as it is. If a majority of this House shall determine that they do not want this bill as it is——

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does the gentleman——

Mr. HASKELL. Hold on; let me go through. If a majority of this House determine that they do not want this bill as it is, then, of course, it is open to amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. There is no precedent for such a practice.

Mr. HASKELL. It is the rule and practice of justice.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The rule says you shall by an amendment perfect legislation before you vote finally on a bill.

Mr. HASKELL. Allow me to reply.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Is the gentleman afraid of amendment?

Mr. MILLER. Vote down the previous question if you wish to amend the bill; that is, if you have a majority.

Mr. HASKELL. We are asking a fair test of voting strength on the proposition as it is. If a majority of this House want it as it is, then we will have the amendment and consideration the gentleman requires.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In one sentence permit me to ask——

Mr. HASKELL. Nothing can be fairer.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No amendment can be put on this bill unless a majority supports it.

Mr. HASKELL. Then the majority can vote down the previous question.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And I can tell the gentleman that he will not get the previous question under the gag law.

Mr. HASKELL. In order to get at the sense of the House—the majority of the House—upon this bill, I move the previous question, which is the regular parliamentary proceeding upon the bill, and in that way I wish to test the sense of the House upon it. I therefore demand the previous question.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Which you will not get. That I can assure the gentleman.

Mr. ROBESON. I demand the regular order.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Will not the gentleman from Kansas yield to me for a suggestion? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been called for on both sides of the House.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I understand the gentleman from Kansas yields to me.

Mr. CONVERSE. I hope the House will hear the suggestion of the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the regular order has been demanded, and this proceeding having gone on by unanimous consent, the Chair is compelled to recognize that demand. The regular order is demanded for the previous question.

Mr. CONVERSE. I wish to make an inquiry of the Chair.

Mr. SPRINGER. Pending that, as the legislative day of Tuesday will begin in a few moments, I move that the House do now adjourn, so that the legislative day of Monday may end before twelve o'clock.

Mr. CONVERSE. I have a parliamentary inquiry which I wish to address to the Chair, and which may save time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. CONVERSE. I understood the Speaker to rule on yesterday that there would be debate upon this bill for thirty minutes. Now I wish to know if that debate will not be cut off if the previous question is ordered at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated on yesterday that if the previous question should be ordered there would be thirty minutes allowed for debate under the rule, fifteen minutes on each side.

Mr. CONVERSE. But I desire to call the attention of the Speaker particularly to the rule, fearing that under the operation of the previous question there can be no debate. I merely call attention to the fact in order that it shall be determined beyond doubt whether the previous question cuts off debate, or whether the debate must take place before the previous question is ordered. And in the same connection I hope my friend from Illinois will withdraw his motion to adjourn, so that we may hear the suggestion of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will withdraw the motion to adjourn for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. In response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio, the Chair will again cause to be read the third paragraph of Rule XXVIII.

The Clerk read as follows:

When a motion to suspend the rules has been seconded it shall be in order, before the final vote is taken thereon, to debate the proposition to be voted upon for thirty minutes, one-half of such time to be given to debate in favor of and one-half to debate in opposition to such proposition, and the same right of debate shall be allowed whenever the previous question has been ordered on any proposition on which there has been no debate.

The SPEAKER. Under that rule thirty minutes will be allowed for debate, to be divided equally between each side.

Mr. KASSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to ask, sir, two questions: first, whether it would not be within our province, by unanimous consent, to allow the time for debate to be extended to two hours; and secondly, if that will be satisfactory to gentlemen upon the other side?

The SPEAKER. That is for the House to determine.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If the bill is open for amendment, I have no doubt that the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa would be acceptable to every gentleman on this side of the House.

Mr. ROBESON. But suppose this House, by a decisive vote ordering the previous question, declares that it does not want the bill amended. In that event I wish to ask if two hours' debate will be satisfactory to gentlemen?

Mr. BLACKBURN. No.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. That would simply cut off all opportunity for amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ROBESON. That is what I want to ascertain from gentlemen on the other side, and the gentleman has not answered my question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. As I understand the gentleman's question, it certainly would not be satisfactory to this side of the House, in view of the fact that it cuts off all opportunity of amendment.

Mr. ROBESON. It will only do that in the event that the majority of the House do not want amendments to the bill.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I desire to make a suggestion, if the House will hear me for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the House will hear the suggestion of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have withdrawn the motion to adjourn, and hope there will be no objection to hearing the suggestion of the gentleman.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I think it must be manifest to every member present acquainted with the proceedings of this House that it will be unwise to pursue the path in the direction we are now going. It seems to me that the proposition coming from the other side to be allowed time to offer amendments and have an opportunity for debate is perfectly fair. Now, this seems so to me, I say, and I remember in previous Congresses, when the Democratic party were in the majority and we in the minority, that we fought day after day for the simple right of offering and debating amendments, and we believed then that we were right. I believe that we were right and that gentlemen insisting upon the same privilege now are also right. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now I speak only for myself. If the amendments that are offered to this bill do not meet with the approval of the House, then let the majority vote them down. I am in favor of the bill just as it is, although it may not be perfect; although it may not be all that we could desire, yet, for one, I shall vote against every amendment, for the purpose of preventing this bill from going back to the Senate, so that when it passes the House and receives the approval of the Executive it may become the law of the land. But, Mr. Speaker, we have no right, in my judgment, as a majority, to say that the minority shall not have an opportunity to offer amendments or discuss a bill of so great magnitude. And now, while I speak only for myself, I simply say I believe opportunity should be given to the gentlemen who desire to offer amendments to do so, with a reasonable time to debate, and when a majority of the House determines to close debate it has the power to do so.

Mr. KENNA. If that is agreed to the bill will be passed before night.

Mr. CONVERSE. If the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] will allow us one hour for amendments and debate under the five-minute rule and one hour further for general debate the whole thing will be closed in two hours.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. The proposition of the gentleman from Ohio I think is perfectly fair.

Mr. HASKELL. I am willing to accept that proposition.

Mr. ROBESON. Will gentlemen allow me to make a proposition?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. We all agree to the proposition which has been accepted by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. ROBESON. Will gentlemen not give us a vote, to see whether the majority of this House are willing to accept this bill without amendment. [Cries of "No!" "No!" "Regular order."] Then you are not willing to test what is the wish of the majority in this matter.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It is evident the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] wishes to filibuster. We do not want to filibuster in our action on this bill.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I move the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there were, ayes 35.

Before the negative vote was counted,

Mr. PAGE said: I ask that the offer made by the gentleman from Kansas be submitted, to see if it is accepted by the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The proposition is accepted.

Mr. CAMP. It is not accepted.

Mr. BLACKBURN. We can vote on it anyhow.

Mr. SPRINGER. We will vote down the previous question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I understand that the proposition which has been made being accepted, the motion to adjourn is withdrawn.

The negative vote on the motion to adjourn was counted; and there were noes 75.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. HASKELL. I ask unanimous consent to submit to the House a proposition that guards the rights of everybody.

Mr. HOOKER. I object.

Mr. KENNA. It does not make any difference whether one member objects or not. The proposition is accepted by this side of the House.

The SPEAKER. The proposition is not accepted unless it be by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOOKER. I reserve my right to object till I hear the proposition read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the present legislative day continue until the pending bill is disposed of; that the bill be open for amendment and debate under the five-minute rule for one hour; that at the end of that hour the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments then pending; that one hour of debate be allowed on the bill after the previous question is ordered, which hour shall be equally divided between the friends and opponents of the bill, at the end of which hour the question shall be taken on the pending amendments, the third reading, and passage of the bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is all right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the proposition which has just been read? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none; and this order is understood to be made by unanimous consent.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] withdraws his demand for the previous question. The Chair will state it will be impossible to proceed with the bill unless gentlemen will retain their seats. When the House is in order business will proceed.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to offer two amendments to the eighth section of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The hour for amendments and debate under the five-minute rule, in accordance with the order which has just been made, will now commence. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] is recognized.

Mr. KASSON. I suggest that the bill be read by sections.

The SPEAKER. That would occupy time, and perhaps would not be fair to all gentlemen who may desire to offer amendments under the order of the House.

Mr. KASSON. Unless that be done we cannot get at the amendments in their proper order.

The SPEAKER. The context of the bill will be read, so as to make the amendments understood. The Clerk will report the first amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "no" in line 1, section 8, the words "person duly convicted of being a;" so it will read:

"That no person duly convicted of being a polygamist, bigamist," &c.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire very briefly to explain the amendments which I offer, and I am sorry that circumstances do not permit a fuller explanation. I shall endeavor to make them understood, if conversation among members can be suspended long enough to enable me to make a statement.

The first amendment proposes, in the first line of the eighth section, after the word "no," to insert "person duly convicted of being a." This is to avoid disfranchisement by act of Congress without conviction of a court and jury.

The second amendment proposes to strike out the word "or," in line 1 of section 8, and to insert in lieu thereof the words "nor shall;" and to add at the end of the section the words "who shall have been duly convicted of either of said offenses."

The object of offering these amendments is that we may pass a bill which shall not be held to be a bill of pains and penalties under the Constitution, a bill of trial and conviction by an arbitrary board of supervisors under an act of Congress, without the benefit of a trial of the facts by a jury.

Article 5 of the amendments to the Constitution is as follows:

No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service in time of war or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.

Article 6 of the amendments provides:

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense.

In the third subdivision of section 9 of article 1 of the Constitution it is provided that "no bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed." For the interpretation of this provision I call attention to the comments of Mr. Justice Story on the Constitution of the United States. In paragraph 1344, volume 2, he says:

Bills of attainder, as they are technically called, are such special acts of the Legislature as inflict capital punishment upon persons supposed to be guilty of high offenses, such as treason and felony, without any conviction in the ordinary course of judicial proceedings. If an act inflicts a milder form of punishment than death it is called a bill of pains and penalties. But in the sense of the Constitution it seems that bills of attainder include bills of pains and penalties; for the Supreme Court have said a bill of attainder may affect the life of an individual, or may confiscate his property, or both. In such cases, the Legislature assumes judicial magistracy, pronouncing upon the guilt of the party without any of the common forms and guards of trial, and satisfying itself with proofs, when such proofs are within its reach, whether they are conformable to the rules of evidence or not. In short, in all such cases, the Legislature exercises the highest power of sovereignty, and what may be properly deemed an irresponsible discretion, being governed solely by what it deems political necessity or expediency, and too often under the influence of unreasonable fears or unfounded suspicion. Such acts have been often resorted to in foreign governments as a common engine of state, and even in England they have been pushed to the most extravagant extent in bad times, reaching as well to the absent and the dead as to the living.

And I will briefly call attention to two recently adjudicated cases on this exact question. The first to which I shall call attention is the case of Cummings against the State of Missouri, in 4 Wallace's Reports, page 277, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in 1866. As I do not have time in the five minutes allowed me to go into the body of the decision, I will read only a few paragraphs from the excerpts:

Under the form of creating a qualification or attaching a condition, the State cannot in effect inflict a punishment for a past act which was not punishable at the time it was committed. Deprivation or suspension of any civil rights for past conduct is punishment for such conduct. A bill of attainder is a legislative act which inflicts punishment without a judicial trial. If the punishment be less than death the act is termed a bill of pains and penalties. Within the meaning of the Constitution bills of attainder include bills of pains and penalties.

I also refer to the head-notes of the case Ex parte Garland, in the same volume, page 333, decided the same year, in which it is said:

Exclusion from the practice of the law in the Federal courts or from any of the ordinary vocations of life for past conduct is punishment for such conduct. The exaction of an oath is the mode provided for ascertaining the parties upon whom it is intended to operate.

The act being of this character partakes of the nature of a bill of pains and penalties, and is subject to the constitutional inhibition against the passage of bills of attainder, under which general designation bills of pains and penalties are included.

In the exclusion which the act adjudges it imposes a punishment for some of the acts specified which were not punishable at the time they were committed, and for other of the acts it adds a new punishment to that before prescribed, and it is thus within the inhibition of the Constitution against the passage of an ex post facto law.

I am as much opposed to polygamy as any member of this House. If gentlemen will allow proper amendments to make this bill constitutional and just and efficient I will cheerfully support it. If they refuse to allow the bill to be amended in these respects I shall vote against it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The Chair will now recognize a gentleman in opposition to the pending amendment for five minutes.

Mr. HASKELL. The proposition of the gentleman from Texas is entirely uncalled for and absolutely without necessity in this bill. All of the sections that precede section 8 provide in terms for the procedure under which these people are to be convicted of this crime. Even to the minutest details, the whole form of procedure is provided for. It is a mere multiplicity of words to provide in section 8 that "a person duly convicted of being a polygamist," &c.

Mr. TUCKER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HASKELL. Certainly.

Mr. TUCKER. Does the gentleman mean to say that a person must be convicted of polygamy before the eighth section of this bill will apply?

Mr. HASKELL. He must be proven to be a polygamist.

Mr. TUCKER. No, convicted.

Mr. HASKELL. He must be proven under the terms of the law, as the law provides. It must be established that he is guilty of the offense for which he is to be debarred the right of holding office. That is clearly expressed in this bill.

Mr. TUCKER. Then tell me whether a man can be disqualified under the eighth section without absolute judicial conviction?

Mr. HASKELL. Let the gentleman read the language of the section.

Mr. TUCKER. I want my friend to interpret his own law.

Mr. HASKELL. Certainly.

Mr. TUCKER. Then the gentleman says that he must be convicted.

Mr. HASKELL. It must be proven by competent authority (you can use what term you please) that he, the individual holding the office, is debarred under the provisions of this bill.

I am not asserting what court or what body has jurisdiction in the matter. I am merely asserting that the language of the bill is specific and clear; that under the tribunals established by the authority conferred upon the officers charged with the duty under this bill, the person must be found to be one rendered ineligible to office.

That fact is to be established precisely as any other qualification or disqualification for office or for voting is to be established; nothing more and nothing less. But to insert in section 8 of the bill a provision that the "person duly convicted," &c., is using phraseology that may apply to courts; whereas the phraseology now used in the bill may apply to a tribunal not technically a court. To put such language in this bill is simply to confuse and to mislead. The amendment has no place in the bill and should be promptly voted down.

The SPEAKER. Debate upon the pending amendment has been exhausted. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Under the order adopted by the House I supposed that these amendments were to be voted on after the expiration of the hour. Otherwise we might take up the hour in voting upon one or two amendments under the five-minute rule. I ask that the order be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will direct the order to be read if the gentleman desires to have time taken for reading it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that it be read, for it is very important.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the present legislative day continue until the pending bill is disposed of; that the bill be open to amendment and debate under the five-minute rule for one hour; that at the end of that hour the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments then pending; that one hour of debate be allowed on the bill after the previous question is ordered, which hour shall be equally divided between the friends and opponents of the bill; at the end of which hour the question shall be taken on the pending amendments, the third reading, and the passage of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is what I understand it, "the pending amendments."

Mr. CALKINS. The amendments "then pending."

Mr. REED. The order says "the amendments then pending."

Mr. KENNA. I hope gentlemen will not destroy the understanding we have reached.

Mr. REED. The understanding is expressed in the written order of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that under the order of the House these amendments must be submitted as in Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. CARLISLE. If the vote is to be taken on this amendment now, I desire to say a single word in relation to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must state that in justice to other members it would not be fair to recognize the gentleman from Kentucky to speak upon this amendment, because ten minutes' debate has been had upon it. If the Chair should allow debate to continue indefinitely on one amendment the whole hour might be consumed on that amendment.

Mr. CARLISLE. I will not consume the time of the House.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. REAGAN, it was not agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. I move to amend by striking out the eighth and ninth sections of the bill. I ask unanimous consent that I may have ten minutes to advocate this amendment and that any gentleman on the other side may have ten minutes to oppose it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to be allowed——

Mr. McLANE. I ask for the execution of the order of the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It would not be justice to other members of the House to agree to the proposition of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MILLS. I withdraw the request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] is recognized for five minutes upon his amendment.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, in common with all the people of the United States of both parties and all religious creeds outside the boundaries of Utah, I am opposed to polygamy. I am as anxious as any friend of this bill to see it pass away, and am willing to aid in the accomplishment of that end in the proper way; but I am opposed to this bill and to the methods adopted by it. While I oppose polygamy, I will not suffer myself to be led into the perpetration of a greater wrong against the whole American people. Those who profess to be greatly incensed against this "relic of barbarism" are not contented to have all the machinery of the judiciary of Utah placed in their hands, but want the Territorial government as well. They now have the governor and the judge and the district attorney and the marshal, and this bill gives them the jury. Is not that power enough to convict every polygamist and fill all the prisons in Utah? Why do they want the Legislature? If polygamy is what they want to extirpate, what do they want with the eighth and ninth sections of the bill? These sections overthrow the right of self-government and deliver the government of the Territory into the hands of a returning-board. They establish an oligarchy, not a republic. They are wholly at war with every principle of government recognized by our fathers. There is something besides polygamy that is desired to be accomplished. That is not the only sin of those unhappy people.

There are three classes who are confederated in this movement against them. There are the religionists, who are sincere. They wish polygamy uprooted, and, forgetting the history of the church and the teachings of its founder, they are trying to propagate the doctrines of Christ with the instrumentalities of Mahomet. They are mistaken, but they are honest and sincere. They wish to achieve a great good, but are traveling the wrong road to reach it. For them I have great respect, and all I would say to them is to consult once more the record of the great Teacher himself, and search diligently to see if they can find any warrant from Him for propagating the truth by the sword or by the physical power of government. He came into the world in the midst of polygamy. In His day all the peoples of the world practiced polygamy. For the first time on earth it was proclaimed by Him "they twain shall he one flesh." He and He alone established monogamy, and His apostles taught it wherever they went. His church and His doctrine have spread all over Europe and America and are spreading all over the earth. But not by the power of government; not by the conquest of the sword, but by the inherent power of the truth. The elementary principles of liberty and just government are found in His teachings. He forced no man to act with Him. Every man's action, to be acceptable to Him, had to come from his own consent. He labored to enlighten his judgment and awaken his conscience and draw him by his own consent. He treats with man everywhere as a free man, and the great lesson He taught, and the great lesson His apostles after Him taught, was the lesson of self-government.

The Pharisees taught their followers to govern other people; Christ taught them to let other people alone and govern themselves. The doctrine of one was intolerance, bigotry, and persecution; that of the other was self-knowledge, self-humiliation, self-government, and self-improvement. One is the doctrine of despotic governments; the other is the doctrine of a liberty-loving and a free people.

Again, we have among the advocates of this bill those who are incensed against the people of Utah because they are Democrats. They see the people of the Western Territories, and especially this one, growing up in the faith of the fathers. They see them voting with that party who they believe are trying to secure the happiness of the great masses of the people. They see them beyond the reach of money, and going to the polls and casting their votes against those who are using their official stations in the interests of the great moneyed power that is now dominating the country. They see Democracy spreading all over the West, and they are anxious to extirpate that. And denouncing the Democratic people of Utah as polygamists, and thus placing them beyond the sympathy of their fellow-citizens, they can proceed with their engines of persecution. The gentlemen who have concocted the scheme to disfranchise the people of Utah, or force them to abandon their Democratic convictions, will find themselves as greatly mistaken as they were when they tried the same experiment in the Southern States.

The southern people were denounced as disloyal to the Government, a sufficient number of them were disfranchised to give their local governments into the hands of negroes and carpet-baggers, in the vain hope that the spirit of the people would be broken, or, in the language of the Declaration of Independence, that they would be "fatigued" into compliance with the will of the party in power. It was a mistake and a grievous one. It only taught the people how inestimable was the principle of self-government—how cruel was the power of centralization. It intensified their Democratic convictions. They appealed to the conscience and judgment of their fellow-citizens in every section of the Union. They exposed the persecutions to which they were subjected, and by the aid of an enlightened public opinion they threw off the yoke of oppression and one by one resumed their stations in the Union of free and sovereign States.

But there remains the third party in the alliance, those who oppose polygamy because the people of Utah have some property—the patriots who question Naboth's loyalty because of Naboth's vineyard. They are to be the instruments through which the great moral reformation is to be wrought. They are to hold the offices, legislative, executive, and judicial. They are looking to their reward—in this world, not in the next. They will vote charters to railroads and other corporations through the Territorial Legislature. They will grant bounties of other people's bonds and hawk and peddle them through the streets. They will live and fatten on the spoil and plunder of the wretched people who are subjected to their power, and this will continue until an indignant public opinion shall whip them out of power, and compel Congress to restore the government to its rightful owners, the people of the Territory. By the passage of this bill all control over the local affairs of that Territory is gone from its people. They will be required to endure great suffering and sacrifices without the least power of correcting the evil. It will no longer be a government by the people for the people, but a government of robbers protected by the Federal Government while they plunder the people.

If there is one principle in our structure of free government more prominent than all others, it is that one, so often asserted, that every distinct political community is clothed with the inherent right of self-government. It was born in the throes of oppression. It is the shield and the buckler of the weak and powerless. It is a fortress and sure hiding place where the votary of liberty may find an asylum when the mailed hand of power strikes at his heart. The first compact of government formed by English-speaking people on this continent established and proclaimed it as their right and bequeathed it as an inheritance to their children. Driven from their homes and native land by persecution, intolerance, and bigotry, they purchased with their valor this vast continent and dedicated it as the home of a free and happy people—and free and happy because a self-governed people. It is the germ from which was quickened into being all the distinct political communities that to-day constitute the proud and powerful commonwealths of our National Union. It was written in the charters of all the colonies. It was stoutly maintained in all the controversies with the Crown, from Plymouth to Lexington, and all the struggles that lay between Lexington and Yorktown. It was asserted in the Declaration of Independence at the beginning of the Revolution; it was acknowledged and conceded by the Crown in the treaty of peace at the end. It was asserted in the Articles of Confederation and repeated again in the Constitution. It has kept pace with the growth of the States as they have advanced in years and increased in power.

Our fathers were born in that faith, grew to manhood, waxed old, and died in it, and left it as the most valuable legacy they could bequeath to their children. In the organization of the Northwestern Territories, the first young States that were organized and prepared for future admission with the original thirteen, it was written down and guaranteed by the pen and hand of Thomas Jefferson. It has been the ruling principle in the organization and government of all the Territories ever since, and ought to be observed as a sacred principle. The only instances where it has been departed from were in the contest about slavery and this of polygamy. With the American people consent is the foundation-stone, the bed-rock upon which all just government stands. Consent is the moral quality that legalizes all power. Every other exercise of power, under whatever pretext, is a bold usurpation. Not the consent of Virginia as to how Massachusetts shall be governed, not the consent of New York as to how North Carolina shall be governed, not the consent of all the other States as to how Rhode Island shall be governed, but the consent of each to its own government.

In national affairs, where all are to be affected, the consent of all is to be obtained, as in this House. In local affairs, where only the community is to be affected, its consent alone is to be given. These, sir, are the rights and privileges of the States that have grown to full sovereignty. Are not the rights of the people in the young States growing up to maturity equally strong? Where can you draw any line of just distinction? This principle has ever been dear to the American people, because it secured beyond peradventure the preservation of their liberties and the promotion of their happiness. As long as each community holds every sinew of power in its own hands it is secure against all oppression, because at the bidding of its own will it may correct every error or mistake. The government is but the utterance of its own voice through its own representatives. If they prove unfaithful in the discharge of public trusts, they may be arraigned at the bar of public opinion by the sovereignty of the public will, where the trust may be revoked or the wrong redressed.

But when one people are governed by another the power to oppress is in the hands of one, the suffering to be endured is in the person of another. The possessor of the power may wield it according to the amount of his passion or his prejudice. He has no responsibility to hold either his conscience or his passion in check. Over his actions his victim has no control. There is no tribunal at whose bar he can call him to account. The thunderbolt is in a hand that is lifted far beyond his reach, and when it falls it is not within his power to escape its stroke.

This is despotic government, and this is the government this bill is giving to American citizens in the Territory of Utah. But it is said that Congress has the power to govern the people as it pleases in the Territories. And the same doctrine was advanced in another legislative assembly some days ago. It is the argument of a tyrant, I care not where it is uttered. Congress has the power to do wrong, and a great wrong, but that is not a rightful exercise of power; it is an abuse of power. Congress has the power to admit a Territory into the Union, and the power to keep it out forever. It has the power to destroy its government and surrender it to anarchy. It has the power to refuse to support its people when invaded by a public enemy. It has the power to declare its peaceful inhabitants in insurrection and send an army upon them. All this is simply an abuse of power. The Government owes to every citizen, wherever he may reside, in a State or Territory, the protection of every right of citizenship, and it is a duty from which it cannot shrink without dishonor.

If a government may not shrink from the discharge of the duty of protection without dishonor, what words can characterize the act when it turns upon its people and itself becomes the oppressor. I have been taught from my earliest recollection that arbitrary power was a monster that could live in no land where the English language was spoken, much less in this land of written constitutions bristling all over with interdictions against every encroachment upon the liberties of the people. Have American citizens in the Territories no rights that Congress is bound to respect? Can Congress try them by court-martial or military commission? Can it deny them trial by jury? Can it refuse them bail? Can it forbid them the privilege of being confronted with their accusers or the compulsory process of the court to compel the attendance of their own witnesses? As American citizens we are born with these rights inhering in our persons. Do we forfeit them by leaving the parental roof in one of the States and going upon the public lands in the Territories? What a gratifying spectacle it must be to adherents of Divine right to see the American Congress striking down the right of self-government in one of the Territories, and re-enacting the odious test-oaths and bills of attainder that blotted the pages of English history in the days of the Stuarts. With what pride will they point to the outlawry of 150,000 people, and the subjection of their lives, liberty, and property to the mercy of a board of five royal regents, chosen on account of their unrelenting hostility to the unhappy people who are made their victims, by the American Congress, in the land of Washington and Adams and Jefferson.

This imperial commission is empowered to carry at its girdle the keys of death and hell. It is clothed with power to pass on the moral qualifications of every officer elected by the people, and from their judgment there is no appeal. They are vested with power to close the doors of the Legislative Assembly of the people upon their own representatives and fill the vacant seats with the product of their own spawn. This venal instrument of oppression is not wholly unknown to fame. It has left a record as indelible as infamous on the pages of our recent history. For a few dark and melancholy years it wielded an unchallenged scepter in the Southern States. It filled the legislative halls with its own creatures, and the complacent slaves without murmur registered the decrees of their masters. In my own State they took from the people the election of every executive and judicial officer. And when the legislative officers were to be chosen they surrounded the polls with the janizaries whom they had created to drive away those who came to vote for legislative officers who were not the willing instruments of their oppression. They gave the governor, whom they installed in defiance of the public will, the power to suspend the habeas corpus, and levy and collect fines upon whole communities by armed violence.

The legislative hall of the Southern States under the government of returning boards, like the temple at Jerusalem under the Roman proconsuls, became a den of thieves. Do we wish to reanimate the putrid carcass and deliver to its keeping the people of Utah? Does any one believe that the returning board will act differently? Do you think it will give certificates to the officers elected by the people? Have we not here before our eyes proof conclusive that it will exclude the officers elected by the people and give certificates to its own creatures? In the election for Delegate from Utah to Congress one candidate received 18,000 votes and the other about 1,800, and yet the chief magistrate of the Territory gave the certificate of election to the candidate who was defeated by more than 16,000 votes. If a fair trial of the polygamists is all you want, the first seven sections of the bill make ample provision for that. With the judge, the district attorney, the marshal, and the jury all in your hands you can fill all the prisons in Utah and the adjoining Territories. What more do you want? I repeat it, why do you want to overturn the Territorial government? There is something beyond a craving for a higher order of morality; there is something more than a hungering and thirsting after righteousness.

The hermits and monks that are preaching this crusade are not of those who vex their righteous souls from day to day about the immorality of this modern Sodom. Their knees are not indurated like the knees of James the Just from much kneeling. What is the real object. Tear off the mask and come out into the light of day and tell us why you want to get your hands on the Legislative Assembly of Utah. Before closing I want to call the attention of the admirers of Stephen A. Douglas to the democratic doctrine as he taught it:

> The principle under our political system is, that every distinct political community, loyal to the Constitution and the Union, is entitled to all the rights, privileges, and immunities of self-government in respect to their local concerns and internal polity, subject only to the Constitution of the United States.

That, sir, is the principle of democratic government, the principle of our fathers, and the only principle upon which we all can be free and happy and transmit the blessings of liberty to our children. Because this bill violates this fundamental principle of free government I can under no sort of circumstances give it my assent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Too late.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas, to strike out the eighth and ninth sections of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for a division of the question.

Mr. CASSIDY. I desire to be heard briefly on this point.

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

Mr. CASSIDY. I renew the amendment with a view to discuss the question. I will move to strike out the last word if that is necessary.

The SPEAKER. Debate is proceeding under the five-minute rule, and the Chair must interpret the order of the House in the light of proceedings in the Committee of the Whole House when a bill is being considered under the five-minute rule. If the gentleman insists on moving an amendment to the amendment the Chair will recognize it.

Mr. CASSIDY. I move to strike out the last word. I will move to strike out anything in order to be heard on this question. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Nevada.

Mr. CASSIDY. I desire to say to this House, Mr. Speaker, and to the country that I subscribe to every word regarding the fundamental principles of government and of local self-government as uttered and laid down by the distinguished gentleman from Texas. I adhere to the doctrine promulgated by him. But this is an exceptional case. It is a desperate case, requiring a desperate remedy. We are all agreed that polygamy should be suppressed, that it should be extirpated in Utah. But if these two sections are stricken from the bill, or if the bill should become a law without them, you might just as well not pass any law at all on the subject.

I undertake to say, sir, that the cardinal idea of this bill is to strike at the institution of polygamy so as to degrade it in Utah. That is the correct idea as far as it goes. You must set a ban upon it. You must instruct the rising generation in Utah that if they want to enjoy the blessings of local self-government so eloquently set forth by the gentleman from Texas, they must, the same as all other people, obey the laws of their country. [Applause on the Republican side.] Hence it is that I say in considering this question, no matter what phase it may assume, our main object must be to strike at polygamy so as to make it disreputable among the non-polygamous people of Utah as it is everywhere else under the sun. [Applause.] How is it now? The polygamist element in Utah hold fully nineteen-twentieths of all the offices in that Territory, municipal as well as Territorial. Practically all political power in Utah is in the hands of the polygamist element of the Mormon Church. Therefore section 8, which disfranchises and disqualifies that element from holding office there in the future, is the very essence and soul of this bill. Section 9 properly supplements section 8 by providing the proper machinery to prevent the polygamist element from "bulldozing" itself hereafter again into power; and it is equally necessary to the successful operation of the law. The bill is not perfect, I admit, but I believe it is the best this Congress will pass. Therefore I am for it in every form in which it may be presented.

Now, then, in reference to its election machinery, let me observe that it is applicable only for the first two years. I think that section of the bill is a mistake. It is entirely too tame. It does not strike deep enough; it does not go far enough. It seems to proceed on the mistaken theory that the rank and file of the Mormon Church are disloyal to their polygamist leaders. Any such idea or theory as that is a mistake.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. WHITE. I will yield my time to the gentleman from Nevada.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. The gentleman has no time to yield.

Mr. CASSIDY. I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Kentucky for his courtesy.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Kentucky has no time to yield.

The SPEAKER. The custom has been to recognize gentlemen for five minutes on either side.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. My understanding was that the gentleman from Nevada had only obtained consent of the House to offer an informal amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nevada offered an amendment on which he had a right to be heard for five minutes.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. But I submit that he did not offer an amendment which would authorize the gentleman from Kentucky to take the floor and yield him additional time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Georgia that it has been the practice to allow debate in this way on informal amendments—five minutes for and against.

Mr. CASSIDY. The gentleman from Texas was allowed ten minutes, and I appeal to the House to grant me equal time to reply to him. His time was granted by consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nevada is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CASSIDY. Now, Mr. Speaker, a great deal of sentiment has been dragged into this question with reference to the right of the people, or rather the right of the individual, to worship God Almighty in such manner as he may see fit. I have no objection to that theory as long as it is done within decent and proper limits. But I deny, Mr. Speaker, that the Mormon religion, so called, as advocated and promulgated by the lecherous element in Utah is a religion of any kind, within the true meaning of that word. I denounce it, sir, as licentiousness, as lust, as prostitution, as a parody on religion, and as a corrupt and corrupting system, utterly and absolutely unworthy of a moment's consideration on the ground of religious toleration. It is a menace to and at war with every principle of free government as established irrevocably, let us hope, in the fundamental law of the land. It knows no allegiance to the Constitution of the United States; it seeks to place Church high above State; it mocks at our institutions; it defies our laws; it condones perjury; it justifies murder and assassination, and, finally, it exalts the vilest of social evils above the decencies and proprieties of life as taught by every other civilized community on God's green earth.

Such is the Mormon Church, and such is Mormonism as we find them to-day strongly intrenched, almost beyond the legislative power of the Government to dislodge in the mountains of Utah. And their doctrines and methods are still spreading and reaching out. They have grown from a mere handful at Nauvoo to a membership of nearly two hundred thousand in the West, absolutely controlling and dominating the civil administration of Utah, and holding the balance of power between the two great political parties in all of the adjacent States and Territories. I submit that it is time that the mailed hand was applied; time that this vile monster was checked and placed in course of ultimate extinction. We cannot do this by kid-glove legislation. It requires harder blows. Somebody must be hurt. This bill hits the right class; it strikes at the authors of all the mischief and wickedness; no other element is touched. Mormons who do not indulge the luxury of a plurality of wives are left on an equal footing with the Gentiles of Utah; no better and no worse. This bill is a premium to them to behave themselves in the future; to continue to obey the laws of the land and bring order out of disorder. That is its best feature. And it must be constantly borne in mind that there are two classes of Mormons in Utah—knaves and dupes. The first are the men who have brought about the condition of things I have hurriedly and imperfectly described. The latter deserve the fostering care of the Government; they deserve to be encouraged so long as they remain law-abiding. That is what this bill does. It leaves with them the power to control and shape the destiny of the Territory. Against this latter class I have no harsh word to pronounce. As a rule they are a frugal, industrious, and well-meaning people. But they have been for years most outrageously imposed upon by the hypocritical priesthood of the Mormon Church.

There is a cause for this, and as we proceed in the consideration of this question we will do well to reason well from cause to effect. The great mass of Mormons are foreign-born. They were proselyted and transplanted from grinding poverty in the Old World to comfortable homes in Utah by the Mormon Church. The change is so marked and marvelous that they regard it as an inspiration, and praise the Mormon faith accordingly. They are incapable of explaining the betterment of their condition on any other hypothesis. Hence the deep hold which their plotting leaders have on them. All they are and all they have and all they hope to be they ascribe to the Mormon Church. They attest their fidelity and gratitude fully and unanswerably year after year by the voluntary surrender of a one-tenth part of their earnings in the shape of tithings for the maintenance of the church and the dissemination of its doctrines among the heathens here in the East and in European countries.

The plural wives of Utah are also loyal to the faith. They are so from the motive of personal interest and pride. It is the direct personal interest of these miserable women to make polygamy respectable. Having fallen into the terrible vortex of degradation, they are interested in upholding before the world the system to which their shame and misery are attributable as a part and parcel of a holy religious conviction, having for its object the redemption and sanctification of everlasting souls. They take refuge behind it as the only pretext they can offer for their deep and ineffaceable disgrace; and, above all, with a mother's love they shrink with bleeding and despondent hearts from the performance of any act calculated to bring the stigma of bastardy against their offspring. They are to be commended for this holy sentiment. I have no word of censure for these deluded mothers; for them and their deplorable condition every right-feeling and right-thinking man must entertain the most profound sympathy.

Joe Smith was the author of the Mormon religion. He invented it but left polygamy out. And Smith stole the whole plan and idea from an enterprising newspaper correspondent who had simply laid the foundation for a sensational story.

Some copper-plates bearing hieroglyphics had been deposited by the correspondent in a mound somewhere in the State of New York. Smith knew of their whereabouts. The correspondent died suddenly and Smith dug up the plates, pretended to translate the meaningless hieroglyphics, and based thereon the Book of Mormon. Thus what originally was designed to furnish the basis of a clever fiction for the Police Gazette was turned into a so-called religious creed which in less than fifty years is seriously threatening the perpetuity of the American Union! But, as I have already said, there was no polygamy in Joe Smith's new religion. The Book of Mormon consists of garbled extracts from the Old Testament, with here and there an occasional precept in not overvigorous English by Smith himself. Polygamy was an afterthought. It was one of Brigham Young's revelations after he had succeeded to the presidency of the church after the death of the prophet Joseph. Brigham set up in business as a first-class seer and revelator after he got charge of things. He so played upon the ignorance and superstition of his followers as to imbue them with a thorough belief in his divine power. Brigham was a crafty old revelator and well knew how to impress his doctrines on his people. His associates and apostles knew that he was a blasphemer, but it served their purposes to stand by him. In the language of Colonel Sellers, there was "millions in it"—likewise women to satisfy their lustful natures. These knaves formed a conspiracy against the ignorant men and women who had come over from the Old World. They played into each others' hands and managed in every way to make Brigham Young "solid" as a revelator; and in turn Brigham gave them more women and better opportunities to plunder the faithful. So well had they played this game that the unsophistocated brethren believed implicitly that Brigham after death must resurrect and come forth from the tomb, as did the Saviour of the world. It is recorded that a watch was set over his grave to witness the triumphant mounting of the golden stair by the late lamented, but he came not. The inference is that he went the other way.

Revelation was at that time, and it is to-day, the chief corner-stone of the Mormon Church. Those who believe in Mormonism at all believe especially in revelation through their apostles. Thus it is that we find Church and State so intimately blended in Utah that it is impossible to tell where the one leaves off and the other begins. Out of a total membership of thirty-seven in the Utah Legislature, recently in session in Salt Lake City, thirty-seven were members of the Mormon Church and twenty-seven had a plurality of wives. That is pretty unanimous. It shows that none but Mormons need apply. It also shows that the polygamist element is preferred. Revelation did the business. The ignorant dupes were told that it was the wish and will of the Deity that none but Mormons should be returned to the Legislature. They are told the same thing at every election. And these pretended revelations always give greatest prominence to the brethren who are living in polygamy. This is done to give tone and respectability to the lecherous element. It is also done as a defiance to the laws of the land. Brigham Young once bid Delegate Hooker, a monogamic Mormon, to stand aside, as he wanted to "cram polygamy down the throat of the American Congress." Hooker obeyed, and the cramming process began and has been prosecuted uninterruptedly down to this session. It devolves upon this body to say whether it shall be longer continued. Decent stomachs ought to revolt at the nauseating dose. For my part, I shall never swallow it, no matter in what form it may be offered.

But I want to say another word before concluding with reference to the election machinery set in motion by this bill. Gentlemen will observe that the commission provided for by this law will expire with the election of the next Territorial Legislature; that it will hold less than two years, and that it is simply the machinery for returning the next Legislative Assembly of Utah. I fear the result of this legislation, I must confess. It stops short of what should be done. Congress can never legislate as to local detail. I fear that the bigamists will continue to dominate the affairs of Utah as they have always done in the past. The life of the commission is too short. But the bill has one redeeming feature. It goes to the point of making the polygamist element disreputable in Utah, and so long as you succeed in doing that you will have taken a step in the right direction. While this bill does not in my judgment give promise of wholly eradicating this terrible blight and stain on our civilization, being largely in the line of an experiment, still it proposes to accomplish some good, and for that reason I favor it.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS,] to strike out sections 8 and 9, on which the gentleman from Indiana demanded a division.

Mr. SPRINGER. Would it now be in order to withdraw that amendment and renew it just before the previous question is ordered, with a view of having a vote upon it?

Mr. BUCKNER. I would like to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. There is an amendment pending. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist upon a division?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do insist upon it.

Mr. MILLS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MILLS. Can we now have the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly, if the House chooses to order the yeas and nays.

Mr. MILLS. But will the time consumed in calling the roll be taken from the time allowed for debate?

The SPEAKER. The rule is somewhat indefinite.

Mr. MILLS. I hope not.

Mr. HASKELL. If the Chair will permit me, the rule is not indefinite as far as this agreement is concerned, which was that at the end of one hour the previous question is ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not refer to it in that respect, but as to the manner of voting upon propositions. The first question is on striking out section 8—the Chair holding that the motion is divisible.

Mr. HOUSE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOUSE. I was not in the Hall when the arrangement was made, but my understanding of it is that there should be an hour allowed for debate. Is that correct?

The SPEAKER. An hour is to be allowed for debate after the previous question is ordered, and the previous question is to be considered as ordered at the end of the hour given for amendments and debate under the five-minute rule. The first question is on that part of the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] which proposes to strike out section 8.

The question being taken, the part of the motion which proposed to strike out section 8 was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is next on that portion of the motion which proposes to strike out section 9.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I call for the yeas and nays on that.

Mr. HOUSE. I want a record upon this. I call for the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were ayes 53, a sufficient number.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again state the question on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. It is on striking out section 9 of the bill.

Mr. HOUSE. On striking out sections 8 and 9.

The SPEAKER. A vote was taken on that part of the motion which proposed to strike out section 8, and it was lost.

Mr. HOUSE. The thing was not understood. I hope gentlemen will allow us a record on both amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated, on the demand of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] that the question was divisible, and first put the question on striking out section 8 of the bill. That was voted down. Thereupon the Chair put the question on the second part of the proposition, which was to strike out section 9. On that the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. HOUSE. There was a great deal of confusion, and I understood the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] had withdrawn his call for a division of the question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand him to do so.

Mr. HOUSE. And that the question was put on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to strike out both sections. It was on that understanding I called for the yeas and nays, so as to get a record on the proposition to strike out both sections. I think under the circumstances we ought to be allowed to have a yea-and-nay vote on the question of striking out both sections.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask that unanimous consent be given that the yeas and nays be called on both sections.

Mr. ROBESON. All right.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit that proposition. He will say, however, he understood the gentleman from Indiana to insist on a division of the question, and he accordingly put the question first on striking out the eighth section.

Mr. HAZELTON. The gentleman from Indiana did so insist.

The SPEAKER. Is there unanimous consent that the yeas and nays shall be called on the question of striking out both sections 8 and 9?

Mr. SPRINGER. Not one vote on both, but that the yeas and nays shall be taken on each section.

The SPEAKER. The proposition is that they shall be taken on the question of striking out both sections.

Mr. AIKEN. I object.

Mr. HOUSE. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOUSE. Is it in order to move to reconsider the vote on the question of striking out section 8?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would be in order to move to reconsider the vote by which that portion of the motion of the gentleman from Texas which proposed to strike out section 8 was lost.

Mr. HOUSE. I make that motion. I do so because I did not understand the question when it was put.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that that motion, while in order, is not now in order, the yeas and nays having been ordered on the motion to strike out section 9 of the bill.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to reconsider the vote ordering the yeas and nays on the proposition to strike out the ninth section.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. MOULTON. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOULTON. My inquiry is whether the time consumed in calling the yeas and nays comes out of the hour for debate?

The SPEAKER. It does.

The question was then taken on the motion to strike out the ninth section, and there were—yeas 88, nays 140, not voting, 64; as follows:

So the House refused to strike out section 9 of the bill.

The following pairs were announced:

Mr. FORNEY with Mr. WEST.

Mr. KETCHAM with Mr. COX of New York.

Mr. PIERCE with Mr. BARBOUR.

Mr. W. A. WOOD with Mr. LATHAM.
Mr. BINGHAM with Mr. ELLIS.
Mr. GODSHALK with Mr. DUNN.
Mr. BOWMAN with Mr. ALLEN.
Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, with Mr. TALBOTT.
Mr. SCOVILLE with Mr. CROWLEY.
Mr. HOUK with Mr. WHITTHORNE.
Mr. CORNELL with Mr. HARDY.
Mr. SMITH, of Illinois, with Mr. BUCKNER.
Mr. CULBERSON with Mr. LINDSEY.
Mr. SPARKS with Mr. HENDERSON.
Mr. SHERWIN with Mr. BRAGG.
Mr. DEZENDORF with Mr. WISE of Virginia.
Mr. HEILMAN with Mr. KLOTZ.
Mr. ANDERSON with Mr. BLOUNT.
Mr. ATHERTON with Mr. UPDEGRAFF of Ohio.
Mr. MCKINLEY with Mr. WHEELER.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I desire to state that if the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] was present he would vote "ay," and I should vote "no," on this question.

Mr. HASKELL moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSE] intimated his purpose to move to reconsider the vote by which the House rejected that portion of the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] which proposed to strike out section 8 of this bill.

Mr. HOUSE. I make that motion.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The question recurred upon striking out section 8 of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that the hour allowed under the special order of the House, adopted by unanimous consent this morning for amendment and for debate under the five-minute rule, has expired. In further execution of that order an hour will be now allowed for debate on the bill, to be divided equally between the friends and opponents of the bill. The Chair would hold that the amendment to strike out section 8 of the bill would be pending at the conclusion of the hour for debate on the bill.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Was not the agreement that one hour should be allowed to debate amendments under the five-minute rule?

The SPEAKER. That time has expired.

Mr. HOUSE. It was not understood in that way on this side of the House, so I am informed by gentlemen who were here when the order was made. I was not here at that time.

The SPEAKER. It was clearly understood that no amendment could be offered except within the hour for amendment and debate under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. With a view of raising the question whether the hour has expired I rise to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that the hour for amendments has expired.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. From that decision of the Chair I appeal.

Mr. CALKINS. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. HASKELL. I ask that the order of the House be read.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I propose to read the order on my appeal from the decision of the Chair. I believe I have the floor on my appeal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman submitted an amendment, and the Chair ruled it out of order.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. And I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] rose and stated that he proposed to offer an amendment. The Chair ruled that the hour had expired under the special rule adopted by unanimous consent of the House this morning, and that it is not now in order to offer an amendment. From that decision of the Chair the gentleman from Georgia appeals, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] moves to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Can a gentleman be taken from the floor by a motion to lay his appeal on the table?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman was not recognized to debate, and the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] is not debatable.

Mr. HASKELL. It was a fair proposition, to which you all agreed, and I think you had better stand by your agreement.

The question was taken upon laying the appeal on the table; and it was agreed to upon a division—ayes 118, noes 38.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I want to know whether our right to offer amendments has been exhausted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so holds, and that is just what the House has held by the vote just taken.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I desire to inquire of the Chair whether he will now recognize me to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot do so under the rule adopted by the House this morning.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Of course all I have to say is that the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. HASKELL,] having learned by his frontier life to be very successful in trapping animals, has come here and trapped the Democracy very successfully. [Laughter.]

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I desire to inquire of the gentleman in charge of this bill whether he is willing amendments shall be offered and voted on after the hour of discussion is over, without any discussion upon those amendments?

Mr. HASKELL. The House has decided that no more amendments shall be offered. There is one amendment now pending, which will be voted upon at the end of the hour for debate. That is the amendment of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS,] to strike out the eighth section of the bill. That amendment is the only one that can be now voted on.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. It is very evident that there was a misconception of the order of the House.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I ask consent to have printed in the RECORD some amendments which I desired to offer to this bill.

The SPEAKER. As a portion of the remarks of the gentleman?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SINGLETON] asks consent to print in the RECORD some amendments which he proposed to offer to this bill.

There was no objection, and leave was granted accordingly.

The amendments prepared by Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois, are as follows:

Substitute for section 3:

"That if any male person in a Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction hereafter cohabits with more than one woman at the same time he shall be deemed guilty of bigamy, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than two hundred and fifty nor more than one thousand dollars, and imprisoned not less than one year nor more than five years, in the discretion of the court. If any person, male or female, in any Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, shall be guilty of the crime of adultery or fornication, every such person, male or female, shall on conviction thereof be punished as herein provided in case of conviction for bigamy. And any person or persons in any said Territory or place, male or female, who shall, by frequenting houses of ill-fame or by gross and scandalous public indecency, thus be guilty of open and notorious lewdness, shall on conviction be fined not less than two hundred and fifty nor more than five hundred dollars, and imprisoned not less than three months nor more than six months. And for every offense in this act punishable by fine and imprisonment the person convicted shall be committed until the fine and costs are paid, and be forever disqualified and ineligible for election or appointment to, or be entitled to hold any office, clerkship, or place of public trust, honor, or emolument under or for any such Territory or place, or under the United States or any department or officer thereof."

Amendments to section 5:

First line, after the word "polygamy," insert "adultery, fornication, open and notorious lewdness."

Strike out all after the word "challenge," in line 20, to and including the word "mentioned," in line 29.

Insert after the word "ground," in line 27, the words "or any other."

After the word "him," in line 28, strike out to the end of the section.

Amendment to section 6:

Strike out all after the word "act," in line 3.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I repeat again that I think the order of the House was misunderstood.

Mr. HASKELL. I ask that the Clerk again read the order of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again read the special rule adopted by unanimous consent this morning, under which an hour for debate will now be allowed upon this bill.

The Clerk again read the special order.

Mr. HARDENBERGH. I desire to submit a proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it cannot be offered now. By virtue of the special rule there is now one hour for debate. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] is recognized to control one-half of that time.

Mr. HASKELL. I desire that the other half of the time shall be yielded to some gentleman of the opposition. I prefer that gentlemen on the other side should now go on with their remarks if they are ready.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize a gentleman who states he is opposed to the bill. [Mr. CONVERSE rose.] The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] is recognized for thirty minutes in opposition to the bill.

Mr. CONVERSE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. HAMMOND.]

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire in the brief time allowed me to submit any argument upon this bill. I simply wish to call attention to the unfair way in which it is presented to this House. I rose four times to get recognition to submit two amendments to the first section of the bill, amendments which I honestly thought and still think ought to be made. Under the agreement as executed, this side of the House has had but fifteen minutes for debate. I grant that under a rigid construction of the rules that may be correct; but treating this agreement in the light of when and how it was made, having in view the giving of opportunity to put in all amendments and to have them voted upon, that the sense of the House might be obtained, I say that the construction put upon this agreement by the other side of the House operates as a cheat and deception to this side of the House. And I was right when I moved at ten minutes before twelve o'clock that the House should adjourn and be prayed for. This illustration shows that the other side of the House needed the prayers of the Chaplain, who usually prays, "O Lord, overrule all that may be done here."

Mr. CONVERSE. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BUCKNER.]

Mr. BUCKNER. Mr. Speaker, I will not occupy any part of the short time allowed me in declaring my horror of the great crime of polygamy or any of the kindred crimes from which society suffers in this country. I shall oppose this bill because, great as the wrong of polygamy is, I believe that this bill, taking in view its objects and the means by which it attempts to extirpate polygamy, is a still greater wrong upon the Constitution of this country and the rights of the people. I wanted to offer a proposition here declaring that this bill is not intended to interfere with the rights already accrued of any person or persons. I meant by that proposition to have this House declare that this bill was not gotten up as a trick for the purpose of operating as a bar to the claim of Mr. Cannon in the pending election case of Cannon against Campbell. I believe, and I am sorry to say I believe, that one of the main purposes for which this bill is being pushed through this House with such unseemly haste is that it may be brought up (as it can be if the other side is willing to forego all right and justice) to foreclose the case of Cannon vs. Campbell and to give countenance to that great wrong committed against the right of suffrage by a weakling executive at the command of somebody, I know not whom.

That amendment would have been a very reasonable one if this bill has no such purpose. It proposed to declare that "nothing in this act shall be so construed as to be retroactive in its operation or affect the rights of any person or persons which have accrued prior to its passage." Now, will my friend from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] or my friend from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] say that when this bill has become a law, and when the question comes up on the election case of Cannon vs. Campbell, they will not offer this act as a bar against the rights of Mr. Cannon?

Mr. CALKINS. I will answer the gentleman for myself very promptly. My report, which the gentleman will find upon the files of this House, gives the views of myself and a majority of the Committee on Elections; and those views are based upon a very different ground from that which the gentleman from Missouri now assumes. I am entirely satisfied with the ground taken in my report, and shall stand upon it in that case, not upon this bill.

Mr. BUCKNER. If the gentleman can vote to keep out Mr. Cannon, then I can see very well how he can vote for the enormity in this bill which gives to a board of canvassers to be appointed by the President the very same infamous power exercised by the Executive of the Territory to determine who are to vote and who are to be voted for. In our great aversion for the crime of bigamy or polygamy we are by this bill putting in the hands of five men the power not only to say who is a bigamist or polygamist in that Territory, but who is entitled to vote and be voted for—to declare after a man has been voted for whether he is a fit man to receive the suffrages of the community. That is the power conferred by this bill.

I hope that my friends on the other side will not bring this bill up to influence that election case; but I say the bill is broad enough to be used in that way, and I have a fear that the object in pushing it with such hot haste is that it may be used for that very purpose of deciding finally the question involved in that election case. By the amendment which I wished to offer my object was to preclude any such possibility.

Mr. CALKINS. So far as I am concerned, I beg the gentleman not to cast that imputation upon me, because I am entirely satisfied with the report made long before this bill came to this House, and before I knew what its provisions were.

Mr. BUCKNER. I can see no reason why this bill should now be pushed with this extreme haste. We have not been allowed to show the reason why we cannot vote for the bill. Why should a measure of this kind, directed against a crime which has been in existence for thirty years, be pushed in this way, suddenly and without debate? I will not say by a trick, although by what practically operates as a trick we on this side have been deprived of the opportunity to vote upon propositions which we wished to submit.

I repeat that the provisions of this bill are broad enough when they become law to be used as a means of deciding the election case now pending from the Territory of Utah; and I venture to say that when the case comes up this bill will be used not for the purpose of putting in Mr. Campbell, (for that my friends on the other side will hardly be able to do,) but for the purpose of excluding Mr. Cannon, who is as much entitled to a seat on this floor as I am.

Mr. CONVERSE. I now yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire in a portion of this time to explain the vote I shall give on this bill, and if I have any time left I will yield it to the gentleman from West Virginia, [Mr. KENNA.]

To all that part of this bill which is directed against the institution of polygamy I give my hearty assent. There are other portions of the bill which I think are utterly unnecessary to the extirpation of that crime. I have endeavored to strike out one of those portions by voting to strike out the ninth section, which vacates all registration, election, and canvassing officers and appoints, through the President and Senate, a board of commissioners which is authorized to appoint all such officers. That effort being of no avail, I shall take the bill with all its objections, in order that we may get the good even at the risk of doing a wrong in other respects.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order. I call my colleague to order. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] was authorized to dispose of thirty minutes to those opposed to this bill and not to those who advocated it. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio took the floor for thirty minutes, and he must choose his own instrumentality for opposing this bill. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it fair when only thirty minutes have been allotted to this side of the House in which to oppose this bill, five minutes of that time shall be given, not to the opposition of the bill, but to one who avows that he will vote in favor of the passage of the bill? Is it right that my colleague shall take up five minutes belonging to the opponents of the bill in support of its passage? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The disposal of the time is in the hands of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Is it not unfair? Is it not unjust?

The SPEAKER. The Chair was particular in asking the gentleman from Ohio whether he desired to control the time in opposition to the bill, and he replied that he did. Beyond that the Chair has no further control over the matter.

Mr. SPRINGER. Not desiring to give offense to my colleague, and conceding that his point of order is well taken, I will not further explain my vote, but will yield the remaining portion of my time to the gentleman from West Virginia, [Mr. KENNA.] I hope, however, this interruption will not be taken out of my time.

The SPEAKER. The interruption by the point of order will not be taken out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. SPRINGER. How much time, then, has the gentleman from West Virginia?

The SPEAKER. Three minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. Very well; I yield him that time, and only ask that section 9, which I have voted to strike out, shall be printed in the RECORD. The section is as follows:

That all the registration and election offices of every description in the Territory of Utah are hereby declared vacant; and each and every duty relating to the registration of voters, the conduct of elections, the receiving or rejection of votes, and the canvassing and returning of the same, and the issuing of certificates or other evidence of election, in said Territory, shall, until other provision be made by the Legislative Assembly of said Territory as hereinafter by this section provided, be performed, under the existing laws of the United States and of said Territory, by proper persons who shall be appointed to execute such offices and perform such duties by a board of five persons to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, not more than three of whom shall be members of one political party, and a majority of whom shall be a quorum. The members of said board so appointed by the President shall each receive a salary at the rate of $3,000 per annum, and shall continue in office until the legislative assembly of said Territory shall make provision for filling said offices as herein authorized. The secretary of the Territory shall be the secretary of said board, and keep a journal of its proceedings, and attest the action of said board under this section. The canvass and return of all the votes at elections in said Territory for members of the Legislative Assembly thereof shall be returned to said board, which shall canvass all such returns and issue certificates of election to those persons who, being eligible for such election, shall appear to have been lawfully elected, which certificate shall be the only evidence of the right of such persons to sit in such assembly: Provided, That said board of five persons shall not exclude any person otherwise eligible to vote from the polls on account of any opinion such person may entertain on the subject of bigamy or polygamy, nor shall they refuse to count any such vote on account of the opinion of the person casting it on the subject of bigamy or polygamy; but each house of such assembly, after its organization, shall have power to decide upon the elections and qualifications of its members. And at or after the first meeting of said Legislative Assembly whose members shall have been elected and returned according to the provisions of this act, said Legislative Assembly may make such laws, conformable to the organic act of said Territory and not inconsistent with other laws of the United States, as it shall deem proper concerning the filling of the offices in said Territory declared vacant by this act.

Mr. KENNA. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, that I shall occupy as much time even as that, and I trust my friend from Illinois will allow me to consume such time as I may without interruption, although my favor of the objects of the bill and my opposition to certain of its provisions may subject me to the same objection which he urged to his colleague.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Then I will make it.

Mr. KENNA. Mr. Speaker, I am very heartily in favor of the objects which are sought to be accomplished by this bill. The suppression of polygamous practices is simply the suppression of crime against the laws and institutions of the country. I desire to say, likewise, for the people of my district and State, that they are without exception, as far as I know, in favor of such constitutional legislation by Congress as shall wipe out polygamy forever. I concur in that sentiment. But, as my friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] has so forcibly said, I do not desire in suppressing polygamy to suppress the Constitution of my country. The fifth, eighth, and ninth sections of this bill involve constitutional difficulties which combine to prevent the unanimous indorsement which this House would, but for them, have been glad to give to this bill, as it a short time ago gave to another bill looking in the same direction. Those sections disqualify men for opinion's sake, although they may never have violated any law of the country or of God or man. Those sections destroy the Territorial government and, because of the transgressions of 2,500 to 3,000 polygamists, throw 140,000 people into anarchy for two years, without government, without the enforcement of law and order, and with no hope of relief or remedy until at the end of that time the Territorial Legislature shall meet. Those sections organize a returning board of five men who, without let or hinderance, are to be practically the custodians of all power in the Territory. They confer on these five men an arbitrary authority which, from the experiences of the past, I shall never vote to confer on any man or set of men on earth. And they go further. The eighth and ninth sections of the bill by their express terms present ex post facto laws and bills of attainder. They are unconstitutional—so believed by me, so held by the United States Supreme Court in the cases of Cummings vs. Wallace, 277, Garland vs. Wallace, 333, and a number of other cases decided and reported which are accessible to this House and to the country. Mr. Speaker, the majority of this House could easily have permitted such reasonable amendment of this bill as would have relieved it of all constitutional difficulty and secured its passage by a splendid unanimity. They have refused to do so; and thus among the strongest friends of the purposes of the bill there are those who like myself are constrained by constitutional difficulties which a few slight amendments would have avoided, however distasteful the necessity may be, to deny the bill, in its present form, their votes. In voting no for the reasons stated, and over which I have no control, I desire distinctly to say that if the bill should not pass as it stands, and should upon a reconsideration be amended so as to eliminate its retroactive character, thus avoiding conflict with the Constitution of the country, I will heartily give my vote to this bill, or any other constitutional measure which will make polygamy impossible now, henceforth, and forever.

Mr. CONVERSE. I now yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, like all the gentlemen who have spoken on this question, I am heartily in favor of the purpose of the bill although I deprecate its methods. No gentleman on this floor has a greater horror of polygamy than I have. It is a blot on our civilization and I would gladly vote for any bill that would extirpate it root and branch, provided the bill were so drawn as not to violate principles that ought to be inviolable in our legislation. I believe it is in our power to frame such a law. We could do this here and now if we were permitted to discuss this bill and amend it. This we are not permitted to do. We are forced under the gag-rule to vote for this bill without amendment, vote for it with all its obnoxious features, or vote against it. I accept the responsibility and I will record my vote against it. I know that the gentlemen who have had the power to cut off amendments have the power to pass it and will pass it, but they shall not force me to vote for a retroactive law. They shall not force me to vote for a returning board. I do not deny the power of Congress to disfranchise the polygamists of Utah. Congress has full power of legislation over the Territories—it has full power to say that polygamists shall not vote or be elected hereafter to office in Utah. I favor that feature of this bill. I believe we have full power to abolish the present government of Utah and govern it by a commission. I would prefer to do this: to destroy every office in Utah rather than resort to the odious method of preserving an office and legislating the officer—the particular incumbent—out of an office to which he was legally elected. Cannon, who claims to be delegate from Utah, claims that he was elected, elected by 15,000 votes. If he was, he had the right under the law as it then stood to be elected—the right under our laws to hold the office. Shall we now say, as this bill in effect says, the office of delegate shall stand, but the officer who was lawfully elected and lawfully qualified to fill it shall not hold it? Shall we, because the public mind is excited over the question of polygamy, violate sound principles of legislation?

This kind of legislation is most eloquently denounced by Chancellor Kent, in the case of Dash vs. Van Kleeck, 7 Johnson's Reports, 506. I will read from it:

> There is no distinction in principle nor any recognized in practice between a law punishing a person criminally for a past innocent act or punishing him civilly by divesting him of a lawfully acquired right. The distinction consists only in the degree of the oppression, and history teaches us that the government which can deliberately violate the one right soon ceases to regard the other.

In this same case that eloquent lawyer shows that this odious retroactive legislation is condemned by the Roman law, condemned by the French law, condemned by the common law, and that in every civilized system of jurisprudence it is looked upon with "disgust and indignation."

Then, Mr. Speaker, this bill provides that there shall be appointed by the President a board of five, who shall have power to appoint all the officers of elections, and these officers shall have full power to decide who shall vote and who shall be entitled to seats in the Territorial Legislature, and that without any right of appeal except to the very Legislature which is the creature of these officers. Sir, this is the Louisiana returning-board over again. It is worse still. That infamous returning board in Louisiana had only the power to throw out votes. This board has the power not only to throw out votes but to throw overboard the candidates who are voted for. It is true, sir, the bill provides that the board shall not be all of one party, that not more than three of the five shall belong to one party. That will be three to two. Is this any better than eight to seven?

Sir, I have denounced returning-boards a hundred times. Shall I now, by this very political party I have so often arraigned for resorting to such methods, be compelled to vote for a returning-board myself? No, sir; never! Never will I sanction by my vote such a sham, such a hollow mockery of liberty, as setting up a semblance of republican government and giving a board of five men and their appointees all the substance of power—the power to undo whatever the voters have done; the power to mold and shape the politics of a Territory to suit themselves. If gentlemen on the Republican side of this House are unable to frame a bill to suppress the evils of polygamy without violating every sound principle of legislation, let them open the bill to amendment, and we will perfect it for them.

Mr. CONVERSE. Mr. Speaker, we have now exhausted about fifteen minutes on our side, and I think it only fair that some time should be consumed by those who favor the bill.

Mr. HASKELL. Very well; I have no objection to that. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] as a friend of the measure.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, anxious as I am to eradicate polygamy, I would not vote for this bill if I thought there was an element in it that was antagonistic to the Constitution or antagonistic to the principles of religious liberty. The entire ground of the controversy raised here has been gone over in the Senate during the consideration of this bill before that body; and those who were among its ablest advocates, and most zealous supporters are some of the best constitutional lawyers in that body and most trusted leaders in the Democratic party. They have answered every cavil and every quibble like those that have been interposed here, and their able arguments have demonstrated beyond all controversy that the allegation that this bill is unconstitutional, or that it is an infringement upon the religious liberty of any person or class of persons, is utterly unfounded. From the debates in the Senate I confess I have gathered instruction which has aided me in reaching a conclusion on this subject.

There are two prime questions which ought to be fully and satisfactorily settled. The first is, have we the power to pass such a bill? and the second question is one of policy.

Now, I defy any gentleman to put his finger upon a single provision that is in conflict with the Constitution, or one which does not clearly and unquestionably come within the jurisdiction of Congressional legislation.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Permit me, then, to answer my colleague.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Not now; I cannot yield. I have but a few minutes allotted to me.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I only want to answer my colleague and place my finger upon such a provision.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I regret I cannot permit interruption for want of time, but the gentleman will have opportunity to answer me in his own time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS,] during the course of his remarks, referred to the views of Stephen A. Douglas. Before I had reached the years of majority I followed the political teaching and yielded my convictions to the judgment and opinions of that great man upon political questions. I have not forgotten those teachings, and I never will, and I challenge the gentleman from Texas to show an utterance of Stephen A. Douglas denying the power of Congress, while keeping within the pale of the Constitution, to enact such laws and establish such a government in the Territories as its discretion may dictate, provided, of course, it is Republican in character. He contended as a question of policy that the people of the Territories should be permitted to govern themselves with regard to slavery, &c., but he never denied the power of Congressional legislation on all such questions. We are not legislating for a sovereign State clothed with the rights, independence, and sovereignty guaranteed and reserved in the tenth amendment of the Constitution, but we are legislating for one of the Territories. We are legislating for a mere creature and dependence of Congress. Will it be denied that Congress has the power to repeal any or all the laws in force in the Territories, abolish any or all the courts, juries, Legislative Assemblies, and systems of election in the Territories, annihilate and wipe them all out of existence and establish a new system or new order of things? If we have that power, why have we not also the power to modify the existing laws of the Territories, to prescribe the qualifications of voters and to prescribe the qualifications of jurors as provided in the eighth and ninth sections of this bill.

One of the principle objections urged against the bill upon constitutional grounds is that the eighth section excludes polygamist, bigamist, and persons cohabiting with more than one woman, from voting or holding office in the Territories or any place where the United States has exclusive jurisdiction.

Now, sir, no one will be bold enough to deny that Congress at the original organization of a Territorial government may establish such machinery and control of elections by commissioners and boards of canvassers as in its wisdom it may think it just to prescribe. No one will deny that at such original organization it would be competent in Congress to pass precisely the section now under consideration. If this is so, why may we not provide this election machinery for the purpose of restoring a republican form of government to a body of people from among whom it has been displaced?

Congress gets its power to legislate for the Territories from this provision of the Constitution:

The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the Territory or other property belonging to the United States.

This provision of the Constitution received a construction by our Supreme Court as far back as in the case of Gratiot vs. The United States, 14 Peters, where this language was used:

The term "territory" as here used, is merely descriptive of one kind of property and is equivalent to the word "lands." And Congress has the same power over it as over any other property belonging to the United States, and this power is vested in Congress without limitation, and has been considered the foundation upon which the Territorial governments rest.

This has been repeatedly followed since by undivided courts.

Why, sir, if you will turn to the Revised Statutes you will find that it has been the law ever since 1850 that the legislative acts of the Territories shall be submitted to Congress for its approval or disapproval. Congress has on several occasions under this law disapproved of and set aside acts of Territorial Legislatures. No act of the Territories have force unless acquiesced in by Congress, and is subject to repeal by Congress at any time. Every man who votes, holds office, or sits on a jury in Utah to-day does so by permission of Congress, or because Congress has not heretofore repealed or disapproved of the territorial enactments which confer those privileges upon him. We are only exercising this power of repeal or modification now.

Some persons labor under the impression that the right of suffrage once conferred cannot afterward be annulled. This impression is erroneous. Suffrage is not a natural or inalienable right, as was held by the Supreme Court; it is not a right conferred by the Constitution of the United States, but comes by the power of State constitution in the States and by act of Congress in the Territories. By a change in its constitution a State may disfranchise voters. Indeed, under some of the reconstruction measures persons were deprived of the right to hold office and of the right to hold property. This action, in my opinion, however, was unconstitutional. The decision in the case of Senator GARLAND, of Arkansas, who had been denied the right to practice law in the Supreme Court of the United States by acts of Congress on account of services rendered in aid of the rebellion, has been relied upon for the purpose of showing this to be in the nature of a bill of attainder; but Senator GARLAND himself, while defending this bill the other day, when his own experience and the case mentioned had been alluded to, said:

Whatever may be my individual opinion in reference to the decisions on those propositions as applicable to a State, they have no application in the Territories. Here, by the Constitution, and by the construction of the Constitution, it is clear that your power is unlimited; more than that, under the acts under which these Territories are now living and operating by a law of Congress already passed, their Territorial enactments may be any time disapproved and rejected by Congress.

Now the right of suffrage in Utah was not conferred by a constitutional provision, but was granted by a Congressional enactment. All acts of Congress are repealable. There is no similarity between the privileges and powers conferred on citizens of the Territories or the District of Columbia and the irrepealable right of suffrage in the States, which can only be changed by action resorting to the original and primary assemblage of the people in a constitutional convention. Therefore, when we find, as we do in this Territory, that suffrage is made use of as an instrument of oppression, as a means of overthrowing republican government and the establishment of a hierarchy hostile to the laws of Congress, the Constitution, and the Government of the United States, I maintain the time has arrived when Congress should exert its power to modify or limit that suffrage in such a way as to preserve free government, and enforce the power and paramount sovereignty of the Federal Government.

But, sir, it is unnecessary further to discuss the power of Congress to enact this bill into law. I will content myself by citing a precedent for it which was established under the conservative and Democratic administration of James Monroe, by a Democratic Congress which contained some of the ablest constitutional lawyers that have ever occupied seats in either branch of Congress. I refer to the act of Congress passed in 1821 providing a government for Florida. The second section of that act provided:

That, until the end of the first session of the next Congress, unless provision for the temporary government of said Territories be sooner made by Congress, all the military, civil, and judicial powers exercised by the officers of the existing government of the same Territories shall be vested in such person and persons, and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct for the maintaining the inhabitants of said Territories in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion; and the laws of the United States relating to the revenue and its collection, subject to the modification stipulated by the fifteenth article of the said treaty, in favor of Spanish vessels and their cargoes, and the laws relating to the importation of persons of color, shall be extended to the said Territories.

This bill falls far short of the law passed by Congress for the Territory of Florida. In that case Congress concentrated the judicial, legislative, and executive powers in the hands of one man, gave unlimited authority over the lives and property of the people to a Presidential appointee.

I have no doubt whatever of the power of Congress to enact this law, nor do I believe, after full and careful consideration, that any one will reach a different conclusion.

Now, as to the policy of this law. It is indeed an extreme and severe measure, and one to which I have given my assent with reluctance, but I appreciate the fact that we face a great evil—one which strikes at the foundation of morality, of society, and of civilization. As abhorrent as the practice of polygamy is, however, Mormonism as we find it in Utah presents a more dangerous feature from a political aspect. It threatens the existence of free institutions.

Go into Utah to-day, and what kind of a government do you find there? You find a hierarchy antagonistic to your Government and antagonistic to republican principles of government. It has reared its head in that distant Territory, sheltered itself behind the mountains, and defies the power of Congress to suppress it. It has driven out republican form of government. The semblance and fact of a republican form of government has been displaced in Utah. The Government which Congress established is ignored and defied. The Constitution is scorned. The only government which exists there is a theocratic system, a hierarchy. All who know anything of the situation there must know that it is the Mormon Church which governs that Territory, a most intolerant un-American government, which claims to be higher than the Constitution and laws of the United States.

Will you, the representatives of the people, charged by the Constitution with the duty of seeing that none but republican forms of government shall be established or permitted to exist in this free land, will you refuse or neglect to strike down this enemy of our institutions, this enemy of our civilization? This bill does not interfere with or restrict the freedom of religious opinion. We have no power and no purpose to deprive any Mormon or other person of the right to believe as he will regarding religion. This bill is not aimed at religious conviction or a belief in the holiness of polygamy; it is only aimed at the practice of polygamy, a degrading, sinful, lustful practice, which destroys the purity of home, which degrades women to the office of a breeding animal. But they claim that they are discharging a religious obligation enjoined upon them by the inspiration of Brigham Young. As has been well said by another:

Let it go to the world that that Territory is organized on the theory that a man can govern himself because he is inspired by God to a certain course, and you may as well abolish all your statute-books and dispense with your law-making power.

The assassin Guitean claims that he performed his devilish deed in obedience to an inspiration.

A wise man, on returning from travel in Asia, where he studied the systems of government and institutions found there, has said:

No one who is aware how closely they are connected can deny the influence which the better or worse condition of the domestic relations has on those of the society at large. The popular saying, that a republic to be permanent must be founded on virtue, appears to be only a consequence of the more general principle that civil freedom is closely connected with morality, and that the one inevitably perishes with the other. Now there is no one custom more adverse to virtue in general, especially the domestic virtues, the chief sources of all true patriotism, than that of polygamy. By this many explain the phenomenon that no nation practicing polygamy has ever attained to a true republican constitution, nor even that of a free monarchy.—Professor Heeren's Historical Researches.

The observation is as applicable to the Mormon theocracy in Utah as it is to the sway of the Mohammedans.

In my remarks of yesterday I expressed the fear that this bill may not prove effectual in extirpating polygamy in that Territory, but, as I then said, it is a step in the right direction, and I am willing to try it. The condition of affairs has been for years such as to require a change—they have grown so bad that they cannot in safety to society and good government longer be tolerated. The Republican Administrations of the Government for twenty years have neglected to correct these growing evils. The situation is nearly as bad as it was when the last Democratic Administration enjoyed by this country sent the army to Utah and at the point of the sword compelled obedience and respect for our national authority. We have for years had it from the most reliable sources that if another government is not substituted in that Territory the authority of the Army of the United States would have to be brought there. As a lover of liberty I abhor military government; therefore I would exhaust every means of the civil power. I would resort to every expedient within the domain of legislation before exerting military force among any people under our flag.

I believe this bill is a needful rule and regulation for the proper and wise government of that Territory, and, so believing, I shall cast my vote in favor of its passage. This is a desperate case, but the old adage is that "desperate cases require desperate remedies."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Then I ask the privilege of extending my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBESON. I trust there will be unanimous consent that other gentlemen may extend their remarks, if they desire, upon this question.

Mr. KENNA. Let that apply to everybody.

Mr. HASKELL. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. MCCOID.]

Mr. McCOID. I will not occupy five minutes' time. All that I intended to say has been already said by gentlemen who have spoken upon this subject. I only want to add that I think we are justified in taking a bill of this character from the Speaker's table, a bill that has had in the Senate so much careful consideration, and with the knowledge we have of the discussion of several weeks that preceded its passage, I say that we are justified in my judgment in taking this bill from the Speaker's table and putting it upon its passage, for the reason that in the crowd of business coming into the House its passage might be prevented at a future time.

I think, therefore, the gentlemen upon the other side have not been justified in their opposition to the bill at this time. The combined opposition of a sect in Utah is of a sufficiently insurrectionary character to justify us in using the means provided in the eighth and ninth sections to suppress that insurrection and defiance of the law. The method in which it is done is justified by precedents in our history, and is within the power which we have in the Constitution.

The objections which gentlemen upon the other side find against particular features of the bill, it seems to me, offer but weak excuses for men to array themselves against the putting down of the crime of polygamy; and I fear gentlemen upon that side will have to regret that they have almost solidly for eighteen hours, including the recess, filibustered against a measure to suppress that crime against American households, and that they have almost solidly voted against the eighth section and the ninth section of this bill, in which two sections are contained the very strength of the measure. A challenge to the jury is already provided by law. A section making polygamy a crime is already the law. These two sections with some others give strength to that law, and tend to make it effective; and you would shear that law of its strength by voting solidly in favor of striking out both those sections. It will not do for the Democratic side to say that they are in favor of the purpose of the bill and at the same time vote against every effective means employed to secure that purpose.

Whenever any question which affects moral character, whenever any cause is on trial which is grounded in the moral sentiment of the Christian people of the nation, whenever the civilization of the nineteenth century rises in its holy might and with its radiant hand strikes a deadly blow at some ancient and insolent barbarism, must we find the Democratic party ever hindering, obstructing, and opposing? You are opposed to the methods of the bill? Then why in all the days of your power in Congress did you not adopt some other effective measure? It was not because you were not prayed to do so by the good people of the country. This which you now resist so stubbornly is petitioned for by every portion of the country. As an example of these, one out of many, I ask to have inserted as part of my remarks the following:

Minutes of a mass-meeting of the people of Keokuk, to take action relative to the suppression of polygamy within the United States.

KEOKUK, LEE COUNTY, IOWA,
February 22, 1882.

Pursuant to call, a mass-meeting of the citizens of Keokuk was held in the United States court-room this evening, to take action looking to the suppression of polygamy within the United States. Hon. R. F. Bower presided and George E. Garrett acted as secretary. Addresses denouncing the crime of polygamy and calling upon our Representatives in Congress to stamp it out were made by Hons. Sam. M. Clark and H. S. Howell and Revs. Grassie, Craig, and others, and after a general expression of opinion, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting that Congress at once enact and enforce the Edmunds bill, or some bill adequate to the prompt suppression of polygamy within the United States.

The following gentlemen were appointed a committee to confer with our Representative in Congress, Hon. M. A. McCOID: Hons. R. F. Bower, Samuel M. Clark, H. S. Howell, Dr. Ingersoll, and D. Webster.

R. F. BOWER, President.
GEORGE E. GARRETT, Secretary.

I most heartily indorse this bill. It carries out the full purpose and effect of the resolutions offered or proposed by myself early in the session. I believe it will be found to cut deeper than some gentlemen seem to think. And if it does not prove a death-blow to that lawless institution, blow on blow will follow as long as the moral sentiment of the country keeps the Republican party in power, until it is crushed out forever.

If I have any time left I yield it to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BAYNE.]

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, it will be observed that the first seven sections of this bill relate to and are intended to make effective the law as it now is. The law of the land to-day makes polygamy a crime. The difficulty and not unfrequently the impossibility of enforcing and executing the law are the objects sought to be removed by the first seven sections of the bill under consideration. They promise efficiency and success in the prosecution of cases against individuals. The eighth and ninth sections, however, propose a different method of dealing with this crime. These may be called political sections. They have a political character. They aim at a political evil. They are intended to arrest and overthrow the political corruption resulting from this organized crime. The idea of these sections is to prevent the consummation of the purposes of the polygamists in the legislative assemblies, in the courts, and in the administrative offices of the Territory of Utah, and also to prohibit the selection of one of their number to represent that Territory in Congress. The opposition to this measure on the other side of the House is not directed against the provisions of the bill which will make the punishment of the crime of polygamy more certain and secure, but against the sections which define the civil and political disabilities which the commission of the crime will bring.

When the political question is raised as to whether or not these men shall be eligible as voters, when the question is raised as to whether or not these men shall be eligible to hold office, then our friends on the other side of the House, or a large majority of them, say, "No; you must not enact a law of that kind." And if they shall succeed in divesting this bill of the two last sections they will simply eviscerate from it those sections that will result ultimately in the overthrow of this institution, if it can ever be overthrown in this country.

It is a demonstrated fact that the efforts to overthrow this institution in courts of justice have proved a signal failure. It will come to be a demonstrated fact that the efforts to overthrow it by visiting upon its members political disqualifications will be crowned with success. This will invite the closest scrutiny. It will provoke the challengers of political contention. It will incite partisan hostility, and make it aid in the good work of casting out this great sin. Therefore, I think that the last two sections of the bill should be earnestly supported, and not eliminated from the bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from Kansas will be as liberal in his distribution of the time at his disposal as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] was on this side when he yielded a portion of his time to the friends of the measure. I would like about five minutes, or if the gentleman from Kansas cannot give me that I should like at least two and a half minutes.

Mr. HASKELL. I will try to accommodate the gentleman by and by; but I now yield to the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. HILL.]

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I propose to occupy but a few moments of the time of the House on this bill. I feel in justice to my constituents and a large body of the citizens of New Jersey that I should say a few words favoring the passage of the bill. I hold in my hand resolutions of the synod of New Jersey against polygamy, and report and resolutions of the Newark Annual Conference of the Methodist Church of New Jersey; resolutions and action of the classes of Bergen of the Reformed Church of America in New Jersey, asking that I present them with their views to the House, and also a statement of facts in regard to polygamy from the clergy of Utah, which I submit as a part of my remarks and that they be printed in the RECORD. These resolutions were adopted and come from three of the large religious organizations in the State of New Jersey, and should command the attention and careful consideration of this House, all of them protesting against polygamy and asking Congress to enact a law eradicating the evil and suppress the crime thereof. The action of these large and influential religious bodies shows the unanimous sentiment of the Christian people against polygamy, and the same sentiment can be said to exist among all other denominations of Christians in the State, as well as among the people generally. I hope, Mr. Speaker, this bill will pass, and the provisions of the bill be faithfully carried out.

The following are the papers referred to by Mr. HILL in the above remarks:

SYNOD OF NEW JERSEY AND MORMONISM.

1. Resolved, That the synod of the Presbyterian Church of New Jersey contemplates with increasing alarm the existence of the institution of Mormonism within our national territory. We are especially concerned at the rapid extension of this vicious system, and at the likelihood of the speedy application of the Territory of Utah for admission into the Union of States.

2. Resolved, That we regard the reception of Utah as a State, in such a form as to legalize polygamy, not simply as a great evil to all citizens in Utah, but as a power threatening domestic and social virtue throughout other great Territories of our land.

3. Resolved, That stringent laws, in accordance with the spirit of our Constitution, should be enacted against this institution, as striking at the life of our free institutions.

4. Resolved, That the synod of New Jersey, representing 45,000 communicants of churches and 150,000 adherents, do earnestly and respectfully petition our national Congress to enact such laws and to adopt such measures as will effectually suppress and remove this evil.

5. Resolved, That we earnestly recommend an amendment to the Constitution of the United States making polygamy a crime to be punished in all the courts of the United States.

6 and finally. Resolved, That a copy of this action of the synod, signed by its officers, be sent to the President of the United States, and also to the Senators and Representatives from New Jersey, with the urgent and respectful request that our State representatives will present it to both Houses of Congress, and use their best endeavors to secure the desired result.

The synod also expresses its lively satisfaction that this subject is already receiving the earnest attention of our public men, and believes that prompt and efficient action against the evil will be most acceptable to all classes of the best citizens of all portions of our land.

Adopted October 20, 1881.

Report of the committee appointed by the Newark Annual Conference on the subject of polygamy.

Whereas our Christian civilization is built on the idea that the family consists of one husband and one wife, together with such children as may be born to them; and

Whereas in all the States of this Republic bigamy is properly considered a high crime against society and punished by law with heavy penalties; and

Whereas the Mormon people who now control the most populous Territory within the national domain openly practice polygamy or bigamy in defiance of the courts and laws and of the moral sense of the people of all the States of the Union; and

Whereas this abomination is spreading into other Territories, and the members of that organization are aspiring to control the legislation and assume the government of this fair land on the pretense that polygamy is part of their religion which the Government has no right to suppress; and

Whereas religious liberty or liberty of conscience does not include the right to destroy the very foundations of our Christian civilization; and

Whereas President Grant and President Hayes, each in his turn, called the attention of Congress to the necessity of further legislation to suppress the iniquity, to which Congress gave but little heed; and

Whereas the Chief Magistrate now in office in his inaugural says, "It is the duty of Congress, while respecting to the uttermost the conscientious convictions and religious scruples of every citizen, to prohibit within its jurisdiction all criminal practices, especially of that class which destroy the family relations and endanger social order:" Therefore,

Resolved, first, by the Newark Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in conference assembled, That we are in hearty accordance with said inaugural in respect to Mormonism, and, regarding this moral question of great magnitude, believe it the duty of all Christian people and ecclesiastical assemblages to support the President of the United States in urging upon Congress to provide the much-needed legislation for the effectual suppression of the crime of polygamy.

Resolved, secondly, That we invite the earnest co-operation of the press of the country, both secular and religious, in pressing this duty upon those who have or may hereafter have place in the national Legislature, until this blighting immorality is utterly extirpated.

Resolved, thirdly, That we respectfully request our bishops to bring this our action before each of the annual conferences of our church for their concurrence, and that a copy of the same be furnished to each of our superintendents by the secretary for that purpose; also that a copy of this action be furnished by the secretary to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Respectfully submitted,

JOHN F. DODD, Secretary.

JERSEY CITY, N. J., April 6, 1881.

To Hon. JOHN HILL,
Representative in Congress from the State of New Jersey:

Regarding the high position that you hold in our national Legislature, the Classis of Bergen of the Reformed Church in America have had put on their minutes, and have ordered to be transmitted to you, the following action against polygamy:

Resolved, That the Classis of Bergen of the Reformed Church in America, in semi-annual session at Hackensack, New Jersey, April 19, 1881, hereby declare our hearty approval of the utterances of the President of the United States, in his inaugural address, about Mormon polygamy; and since it is a monstrous anomaly that bigamy, which is punished as a crime by the States of the Union within their boundaries, is tolerated and permitted to spread by the United States in its Territories, and that while State criminals are in penitentiaries a United States Territorial criminal is in Congress, we respectfully but very earnestly urge our national Legislature to enact and our President to enforce such laws and regulations as will, with thorough effectiveness and the least possible delay, erase this "foul blot" from our national territory, reputation, and character.

Resolved, That the stated clerk of Classis be directed to send certified copies of these resolutions to President James A. Garfield, and to each of the national Senators and Representatives in Congress who were elected by the constituencies of which the members of our churches and congregation form a part.

A true copy from the minutes.

CLOSTER, NEW JERSEY, April 20, 1881.

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, is respectfully referred the following statement of facts:

SALT LAKE CITY, November —, 1881.

To the Ministers of the ———— Churches in the United States:

DEAR BRETHREN: The undersigned, ministers of the various Christian denominations in Salt Lake City, hereby earnestly ask your attention to the following important statements concerning Mormonism:

1. Out of a total population of 143,000 in Utah, about 110,000 are adherents of Mormonism. Of the anti-Mormon minority, only a small per cent. render us active service in our endeavors to establish Christian homes in the place of the foul system of polygamy which prevails in Utah. Hence, we greatly feel the need of your sympathy, prayers and efforts.

2. Mormonism is no longer confined to Utah, but already holds the balance of power in Idaho, and has gained a strong foothold in Wyoming, Arizona, and Southern Colorado.

3. Although there has been a strict law against polygamy upon the United States statute-book for more than eighteen years, only two persons have been convicted under it, and it is practically a dead letter because of its defects.

4. In this matter we believe you can give us valuable help. The anti-polygamy law of Congress, in order to accomplish its intended results, needs to be amended in the following respects:

1. So that the living together of the parties—or cohabitation, to use a legal term—shall be the proof of bigamy or polygamy, instead of the ceremony of marriage, because the latter is performed in secret within the walls of the Endowment House, in the presence of faithful Mormons only, and no one of these will bear testimony to the fact.

2. So that polygamy shall be a continuous crime, instead of being allowed, as now, to expire within three years, by a statute of limitation.

3. So that the women shall be equally punishable with the men for this offense.

4. So that the accessories to the polygamous marriage shall be equally punishable with the principals.

5. So that the jury list may be increased to four hundred.

6. So that adultery, seduction, lewd and lascivious cohabitation and kindred offenses may be punishable as in the States and other Territories of the Union.

Now, may we ask that you will help us by seeing that these facts and considerations are brought at once to the attention of the members of Congress from the various districts in which you live, to the end that they may be interested in securing for us, at the approaching session of Congress, such legislation as will at once and forever put a stop to the further spread of polygamy.

Yours, in behalf of Christian homes and American institutions,

Bishop of Utah.

Mr. SKINNER. Mr. Speaker, the people who sent me here ask that my voice shall be raised and my vote recorded in favor of this bill and against polygamy in all its forms. It is a claim which the people have just reason to ask of their Representatives, and it is a pleasure to feel that in responding to that request in this case duty and inclination go together.

For almost a generation both the great political parties of this country have used in their platforms the strongest words in the language to condemn polygamy and all who practice it. They have styled it the "twin relic of barbarism," and the country has expected that something would be done to abolish it. Instead of its abolition no decisive action has until now been taken, and in the face of public denunciation the fit representatives of this system of false religion have been accorded seats upon this floor. Instead of a denial of recognition to the Mormon Church in our national halls of legislation, its agents and elders have sat for years among you with a right not only to introduce and urge measures protecting their "peculiar institution," but against the Christian religion itself, if they so pleased.

With polygamy, its "twin relic," slavery, was denounced by the patriotic people of the nation. It first claimed attention, and the excitement of settling that question, extending through a long period of years, turned away the attention of the people. Now, slavery has been wiped out and the principle of liberty has been ingrafted upon the Constitution of our land as a practice instead of a theory. It will remain there forever. The people, remembering the hard struggle which gave them the right of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," declared slavery a blot upon their civilization, and demanded and secured its abolition.

Confident of their strength, the people now point to that successful uprising, and say polygamy must follow slavery. Speaking through a public sentiment which cannot be mistaken, and which must be heard by every Representative upon this floor, the people demand, by every consideration founded upon decency, morality, Christian religion, and right, that this great Government, great in what it has done, great in its possibilities for the future, shall raise its strong arm of law and order and strike down this vile abomination. It is due to every Christian sentiment and to every Christian home in our land that we heed this demand. It is due to our enlightenment, due to our past and future, due to our hope of true progress, that we do not falter now.

Some of our friends on the other side say they fear this is a bad bill. In one sense it is a bad bill—bad for polygamy. They tell us they "are willing to go as far as we will to suppress polygamy, but"—but they criticise it, talk about the sacredness of the right of local self-government, offer amendments to it, when they must know that such action endangers the final passage of the measure, and that they are doing exactly what the Mormon Church want done. Their action reminds one of the man who, in reference to a certain measure, declared himself "in favor of the law, but agin its enforcement."

It is true this is a strong bill; it is very strong, but it needs to be strong. The disease is a pestilence of long standing, and to cure requires the most heroic treatment. Polygamy has many times been described upon this floor as a "cancer upon our body-politic." That being true, the longer and the larger the cancer grows the sharper the knife and the stronger the hand that must cut it out. But, strong as the bill is, it is not strong enough. It strikes what we hope may prove a fatal blow to polygamy, but it does not go far enough; it strikes an effect but not the cause. We will find that we have yet to legislate against that great power, the Mormon hierarchy itself. Polygamy is but an outgrowth of this pretended religion that exerts such a power among its believers. That pretended religion is to-day one of the most subtile enemies of our system of government. It is proselyting under the shadow of our own homes to-day, and, unmolested, will in time strike a hard blow at our free institutions.

Brigham Young said years ago, that "the principle of increase is the grand moving principle," and his associate, Heber Kimball, said:

How long do you suppose it will be before my posterity increases to over a million?

Orson Hyde, another "saint," said in a sermon in 1854:

Polygamy is the chord that shall revolutionize the whole world, and it will make the United States tremble from head to foot.

Both Young and his disciples, including the Delegate who now seeks to represent Mormonism upon this floor, have openly defied or ridiculed the attempts of the Government to execute any law against polygamy.

Brigham Young said, in a discourse in 1856:

It is not the prerogative of the President of the United States to meddle with this matter, and Congress is not allowed, according to the Constitution, to legislate upon it. If we introduce the practice of polygamy, it is not their prerogative to meddle. * * * I say, as the Lord lives, we are bound to become a sovereign State in the Union, or an independent nation by ourselves. And let them drive us from this place if they can. If they get rid of polygamy they will have to expend $300,000,000 for a prison, and roof it over from the summit of the Rocky Mountains to the Sierra Nevadas. The sound of polygamy is a terror to the pretended republican governments. Why? Because this work is destined to revolutionize the world and bring all under subjection.

George Q. Cannon, a man with plural wives, said recently in a speech in Salt Lake City:

The Government of the United States would be powerless in the future, as it has been in the past, to enforce the anti-polygamy or any other law detrimental to the interests or progress of the kingdom of God on earth. Nineteen years ago on the 2d of last July, the Congress of the United States passed a law to prohibit and punish the practice of polygamy in the Territories. How much prohibition has the law effected? How many of us have been punished for polygamy? But two men, and they furnished the evidence themselves for their own conviction.

These extracts illustrate the spirit which actuates the "pillars" of this false church, and given the power they seek there would be an end to a republican form of government. Thus we will find that we must hold fast to such legislation as this bill secures against polygamy, reserving harder blows to be given in the future to a so-called religion which has made polygamy possible.

The people are speaking to-day in every enlightened community in our land—they are speaking under the shadow of Mormonism itself—they are gathering by thousands in our cities and our villages, and are moving to overthrow this blot upon our civilization. They are sending word to us here day by day that they will raise up the hands of their representatives and sustain them in every effort to prohibit and suppress this shameful evil.

I desire to present in this connection a series of resolutions adopted at a mass-meeting of the citizens of Watertown, New York, held Tuesday evening, February 28, 1882. They have found an echo in other cities like that, full of beautiful homes and Christian firesides, and are as follows:

Whereas there exists in one of the most desirable and attractive Territories of this country a system of theocratic government, claiming to be superior to and independent of the Government of the United States; and

Whereas said theocracy maintains an attitude of hostility to American laws and institutions, and sustains and promotes the practice of polygamy and other overt acts of outlawry: Therefore,

Resolved, That we view with pleasure the recent action of Congress on the various measures relating to the subject that have been brought before it.

That we will sustain our Representative from this district and our Senators in the most stringent measures that can be adopted to relieve our nation from this foul system of treason and outlawry.

That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to our Representative in Congress.

Similar and stronger words are coming here from every direction. And when the people speak it is well to heed their voice and learn our duty. They believe that a government that is strong enough and brave enough and wise enough to crush a rebellion and give full liberty to all who live within our borders is equally powerful to put virtue above vice, right above wrong, and purity above licentiousness. They said more than twenty years ago that "slavery must go." They shouldered their muskets and went forth to enforce that resolve. Slavery went—even at a great cost of life and treasure. So public sentiment to-day is writing upon the political skies in characters which all may read the words "Polygamy must go." It may be this time a bloodless battle, but it will go.

Mr. HASKELL. Fifteen minutes of the time allotted to this side of the House has now been consumed, and I yield the floor again to the opponents of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] to control the remainder of the time in opposition to the bill.

Mr. CONVERSE. I now yield——

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I desire to be heard for a short time.

Mr. MILLER. I ask unanimous consent that General SINGLETON have two and a half minutes; I understand that is all he asks.

Mr. CALKINS. I hope that will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. It is an old saying, and probably as true here as anywhere, that a short horse is soon curried. [Laughter.] I had hoped to be able to say something in support of this bill after I had been allowed as a friend of the bill to move amendments to perfect it. But being denied the privilege of offering such amendments as I think would improve and perfect the bill, I will now give briefly a few reasons why I shall be compelled to vote against it.

In the first place, the bill does not go far enough in the direction of suppressing polygamy and its kindred crimes against society and good morals. Here is the great District of Columbia, under the exclusive control of Congress, where there is no law providing for the punishment of adultery, fornication, or lewdness. From this District of Columbia you send broadcast over the land the examples which are taught here in a Territory under the exclusive control of Congress. Yet this House is unwilling to listen to a proposition or to entertain an amendment which would cure this great and crying evil against society, religion, and good morals.

There is another objection I have to this bill. By it the President of the United States is authorized to dicker with the Mormons, to grant pardon and amnesty upon certain conditions. Why, gentlemen, is not that very indelicate? The President might want to contract for a half dozen wives himself. [Laughter.] He is an unmarried man. Is it not indelicate to impose upon him such a duty, or to confer such a power upon the President of the United States as that he may impose conditions upon those to whom he extends his clemency under the authority of this bill?

Again, [seeing the Speaker about to rap with his gavel] one word more; do not be so anxious. [Laughter.] I want to say one word in reply to my young, respected, and vivacious friend from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER.] I had not expected to come here and learn Democracy at his feet. I supposed that a life of practice and experience ought to have taught me quite as much of sound Democracy as my friend and colleague claims that he knows. [Here the hammer fell.] Let me close this sentence. I simply desire to say that the utterances of my colleague with reference to Democratic principles in the Senate and the House and the country are untrue, and are not sustained by the record of the party during the last twenty-five or thirty years.

Mr. CONVERSE. I now yield three minutes to my friend from Mississippi, [Mr. SINGLETON]

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I sought the floor while the discussion was going on under the five-minute rule to offer an amendment which I will ask the Clerk to read as a portion of my remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 8 by adding thereto the following:

"Provided, That the provisions of this section so far as they relate to the eligibility or qualification of persons for office shall only be construed to apply to persons hereafter elected."

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. With this amendment to the bill it would be less objectionable in my opinion. We gave to Utah a Territorial government, and in the act of organization no special provision was made against polygamy. The people of that Territory have been permitted to hold elections, and for the last eight years the member now applying for his seat has been admitted to the privileges of this floor, and has taken part in our counsels. Though his seat has heretofore been contested upon the grounds of want of citizenship, yet no serious opposition has ever been made upon the grounds of his or his constituents' polygamous practices.

The acquiescence of Congress in their past elections, and the recognition of their Representative as a fit person for a seat in this body, has induced the opinion on their part that the objection now made would in the future as in the past be waived.

To change our policy now after an election has been had, and without notice exclude the man who has been four times seated, entertaining now as heretofore his views upon the subject of polygamy, looks like a fraud upon the people. I have been taught all my life that "fair-play is a jewel," and for this I have always contended.

Amend this bill as proposed and let it operate upon elections in future, and let it be a notice to the people of Utah that polygamy is doomed, and they must choose between its abandonment and disfranchisement and disqualification for holding office.

I am as much opposed to polygamy as any man and am in favor of all reasonable methods for its extirpation, and while I shall vote for this bill as it came from the Senate should all amendments fail, as now seems to be the case, yet I do so under protest, believing the bill is unwise and impolitic in some of its provisions.

But so strong are my convictions against the doctrine of polygamy that I prefer to stand to these convictions and my duty to the people I represent rather than vote against a bill which, though objectionable in some of its provisions, does not in my opinion conflict with any provision of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CONVERSE. I now yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. TUCKER. I am as much opposed to polygamy and the kindred offenses numerated in this bill as any gentleman in this House. The marriage sanctioned by the Divine author of Christianity is a civil status constituted by contract between one man and one woman to live together for life, as the basis of the family relation, without which no society can be virtuous, prosperous, and happy. And I incline to think the decision in Hyde vs. Hyde, 1 L. R., Probate and Divorce Cases, 130, is sound in holding that no Mormon marriage, though valid by the lex loci between a man and woman which implies the right of the man to marry another woman, is a Christian marriage. The contract of Christian wedlock must exclude the idea of marriage to another woman, the first wife living. It was so from the beginning, that "they twain shall be one flesh."

Great as is this evil of polygamy in Utah, and important as it is to extirpate it as an element in American polity, it must be cured by constitutional remedies. I believe the most precious assurance for American liberty and the most essential guarantee of American civilization is the Constitution of the United States. To destroy any evil by unconstitutional methods is to cure a disease by a poison which disturbs the vital functions of the body-politic and injects into it a principle most difficult to be extirpated, and creating a precedent whose influence must be injurious and may be fatal to the life of constitutional government.

I believe in the power of Congress to legislate directly for the Territories of the Union, subject to the Constitution of the United States. Congress holds them as property for sale and as a domain for colonization in trust for the common and equal benefit of the several States and the people of each and all of them. It can pass no law contrary to this trust nor contrary to the terms of limitation on its power prescribed by the Constitution. That Constitution follows each colonist to his new home in the Territory and shields him from arbitrary power by whomsoever exercised, whether by the direct action of Congress or of the Territorial government to which Congress may delegate the governing authority. The citizen in the Territory, like the citizen in the State, is protected against all laws which are not "made in pursuance of the Constitution."

I believe that the fifth and eighth sections of this bill are violations of the Constitution, and I therefore cannot vote for it. They violate it in fundamental matters, which, if allowed in an effort to extirpate this enormous evil, will be a precedent for passion and prejudice to use the same methods where no real evil exists. Every provision of this bill, aimed at polygamy and the other offenses named in it for their punishment, and to accomplish their extermination, meets my hearty concurrence; and I regret that some of its provisions are so arbitrary and unconstitutional that I cannot give my vote for the bill.

The haste with which under the previous question and a short hour for amendment and debate thereon and call of roll have prevented me from moving amendments which might, in my view, have made the bill constitutional. I can now only vote against its passage, with no hope of defeating this ill-considered, if not inconsiderate, measure.

I will now present my constitutional objections to the bill.

It appears that the governor and Legislative Assembly of Utah, by an act passed January 19, 1855, adopted and re-enacted an ordinance passed by the provisional government of Deseret February 8, 1851, by which Mormonism with its polygamous rites was legalized in that Territory. That act was never repealed until Congress, by a law passed July 1, 1862, (12 Statutes at Large, 501,) annulled it and made polygamy unlawful. That act was codified in the Revised Statutes, section 5352. This section is re-enacted, but enlarged in its scope by the first section of the present bill. In other words, this bill makes some acts criminal which have not been criminal to this date.

The third section of this bill creates a new offense, namely, cohabitation with more than one woman—impliedly making illicit cohabitation with one woman no offense at all!—and denounces it as a misdemeanor punishable by fine and imprisonment.

Now let us look at the fifth section. It provides that in all prosecutions for said offenses it shall be sufficient cause of challenge to a person summoned as a juryman "that he is or has been living in the practice of bigamy, polygamy, or unlawful cohabitation," &c.; "or that he is or has been guilty of an offense punishable by either of the foregoing sections or by section 5352 of the Revised Statutes;" or "that he believes it right for a man to have more than one living and undivorced wife at the same time or to live in the practice of cohabiting with more than one woman." The section provides for examination of the juryman and other evidence, and to exclude him from the jury if he refuses to answer as to his guilt or innocence of said offenses.

I do not insist that every man has an equal right to be upon the jury, but I do insist that it is the right of the accused to be tried by an impartial jury of his district.

The fifth amendment to the Constitution declares that no person "shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." What is due process of law? Judge Story, citing Lord Coke, (3 Story's Commentaries on the Constitution, 1783,) says this means "the right of trial according to the process and proceedings of the common law." This includes trial by jury of the peers of the accused, as shown in Milligan's case. (4 Wallace, 2.) But the sixth amendment of the Constitution is more explicit. It declares "the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury," &c.

In the late case of Strander vs. West Virginia, (100 United States Reports, 363,) the Supreme Court says, in speaking of jury trial:

> The constitution of juries is a very essential part of the protection such a mode of trial is intended to secure. The very idea of a jury is a body of men composed of the peers or equals of the person whose rights it is selected or summoned to determine—that is of his neighbors, fellows, associates, persons having the same legal status in society as that which he holds.

The court say it must be guarded against the process known as "packing juries," and that the man should be tried by persons without prejudice against him.

Now, I do not mean to say that persons in pari delicto with the accused should be put upon his jury. But I do mean to say that the fact that a man has been guilty of an offense at a time long past is no reason for his disfranchisement as a juror, nor to debar the accused from having him on a jury. And yet this bill does this. It declares if a juror is or has been guilty of any of these offenses, or is or has been guilty of the offense newly and for the first time made such by this bill, whether he has abandoned it or not, whether he says he will justly execute his duty as juror or not, he is absolutely disqualified to sit on the jury. But it goes further. It dives into the heart of the juryman, and disqualifies him for his belief. In both cases it proposes an inquiry into the question. It probes the juryman himself. If he declines to answer he is ipso facto set aside.

I have shown that no law against polygamy existed prior to July 1, 1862, nor against unlawful cohabitation with more than one woman up to this time. Yet a man who never violated either law is, by retroactive effect given to each, to be disqualified as a juryman. This gives an ex post facto operation to these laws in order to disqualify jurymen, and thus to debar the accused from an impartial jury of his peers.

But more than all, this is done by an inquisitorial proceeding to disqualify men for jury service, to brand them as criminals without trial, even perhaps without accusation, and thus to narrow and circumscribe the class of citizens in the community from which an impartial jury is to be selected. Is this fair? Does this constitute an impartial jury? Is it not unconstitutional in that it excludes large classes of men who may not only never have offended against any law, but who may have abandoned a practice of which they once were guilty, and who, in many cases, might fairly administer the law without regard to any higher law supposed to govern the Mormon people?

I come now to the eighth section of the bill. That provides that no bigamist, polygamist, or any person cohabiting as before mentioned shall vote or be eligible to office or hold office in any Territory or place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, or under the United States. This disfranchises every such person from every office from the Presidency down to the most petty place under the Government.

I waive the question of a constitutional power to make disqualifications for offices to which another department appoints, or as to which the Constitution itself establishes its own pre-qualifications. I assert that this section, without trial of any kind, takes from every person guilty of any of these offenses the precious right of suffrage and the privilege of eligibility to or the title to hold any office under the United States. This is done by act of Congress for crime. It operates eo instanti of the approval of this law. If at that moment he is guilty of the new offense created by this act, this act in the same moment inflicts this heavy penalty.

It does more. The ninth section establishes a commission of five persons whose decision of exclusion of any man from the polls is absolute and final. He has no appeal. That commission tries the question of guilt or innocence, in order to determine his right to vote. His citizenship is emasculated under this law, without due process of law by indictment and jury trial before a court of law. The commission of five are the absolute arbiters of the rights and immunities of 140,000 citizens of the United States.

Is such a law constitutional? The Supreme Court, in Cummings vs. Missouri, (4 Wallace, 277,) have settled this question.

The Constitution of the United States, article 1, section 9, clause 3, declares, "No bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed." This is a limitation on the power of Congress. (Milligan's case, 4 Wallace, 2; Cummings vs. Missouri, supra.)

What is a bill of attainder? The Supreme Court shall answer:

> A bill of attainder is a legislative act which inflicts punishment without a judicial trial. * * * If the punishment be less than death, the act is termed a bill of pains and penalties. Within the meaning of the Constitution bills of attainder include bills of pains and penalties. In these cases the legislative body, in addition to its legitimate functions, exercises the powers and office of judge, &c., and fixes the degree of punishment in accordance with its own notions of the enormity of the offense. (Per Field, J., 4 Wallace, 323.)

But is a disqualification to vote, to be eligible to office, or to hold office, a punishment? Let the same court answer:

> The theory upon which our political institutions rest is, that all men have certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; and that in the pursuit of happiness all avocations, all business, all positions are alike open to every one, and that in the protection of these rights all are equal before the law. Any deprivation or suspension of any of these rights for past conduct is punishment and can be in no otherwise defined. (Ibid., pages 321, 322.)

Again, the courts say punishment embraces "deprivation or suspension of political or civil rights."

Again:

> Disqualification from office may be punishment, as in cases of conviction upon impeachment.

In the case cited, a legislative act which deprived a man of his right to teach and preach, for acts done before its passage, was held to be unconstitutional as a bill of attainder. How much more so this bill, which deprives the party of civil and political rights without trial, and by a mere act of legislation?

The same doctrines were affirmed in ex parte Garland. (4 Wallace, 333.)

I cannot doubt, then, that this act will be a bill of attainder. As such it violates the Constitution in a matter which affects the lives, liberties, and rights of fifty millions of freemen. I cannot vote for it. I should be false to my sworn duty to support and defend the Constitution of the United States if I voted for a bill which not only violates the Constitution but makes a precedent of evil omen to the liberties of the people. I cannot consent to eradicate one vice by an act of usurpation of power which might involve results of greater magnitude and importance to the happiness of the present and future generations of this great Union.

I forbear to dwell upon the dangerous powers vested in the oligarchy to be constituted by the ninth section. Given a board which is to regulate suffrage, to hold elections, to make returns thereof, and all this without appeal, and there will be no difficulty in reaching the conclusion that for the time being 140,000 citizens of the United States will be subject to an autocratic oligarchy as absolute in its authority and capable of achieving as much unhappiness for its subjects by the plunder of their property, the deprivation of their liberties, and the violation of their constitutional rights, as ever existed among any people in ancient or modern times.

With a solemn protest against these dangerous provisions of this bill, I am constrained to vote against it. I am satisfied if it is defeated that this great evil of Mormonism may be extirpated by some new measure without a violation of the Constitution or detriment to the Republic.

Mr. CONVERSE. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. MULDROW.]

Mr. MULDROW. Mr. Speaker, I approach a vote on this question with great difficulty in my own mind. I sincerely desire to vote for a proper bill on this subject. I believe that the moral sense of this country is properly directed at this time against polygamous practices, and a proper bill framed for its suppression in the Territories over which this Government has dominion would meet with my hearty approbation. I was anxious to see the amendments offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] incorporated as a part of this bill. With those amendments, as I understood them, the bill would have received my hearty sanction.

A difficulty now confronts me as to what I ought to do in the present attitude of the case. Believing that the laws heretofore in force have been inadequate for the suppression of this great crime, and that some further legislation is needed, I hesitate as to my duty. If I should decide to vote for the bill in its present shape, I shall do so under protest, regretting that in the alternative presented to me I must seem to sanction this crime or must vote for the bill with its present objectionable features.

Mr. CONVERSE. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. HARDENBERGH.]

Mr. HARDENBERGH. I avail myself of the courtesy of the gentleman from Ohio to ask unanimous consent that any member of the House may have the right to print in the RECORD his views upon this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that any gentleman desiring to print remarks in the RECORD upon this bill may have that privilege. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and leave is granted.

Mr. CONVERSE. Mr. Speaker, I want to occupy about three minutes myself, and I have I think three or four minutes additional to offer to some other gentleman, but no application has been made to me for the time. I desire in the course of two or three minutes to call the attention of the House to two points in this bill in addition to those which have been suggested by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] as to the constitutional provisions violated by the bill.

First, as we are told by gentlemen on the other side of the House, all the offices in Utah are filled by polygamous Mormons. If that be true, then this bill strikes down every officer in that Territory. It legislates out of office every judge, every sheriff, every justice of the peace, every constable, every policeman, every civil officer. By a single blow in the passage of this bill you organize anarchy instead of law in that Territory. This you do by a bill to which practically you refuse to allow amendments to be offered; for in fact but fifteen minutes out of the hour to which we were entitled for amendments and debate thereon have been accorded to us. The balance has been consumed by roll-call and other business of the House.

Mr. CARLISLE. Is it not a fact that when this bill has become a law, and these offices have all been vacated, there are no means now provided by law for filling the vacancies, and that the Legislature cannot assemble for two years, during all which period these offices must remain vacant?

Mr. CALKINS. The Territorial laws provide for that.

Mr. HASKELL. The governor will fill the offices.

Mr. CARLISLE. He has not the power. Here is the law of the Legislature of Utah. Let me read it.

Mr. CONVERSE. I yield to my friend from Kentucky.

Mr. CARLISLE. This is the law:

Be it enacted by the governor and Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, That in case of the death, resignation, or other disability of any Territorial officer, made elective in the Territory, it shall be the duty of the governor, within ten days after receiving notice of the death, resignation, or other disability of such officer, to call a special election in the Territory or District where such vacancy shall have occurred for the purpose of filling the same.

SEC. 2. In case of a vacancy, by the death, resignation, or other disability of any county or precinct officer, made elective in any county in this Territory, it shall be the duty of the county court in such county, within twenty days after any such vacancy shall occur, to order a special election in the county or precinct where such vacancy shall occur, to fill such vacancy: Provided, That if any person shall neglect or fail to qualify within twenty days after receiving notice of having been elected to any county or precinct office, such office shall be deemed vacant.

Mr. HASKELL. Now read the organic act of the Territory and you will find the power of the governor——

Mr. CARLISLE. This is the law passed in 1878, and it is the law until some act be passed by Congress or the Territorial Legislature repealing it. This is the latest act upon the subject, and is the act now in force. When this bill shall have become a law the men who now constitute the county court, through and by whom these vacancies are to be filled, are instantly liable to be removed from office. There will be no officer in the Territory to probate a will, to settle the estates of deceased persons, to appoint guardians, administrators, or executors; there will be nobody to record deeds and mortgages, and nobody to keep the records of the courts. There will be no sheriffs or constables to execute process or collect debts, the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. CASSIDY] having just informed us that nineteen-twentieths of the officers there are amenable to the provisions of this bill. Thus you leave that Territory in a disorganized and confused state for the period of two years.

Mr. BAYNE. Does not the eighth section operate merely prospectively? Does it not apply merely to acts that are to take place in the future?

Mr. CARLISLE. Not at all.

Mr. BAYNE. It does necessarily.

Mr. CARLISLE. Will the gentleman in charge of this bill say that if it becomes a law—and I would like an answer from some gentleman on the other side who has investigated the bill——

Mr. HASKELL. What is the question?

Mr. CARLISLE. Does the gentleman say that this bill is merely prospective in its operation and applies only to acts hereafter to be committed?

Mr. HASKELL. I will say there is power in the governor under the organic act, which cannot be repealed by the Utah Legislature, to appoint every one of them. More, more, sir. I say that it is the intention of the bill and of the friends of the bill to legislate out of office every one of that infamous Mormon priesthood, and to give an opportunity to put in honest men. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CARLISLE. That is what I understand, Mr. Speaker, perfectly, and I am not objecting to the provision of the bill which legislates them out of office, and the gentleman does not so understand me I am sure. But I am objecting to a crude and imperfect section of this bill which practically legislates them out of office and puts nobody else in, and leaves all the people of the Territory in a state of the utmost confusion and distress, and suspends public business almost everywhere within the limits of that Territory.

Mr. HASKELL. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Do you hold that the Territorial Legislature of Utah can repeal an organic act?

Mr. CARLISLE. The Territorial Legislature of Utah has not attempted to repeal the organic act, but the Territorial Legislature of Utah, in the exercise of its legislative powers, conferred upon it by the organic act itself, has legislated upon this subject, and its law is the only one now in existence.

Mr. ROBESON. I hope I may be permitted to ask a question from my friend from Kentucky, and I ask that it shall not be taken out of anybody's time. I wish the gentleman to point out in this law the clause which legislates anybody out of office.

Mr. CARLISLE. I will read it.

Mr. ROBESON. Do so.

Mr. CARLISLE. I will read it, and if the gentleman disagrees with his friend from Kansas——

Mr. ROBESON. I ask a question which I would like to have answered, but I do not wish to occupy any more time than is necessary.

Mr. CARLISLE. Give me time and I will read it.

Mr. ROBESON. Certainly; take the time.

Mr. CARLISLE. Section 8 provides:

That no polygamist, bigamist, or any person cohabiting with more than one woman, and no woman cohabiting with any of the persons described as aforesaid in this section, in any Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, shall be entitled to vote at any election held in any such Territory or other place, or be eligible for election or appointment to, or be entitled to hold, any office or place of public trust, honor, or emolument in, under, or for any such Territory or place, or under the United States.

Mr. ROBESON. There is the point the gentleman is coming to. The words shall "be entitled to hold" are the words which are to be construed. Does the gentleman say, as a lawyer, that that clause legislates anybody out of office who is now in? Does he say that it is not prospective but a retroactive provision? And if there is doubt about its effect I ask him is it not a principle of legal construction that where it is a question which of two penalties are imposed, the milder one is taken? And where it is doubtful which of two legal results follow the least harsh is chosen? And are not all laws not specially made retroactive construed to be prospective in their operation?

The SPEAKER. The time has expired.

Mr. CARLISLE. I hope I may be allowed a moment.

Mr. ROBESON. I hope the gentleman will be permitted to go on.

Mr. CARLISLE. The gentleman has consumed a large part of my time in asking his question, and I ought to have time to answer it.

Mr. HASKELL. I ask by unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kentucky be allowed time enough to answer the question.

Mr. ROBESON. Give the gentleman five minutes, and then let me have five minutes in which to answer him.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman from Kentucky will proceed.

Mr. CARLISLE. The principles of law, or rather the rule of construction of penal statutes, which the gentleman from New Jersey has stated is undoubtedly the correct one and generally prevails, but the gentleman from Kansas who has charge of this bill has just announced that his purpose is to legislate out of office immediately every man who was amenable to the provisions of this bill.

Mr. HASKELL. I did not say immediately. Quote me as I spoke.

Mr. CARLISLE. What does the gentleman mean, then?

Mr. HASKELL. I mean by the process of law under the bill. Read the bill.

Mr. CARLISLE. The bill provides no process of law for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not those persons are guilty of the offenses created by its terms. It simply says they shall not be competent to hold office. Suppose a man is now holding office; I admit it does not make void his official acts performed previously; but can he continue to hold office with the provisions of this bill in force?

The gentleman from Kansas contends that the governor will appoint to these offices, but I say he cannot do it under the law as it now stands. I admit that you may hereafter pass a statute giving him that authority, but immediately on the passage of this bill these offices in the Territory of Utah will, in my judgment, be vacated, or at least the incumbents can at once be proceeded against and ousted, and there are no means provided for filling the vacancies until the next regular election, whenever that may be. The county courts cannot order elections to fill the vacancies, because the judges and selectmen who constitute those courts must themselves go out of office with the others. The governor cannot fill the vacancies by appointment, as any gentleman can readily see who will take the trouble to examine the statutes now in force on that subject. Section 1851 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which relates to all the Territories, provides that—

> The legislative power of every Territory shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States.

It then proceeds to impose certain limitations upon the power of the local legislature as to the primary disposal of the soil and the taxation of property belonging to the United States and to non-residents, but it contains no restrictions affecting the power to provide for the filling of vacancies in local offices. Section 1850, which applies to Utah, requires all laws passed by the Territorial Legislature to be submitted to Congress, and provides that if disapproved they shall be null and of no effect. The Territorial act of 1878, prescribing the manner in which vacancies shall be filled, has never been disapproved by Congress, and is now in full force. It is the only law in force on that subject, and consequently when you break up the county courts by deposing their officers under this bill, you destroy all the machinery provided by law for the filling of vacancies in other county offices. The offices must remain vacant until a regular election, because the ninth section of this bill, while it authorizes the board to appoint officers to conduct elections, fixes no time when the elections shall be held, but leaves that to be regulated by existing laws.

I would cheerfully vote for all the sections of this bill except the fifth, eighth, and ninth, and if gentlemen would permit these sections to be amended and modified in some respects, which in my opinion would not impair the efficiency of the bill, I would vote for them also. But I shall not allow my opposition to polygamy or any other crime to lead me into the support of a measure which in my judgment does violence to the plainest principles of good government. When we enact laws for the suppression of crime we should incorporate into them only such provisions as are reasonably calculated to accomplish the purpose intended, such provisions only as the courts of the country can enforce and ought to enforce. I have no time now to go into a discussion of those provisions of this bill which relate to the qualifications of voters and jurors and which confer such extraordinary and dangerous powers on the returning-board created by its ninth section, but shall record my vote against it, in the confident belief that the time is not far distant when its warmest advocates will acknowledge its injustice and its imperfections by asking for alterations and amendments.

Mr. ROBESON. The gentleman from Kentucky was given five minutes by unanimous consent with the understanding that I should have an equal length of time to reply.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. CONVERSE. This was not to be taken out of my time.

The SPEAKER. Certainly not. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky was extended by unanimous consent; but the time of the gentleman from Ohio had expired before that.

Mr. CONVERSE. I was simply interrupted and had no opportunity for concluding.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yielded to the interruptions.

Mr. CONVERSE. Then I shall ask unanimous consent of the House to grant me three minutes' time.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the gentleman will be allowed to proceed three minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. CONVERSE. Mr. Speaker, when interrupted I was proceeding in the line of remarks offered by the gentleman from Kentucky. I indorse all that he has said on the subject, and he has presented the subject much more eloquently than I could have done.

I was proceeding to state my objections to this bill. This bill organizes, in my judgment, disorder and confusion and anarchy for the next two years in the Territory of Utah. There can be no doubt about it in my judgment. The offices are made vacant and no provisions made for filling them.

What is the remedy proposed? It is the ninth section of the bill. What is the ninth section? It proposes that the President of the United States shall appoint a board to consist of five commissioners, who undoubtedly will be responsible gentlemen and men of honor; but what are they to do? They are to appoint as many others as they see fit in the Territory of Utah for the purpose of registering the voters of that Territory and to conduct the elections. Those persons so appointed by the board are also to certify to this board the result of such elections. If the gentlemen appointed by the President constituting the board of commissioners were under oath and were to discharge the duties themselves of registering the voters and conducting the elections, there would not be so much objection to the bill. But that is not the case. They are to appoint other persons to discharge these duties. They may appoint as many persons as they see proper within the limits of the Territory. Those whom they may appoint are to register the voters, to hold the election, and to certify the result of the election to this original board; and there is no provision in this bill or in any existing law, so far as I know, requiring those other persons so appointed to take an oath of office before entering upon the discharge of their duties. There is no requirement that they shall be citizens or residents of the Territory. No qualification whatever is prescribed by the bill for such appointees who may exercise such great power.

The bill provides simply for conferring upon an irresponsible lot of men, without requiring of them an oath to discharge the duties of the office, the power to regulate the voters, to make the lists, to conduct the election, and to make the returns and certify the results; and then it confers upon this board of commissioners to be appointed by the President the power to determine whether the men who are thus certified as elected are eligible to the offices to which they have been elected.

What will be the result? You will fill the Territorial Legislature with a set of carpet-baggers more intent upon stealing under the forms of law the property accumulated and created by the industry of that frugal people than anxious to faithfully and honestly administer the provisions of the law.

This bill, therefore, in its present form, in my judgment, as I have already said, is a bill for disorganizing the Territory rather than for reorganizing it. It vacates all the offices and makes no provision for filling them. There will be no one, then, under the operations of this bill to either make, administer, or execute law and order. It organizes anarchy in the Territory, and will fail to accomplish the purposes of its friends. If the majority had allowed the bill to be amended, as it should have been, by providing for the suppression of polygamy and other kindred evil practices in all places where the Government of the United States has exclusive jurisdiction, and had stopped there, there would then have been little objection to its passage.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following bills:

A bill (H. R. No. 3541) directing the issue of a check to the Pequonnock National Bank in place of one heretofore issued to Juliaett Prescott, a pensioner of the United States, and lost; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4754) to admit free of duty certain steam-plow machinery now in the port of San Francisco.

The message also announced the passage by the Senate of a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; in which concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

A bill (S. No. 356) for the relief of the widow of George W. Flood; and

A joint resolution (S. No. 49) making a further appropriation to relieve the sufferers by the overflow of the Mississippi River and its tributaries.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 3251) authorizing the Postmaster-General to adjust certain claims of postmasters for loss by burglary, fire, or other unavoidable casualty; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 140) to print certain eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Michael P. O'Connor.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had also examined and found duly enrolled the bill (S. No. 743) granting a pension to Elizabeth Wirt Goldsborough; when the Speaker signed the same.

POLYGAMY, ETC.

Mr. HASKELL. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SHALLENBERGER.]

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, in the moment of time which the gentleman from Kansas has yielded to me I desire simply to say that I shall vote for this bill, not because in my judgment it goes perhaps to the root of the evil but because I believe it may be the only substantial legislation that this session of Congress will secure upon the subject. There are two bills which have been before the Judiciary Committee of the House, one of which I had the honor to introduce and which has been reported favorably by substitute, the other a bill creating a commission for the government of Utah Territory, which bills, taken together and enacted into law, I should have preferred to this. But I see in this bill a substantial remedy for many of the evils now afflicting the Territories of the United States. I shall therefore vote for the bill now under consideration without amendment for the purpose of securing some of the legislation which the country has demanded of us during the past fifteen years. I have no scruples, Mr. Speaker, upon the constitutional questions raised by several gentlemen who have just spoken. I have carefully read the learned debate in the Senate, and I claim that this Congress to-day has as much right, and it is just as clearly its duty, to take hold of the Territory of Utah and regulate its affairs to the end that republican government may be guaranteed as we had in the days when the Territory was organized. I doubt if there is a gentleman upon this floor who will claim that a republican government exists in that Territory to-day. A so-called church hierarchy has usurped the powers and absorbed the functions of the state or civil government. Pretended revelations are held to be of higher authority than the Constitution and laws of the United States.

In the organic act we gave to the governor the same power precisely that we now give to this intelligent board or commission, as I believe it will be, of five eminent commissioners who will represent both parties. Those five commissioners have to meet a question which the American people will join me in saying demands the speediest and most radical remedy. I say it here, the intent of this bill is to legislate out of office every individual in the Territory of Utah now living in bigamy or polygamy and openly teaching the same in defiance of the laws of the United States. I claim no man should be naturalized in this country of ours who owes a higher allegiance to such a corrupt hierarchy than he does to the Government of the United States. He cannot be at heart loyal to the Government of this Republic. As a matter of fact patent to all, he is not. Polygamy merely tests the Brighamite-Mormon and proves the rebellious spirit that is ready in every way and at all times when dominated by the priesthood to commit the most flagrant crimes against person and property in the name of religion. I believe in individual soul liberty, but I insist upon the absolute separation of Church and State. When the Mormon Church relinquishes all claim to temporal power, and its members yield a ready obedience to the laws of the land, it will have the full protection of our flag, and hold its vagaries, if such they be, unmolested and unchallenged.

Mr. HASKELL. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. WILLIAMS.]

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Two minutes are about long enough to pronounce the benediction.

Mr. Speaker, secret vice, however prevalent and deplorable, can never be a justification for the flagrant and open violation of public morals and public law. Human nature has its foibles, charity its grandeur, and phariseeism has been under ban since the morning of time. But Mormonism, with its adjunct, polygamy, would rob vice of its hideousness, clothe it in virtue's robes, sanctify it by the name of religion, and invoke upon it the blessing of the Almighty. Thus intrenched, it challenges criticism and defies attack. Why, sir, I speak not of its innocent victims or votaries. I speak not of persons or individuals at all, but of an institution. If there be one form of blasphemy more rank than another, what can be more blasphemous than this? But it is not in the realms of morals or religion that it works its most pernicious curse. It not only disrupts and destroys the family, but it makes the family impossible. It banishes the sacred word "home" and herds its offspring. It blots out the sweetest phrases in this world, "parent and child," "father and mother," in any sense worth repeating. It does more: it loosens the foundations of civil government; it takes away the corner-stone of republican institutions; it commands the ballot, controls the courts, directs the juries, and dictates the verdict. If right, it should command all the power of the Government, and armies should march to and fro in its defense, and ships should sail the seas to bring in its proselytes.

I repeat, that while I would persecute no individual, and would allow the widest liberty of conscience, and would protect every son of Adam in the free enjoyment of his religious belief, and while by any method known to the law I would shield and foster the products of honest toil and relieve against the anomalies and embarrassments of an abnormal condition of society, at this bold pretense of religious belief I would walk to the utmost verge of the Constitution to smite it down; and I would say to oriental paganism, upholding these customs and demands, "Thus far, and no farther. Where the clear waters of the Pacific lave the pure sands of our western shore, there thou shalt pause in the presence of the nation's power and before the Christian civilization of this noon-day of the world." [Applause.]

Mr. HASKELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON.]

Mr. ROBESON. I yield one minute of the five to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. CALKINS.]

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to call the attention of my friend from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] to the section of the bill which he referred to. I desire to read it in his presence, and will then ask him to say in the presence of this House whether his remarks are justified under the proper construction of that law. I read it with some of these words out, so as to bring close together the proposition which he announced:

That no polygamist, bigamist, &c., shall be entitled to vote—

That does not mean in the past—

shall be entitled to vote * * * or be eligible for election or appointment to or be entitled to hold any office.

That does not mean in the past, and under no construction which the eminent gentleman from Kentucky can give to it can it be held to mean that this legislation applies to the past. That is a complete answer to the proposition of the gentleman that this is turning over the Territory to anarchy. And I would further say that it only applies to those people who are living in the condition described, if his construction was right, which is described in the bill; and some of his colleagues, as I am informed, refuse the position he takes because they do not concede they are in that position.

I do not wish to be understood as giving this construction to it myself, but to get the gentleman to give his.

Mr. ROBESON. I am always pleased when my friend from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] takes the floor, because though the necessities of his party often put him in the position of championing the wrong, yet the fairness of his mind always forces him to admit away the foundations of his case and confronts him with his own principles. My friend must admit that the words "shall not be entitled to hold" have no retrospective action upon officers or persons who have actually taken hold of and been inducted into office. That they will apply to men who are not sworn in nor have taken hold of their office, I admit on my side. What effect they will have upon the legal tenure of persons who insist upon incurring the penalty in future by continuing to commit the crime here denounced, the gentleman will understand and the courts will decide. I can only say that persistent crime, in the face of this law, ought to disqualify any person who commits it from holding executive or judicial office. Will my friend dispute that principle? But I desire to say one word on the general principles involved in this bill. It has been suggested by many and expressly declared by the gentleman from Texas that this is a blow at free government. Let me say to him, and to all who are wandering from correct principle on this subject, that all free government in our age must grow up from and out of that great principle upon which Christian civilization is founded. That is, that principle of human conduct which we call morality, which was taught by the great founder of all civilized religion as the outward and visible sign "of His redeeming faith," the realization and preservation of which is the object for which civilized society was established; and that free government is valuable and only fulfills its object as it operates to establish and maintain morality among its citizens. Here are embodied the everlasting principles of freedom. They are the freemen "whom the truth makes free," and "all are slaves beside." These are everlasting principles and will survive all change. Times may change, manners may alter, generations may pass away, creeds even may rise and fall, but the moral law is written on the tablets of eternity.

Gentlemen will understand that these principles and the desire to maintain them were the agencies which summoned freemen to society and controls them to submit to the forms of organized government, and that only in their preservation and enforcement is found the realization of free government. If these ideas are just, they forbid the recognition as free government of any system founded on the ideas and principles of a civilization which is barbaric and not Christian. For myself I would rather make anarchy there, than submit to an organization in the line of barbaric civilization, to a false religion organized in the forms of oligarchical government in open defiance not only of the spirit of our Government but of the letter of our law. That is the principle on which, if necessary, we will stand. The people of this country will prefer "Christian anarchy" to barbaric order.

We stand here now, Mr. Speaker, just exactly where we would have stood if the vote for the previous question had been allowed. The gentlemen on the other side have wasted all the time we gave them because they intended, if possible, to defeat our bill by pretended amendments, and go to the country under the cover of smooth resolves and specious pretenses. But the real feeling could not be concealed, and so they have occupied all their time in direct attacks upon and direct votes against the effective measures of the bill. The gentlemen on the other side are all against polygamy, but many of them are also against the measures provided to put it down. It was a condition of mind which affected many gentlemen at the North from 1861 to 1865. They were in favor of the war, but opposed to carrying it on.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from New Jersey will take back that charge, which he makes without the least authority.

Mr. ROBESON. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I did not mean him.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. RYAN. I ask that by unanimous consent the gentleman be permitted to proceed.

Mr. ROBESON. I want no further time except to say that this putting down of polygamy is not a question of religion, but only of social order——

Mr. SPRINGER. I object to the gentleman going on, unless I have an opportunity to reply.

Mr. ROBESON. As we gave ten minutes to the gentlemen on the other side more than they were entitled to, I accept the objection of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. RYAN. The gentlemen on the other side are not so generous as we have been on this side.

Mr. HASKELL. I now yield two minutes' time to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. BURROWS.]

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I desire to say but a word or two at this time. I shall vote for this bill, but I fear if it becomes a law it will disappoint the expectation of its friends. I have been opposed, however, to amending it in any particular, because that would necessitate its return to the Senate and possibly defeat all legislation on this subject. Better to have this measure than none at all. But I believe, as I have said before, that it will prove wholly inefficient. I am apprehensive it will aggravate rather than eradicate the evil. Yet it is worth trying. I hope, however, this Congress will not adjourn until it meets the demands of the American people and passes some more efficient measure that will completely root out this evil and destroy it utterly.

This bill provides for an election machinery temporarily for the Territory of Utah, and in a short time the whole power may again pass back into the hands of the polygamists. I am in favor of a commission for that Territory. I am in favor of this Government taking hold of the government of the Territory of Utah and tearing down the rotten fabric from its dome to its corner stone, and building upon the ruin, by the omnipotent arm of this Government, a form of government that shall put an end to this evil at once and forever.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HASKELL. I yield a minute to my friend from New York.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Mr. Speaker, the claim is made by gentlemen on the other side, and they seek to shield themselves before the world for opposing this bill, that the inhabitants of Utah have fixed rights that this bill, in its attempt to crush out the vilest system of immorality ever known within the limits of a civilized nation, will strike down.

No person can be affected by the enforcement of this bill unless he now is a bigamist or polygamist. As such he has no rights affected by this bill except it be because of his crime. The crime strikes down the right, not this law. That bigamy and polygamy are and always have been crimes in Utah admits of no dispute. There was never a time when it was otherwise and in which rights could be obtained now sought to be annulled. At the January term of the district court of the United States, in 1871, at Salt Lake City, this question arose in the matter of the application of Richard Douglas, Ralph Douglas, and William Kay for naturalization. The court then held that as they admitted they were polygamists or Mormons they were not entitled to become citizens by naturalization, because they were guilty of crime and were not "of good moral character, attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same."

The court says that either the civil or the common law existed in the Territory of Utah when the Government of the United States acquired the same from the Mexican Republic; that both the civil and common law of all civilized nations condemned bigamy and polygamy as a crime; that whether these emigrants in the Territory of Utah found there the principles of the civil law or brought or found there the principles of the common law, they were alike forbidden to practice the crime of bigamy or polygamy, and that, too, without any Congressional legislation upon the subject.

I commend the conclusions of Chief-Justice James B. McKean in this case to this House, where he says:

> It is quite time that certain men in this community who mislead the people and prate about their loyalty to the Constitution while they denounce every law that opposes their lusts; it is quite time such men had learned that the jurisdiction of a nation within its own territory is exclusive and absolute. Let them make up their minds that this nation will enforce in Utah the same laws that are enforced everywhere else in the civilized world.

This, and this alone, is what is sought by this bill, and as such it commends itself to the support of every citizen having the present and future good of his country at heart.

The SPEAKER. There is remaining of the hour for debate on this bill four minutes' time, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] for that time.

Mr. HASKELL. I wish it was within my power in four minutes to lay before this House that magnificent organization, infamous in its objects, infamous in its purposes, infamous in its past accomplishments, but magnificent in its priestly organization, and unrivaled by any similar institution in the world.

I wish I could place properly before this House this Mormon hierarchy of Utah that is struck at by the provisions of this bill. I would like to show our Democratic members who are voting to maintain that mephitic and retrogressive institution how it has taken from under the hand and beyond the power and control of the General Government over four hundred thousand acres of the public land of the United States, and prostituted that vast domain to an iron-clad church ecclesiasticism and despotism.

I would like to tell how, for the purpose of making null and nugatory every law of the United States possible to avoid, they have taken all the better and richer portions of that Territory out from under the control of the Federal courts and the Federal authority, and placed them in the hands of municipal organizations practically supreme in themselves, so that you can go from the northern line of Utah to the southern line of Utah and every foot of the way be within the corporate limits of a Mormon municipal organization, officered by polygamists and run in the interest of priests, levying their contributions upon the people, and robbing them of the means of sustenance which belong to free American labor.

I would like to trace step by step the upbuilding of this magnificently organized theocracy, that usurping all civil power and claiming for itself divine authority has gone on year by year unchecked in its course of usurpation and tyranny, and now defies the power of Congress about to be put forth for its extirpation, and invokes the aid of a great party on this floor to perpetuate its extortions and to cloak and conceal its crimes.

I would like to lay all these facts before this Congress, and I will if I may be permitted to do so before this Congress adjourns. I would like to call the attention of the great Democratic party to this fact: that the people of the United States will not hold them guiltless for their actions this day. Gentlemen of the other side, in mere declamation upon this floor you assert that you abhor polygamy and the crimes incident thereto, and then when the roll is called upon the passage of a bill framed in all the wisdom of the United States Senate, carefully considered and agreed to by statesmen and lawyers of your own party, after all your professions of abhorrence of polygamy, on the roll-call you vote against the passage of the most righteous bill that was ever attempted to be passed by this House or any other.

Mr. HOUSE. A bill which you are afraid to have discussed except under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. HASKELL. Every bill that has been brought before Congress during the last eighteen years for this purpose has been killed by the same processes that you try to institute upon this bill; stifling them in committees or loading them down with amendments to die between the two Houses in the cloisters of a conference committee. This is the way the Poland bill was defeated. This is the way the Frelinghuysen bill was defeated. This is the way the Logan bill was defeated. That is the way all these bills have gone, and were it not for the Republican side of this great House you would have sent the Edmunds bill to its grave between these two Houses of Congress. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. Under the operation of the special order made to-day by unanimous consent, the previous question will now be considered as ordered on the bill and the pending amendment. The pending amendment is that portion of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] which proposes to strike out the eighth section of this bill.

Mr. HOUSE. And on that amendment I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The eighth section of the bill was as follows:

> That no polygamist, bigamist, or any person cohabiting with more than one woman, and no woman cohabiting with any of the persons described as aforesaid in this section, in any Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, shall be entitled to vote at any election held in any such Territory or other place, or be eligible for election or appointment to, or be entitled to hold, any office or place of public trust, honor, or emolument in, under, or for any such Territory or place, or under the United States.

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with my colleague, Mr. WHITTHORNE, and cannot vote in his absence on any of the amendments or for the bill on its final passage. If I were not paired I should vote for this as the best attainable measure for the destruction of polygamy in Utah and elsewhere in the United States. When we contemplate the history of this crime for the past thirty years it can but appal the moral sense of men of all parties; and I would fail to represent the voice of my constituents were I to oppose the passage of this most just and necessary law. Therefore, if Mr. WHITTHORNE were present, I would vote for the bill.

The question was taken on striking out section 8 of the bill, and there were—yeas 44, nays 193, not voting 55; as follows:

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. ARMFIELD with Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. HARMER with Mr. ELLIS.

Mr. HAZELTON. I desire to state that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCKENZIE] is sick at his room. I have paired with him on all questions excepting those upon this bill. I desire him to have the benefit of the statement that he is sick and not able to be here.

Mr. CONVERSE. I wish to withdraw my vote, as I am paired with the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota is present.

Mr. DUNNELL. But I was not present when my name was called. I would be glad to vote now.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. HASKELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HASKELL. I now call the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. That is not necessary, as the Chair thinks, under the order of the House.

Mr. HASKELL. I demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 199, nays 42, not voting 51; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. CANNON said: I desire to vote for this bill, and I would like the privilege of voting now, for this reason: under the order of this House the Committee on Appropriations has leave to sit during the sessions of the House. I was called out to meet some parties upon a sub-committee. I expected to get back in time to vote. As I was absent upon the work of the House, practically under its order, I think I am entitled to vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the statement of the gentleman entitles him to vote under the rule and the practice.

Mr. CANNON. Then I will state that if I had not been absent by order of the House I would have voted for the passage of the bill.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. KLOTZ with Mr. HEILMAN, who would have voted for the passage of the bill.

Mr. SCRANTON. I wish to ask how my vote is recorded?

The SPEAKER. It is not recorded.

Mr. SCRANTON. I desire to vote "ay."

Objection was made.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. HASKELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUFFERERS BY MISSISSIPPI OVERFLOW.

Mr. HISCOCK. Senate resolution No. 49, providing an additional appropriation for the sufferers by the overflow of the Mississippi, is now on the Speaker's table. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as to-morrow morning we have a special meeting on that subject, and I particularly desire action at once, because in my judgment the appropriation provided in the resolution is insufficient for the purpose.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE OF A BILL.

On motion of Mr. ROBERTSON, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5085) to authorize the Secretary of War to aid the civil authorities to protect the lives and property endangered by the present floods of the Mississippi River, and the same was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PAGE. I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet at half past three o'clock p. m. on Tuesday.

There was no objection.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at three o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m. on Tuesday) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

The petition of W. W. Welsh was reported from the Committee on War Claims under clause 2 of Rule XXII, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, March 14, 1882.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 4440) to establish a railway bridge across the Mississippi River extending from a point between Wabasha and Read's Landing in Minnesota to a point below the mouth of the Chippewa River in Wisconsin was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Select Committee to investigate and report the best means of preventing the introduction and spread of Epidemic Diseases, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the president of the National Board of Health, calling attention to the necessity for additional legislation to prevent the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States from foreign countries.

The subject is commended to the careful consideration of Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 13, 1882.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin in favor of the passage of a bill to establish a court of appeals; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, in favor of the improvement of the Mississippi River and its tributaries; which, on motion of Mr. GARLAND, was referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and Tributaries.

Mr. SAWYER presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin, in favor of the improvement of the Mississippi River and its navigable tributaries and connections with the great lakes; which was referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississppi River and Tributaries.

He also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, in favor of an appropriation for a harbor of refuge on the eastern shore of Lake Pepin, near the village of Stockholm; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, presented a petition of 3,726 citizens of New York, praying for a reform in the method of appointment to subordinate executive offices; which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. ANTHONY. I present the petition of A. B. Chadsey and numerous other citizens of Rhode Island praying for an appropriation for the improvement of the navigation of Bissell's Cove in Narragansett Bay. The petitioners represent that within the memory of persons now living vessels of considerable tonnage were built there, and there was considerable navigation, but owing to the influence of the tides and other causes the water has become so shoal that navigation is entirely obstructed. This cove receives the waters of the Annaquatucket River, a considerable manufacturing stream, on which there are establishments that give employment to 2,000 people, with a monthly pay-roll of $25,000 and produce goods to the value of $1,500,000 annually.

I had occasion some time ago, in presenting a memorial for the improvement of a small harbor in Narragansett Bay, to say what I now repeat, that I think while we are making such lavish appropriation for the large harbors and water-ways of the country we ought not to entirely overlook smaller ones which are frequented mainly by fishermen and small coasters that require shelter and facilities which they are unable to secure otherwise than by the aid of Congress.

I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONAS presented a memorial of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, the Chamber of Commerce, the Mechanics' and Traders' and Lumbermen's Exchange, Sugar Planters' Association, and the Produce Exchange, of New Orleans, in favor of the abrogation of the reciprocity treaty with the Hawaiian Islands; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce, the Cotton Exchange, the Produce Exchange, the Mechanics' and Traders' and Lumbermen's Exchange, of New Orleans, in favor of the establishment and encouragement of postal and commercial relations with Mexico and South and Central America; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. COKE presented a petition of citizens of Texas, praying for legislation regulating charges for railroad transportation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I present a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, in favor of the passage of a judicial bill recently introduced in the Senate. I ask that the resolution be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Joint resolution in relation to a judicial act pending in the Senate of the United States.

As it appears to be an almost unanimous expression of the business and professional men of our nation that the overcrowded state of the calendar of the Supreme Court of the United States, and the desire for more latitude of appeals and speedier decisions in important litigation in the Federal tribunals, require and now imperatively demand some remedial Federal legislation in the premises; and

Whereas Senator DAVID DAVIS, late one of the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, and formerly assigned to and presiding over a judicial circuit, including the State of Wisconsin, has introduced a bill, now pending in the United States Senate, entitled "A bill to establish a court of appeals," for the purpose of affording relief to the United States Supreme Court, by the creation of intermediate courts of appellate jurisdiction from the judgments and decrees of the circuit and district courts of the United States:

Be it resolved by the senate, (the assembly concurring,) That the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, expressing the now well-defined wish of the people of the State, desire the passage of said bill, or some bill of like character, by the Congress of the United States.

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Wisconsin be requested to use their influence in favor of and vote for such bill, or one of like character.

Further resolved, That his excellency the governor of the State be requested to send a certified copy of this preamble and resolution to Hon. DAVID DAVIS, President of the United States Senate, by him to be laid before said Senate; and also a copy of the same to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Wisconsin.

SAM. S. FIFIELD,
President of the Senate.
FRANKLIN L. GILSON,
Speaker of the Assembly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GARLAND. I suggest that it is not necessary to refer it, Mr. President, as the bill reported by yourself yesterday answers pretty much the points covered by the memorial. It can lie on the table until the bill reported yesterday is reached.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will lie on the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS presented the petition of Harriet M. Owen, widow of Ira Owen, who served in Captain Timothy Hubbard's Company of Volunteers during the war of 1812, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HARRIS. I present the petition of certain colored citizens of the county of Rutherford, State of Tennessee, praying that an appropriation be made to relieve them from the consequences of the drought of 1881. In respect to the right of petition, I present now, as my colleague [Mr. JACKSON] presented yesterday, this petition. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McDILL presented the petition of Eliza A. Flammart, widow of Charles F. Flammart, late sergeant Company H, Eleventh United States Infantry, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of William Garrett and 125 others, citizens of Des Moines County, Iowa, praying for the abolition of the tax on bank deposits and the stamp-tax on bank-checks; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MITCHELL presented a resolution of Custer Post, Grand Army of the Republic, in favor of an increase of pension of soldiers who have lost a leg or arm; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a resolution of the Hays Post, Grand Army of the Republic, in favor of granting a pension to the widow of the late General Alexander Hays, of Pennsylvania; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of 88 workmen of the Stewart Iron Works of Sharon, Pennsylvania, praying for the speedy passage of the McKinley bill fixing the rates of duty on manufactures of iron, steel, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HARRISON presented a petition of railway post-office employés, praying for the passage of a bill making suitable provision for the widow or guardian of such employés killed in service; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

DUTY ON STEAM-PLOW MACHINERY.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4754) to admit free of duty certain steam-plow machinery now at the port of San Francisco, to report it without amendment. As this machinery is advertised for sale within eight days from this time, it is important that the bill should now pass, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that all the steam-plow machinery ordered by M. C. Fisher, for his own use, prior to the expiration of the time limited by section 7 of the act approved June 6, 1872, and now in the public stores or bonded warehouse at San Francisco, shall be delivered to him free of duty, and subject only to the other charges provided by law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Committee on Finance be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. No. 1125) to admit free of duty steam-plow machinery adapted to the cultivation of the soil, we having passed the House bill on that subject.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

PEQUONNOCK NATIONAL BANK.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3541) directing the issue of a check to the Pequonnock National Bank in place of one heretofore issued to Juliaett Prescott, a pensioner of the United States, and lost, to report it without amendment. This is the usual form of bills of this character, and I trust it is the last one that we shall be called upon to pass, as there is a general bill pending embracing this matter where the amount shall not exceed $2,000. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. BECK. I propose to vote for the passage of the bill, and do so with great pleasure, although it is only reported to-day. I desire to say, however, that at half past one o'clock I shall ask the Senate to give unanimous consent to call up a little bill exactly like it, which was passed unanimously by the House and reported unanimously by our committee. It is a bill for a lost check, which is away so far back on the Calendar that I cannot get at it in any other way.

The bill was passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1148) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle and adjust the account between the United States and the Memphis and Little Rock Railroad Company on account of customs duties arising out of the importation of iron for said company during the years 1860 and 1861, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to report a substitute for the bill (H. R. No. 4680) to repeal discriminating duties on tea and coffee the products of the possessions of the Netherlands, which bill was reported several days ago by the Committee on Finance. It is proposed by the committee to repeal all such discriminating duties. I ask to have the amendment printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed and laid on the table, to be considered in connection with the bill.

Mr. MAXEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 237) to correct and complete the record of Colonel and Brevet Major-General B. H. Grierson, United States Army, aid-de-camp on the staff of General B. M. Prentiss, United States Volunteers, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. GARLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 124) to establish distinct United States courts with distinct officers in the northern and southern judicial districts of the State of Georgia and define their jurisdiction and powers, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. GARLAND. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4439) to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States establishing the times, places, and provisions for holding terms of the district and circuit courts in the northern district of New York, have directed me to report it with amendments and recommend its passage. I wish to call the attention of the Senators from New York to the bill.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered at the present time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think as there are some amendments it had better be printed as reported, and go on the Calendar in order that we may be sure that it is exactly what the Senator would like. He can call it up another day.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill with the amendments will be printed and placed on the Calendar.

Mr. FERRY, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 679) for the relief of William A. Gavett, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 608) for the relief of Joseph L. Stevens, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and moved that the bill be postponed indefinitely; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1014) for the relief of Joseph L. Stevens, reported it without amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 37) authorizing the Secretary of War to supply artillery and camp equipage to the soldiers and sailors' reunion at Topeka, Kansas, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 42) granting to the State of Indiana the use of tents on the occasion of an encampment of State troops to be held in said State during the year 1882, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 130) granting the use of articles, tents, &c., at the soldiers' reunion to be held at Grand Island, Nebraska, in the month of August, 1882, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 132) granting the use of articles, tents, &c., at the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic of the Department of Pennsylvania, on the battle-field of Gettysburgh, in July, 1882, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SLATER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 443) granting a pension to Margaret Lee, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. GROOME, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1283) granting a pension to William Orndorff, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1066) for the relief of Mrs. Almira Farnsworth, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1307) granting a pension to William H. Miller, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1070) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Jane Dulany, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HARRISON. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. No. 423) for the relief of Samson Goliah, to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. LOGAN. In that case I desire to file a minority report, and I ask that it be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The views of the minority will be printed.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 971) granting arrears of pension to James Sheridan, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. LOGAN. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1116) for the relief of Harlow L. Street, to report it without amendment. The former printed report is adopted by the committee.

The report was ordered to be reprinted.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the message of the President of the United States transmitting a communication from the Secretary of War, together with plans and estimates for barracks and quarters in the Military Division of the Pacific, and at Fort Monroe, Virginia, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1521) granting a pension to Susan R. Johnson, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

HELEN M. FIEDLER.

Mr. MORGAN. The Committee on Foreign Relations have instructed me to report the bill (S. No. 741) for the relief of Helen M. Fiedler adversely, and in connection therewith they submit a concurrent resolution upon the same subject, with a written report, which I ask may be printed and the resolution placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed under the rule, and the concurrent resolution will be read.

The concurrent resolution was read and ordered to be placed on the Calendar, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring.) That the President of the United States be requested to bring to the attention of the Emperor of Brazil the claim of Helen M. Fiedler, executrix of Ernest Fiedler, deceased, against the Government of Brazil, growing out of a contract alleged by said claimant to be obligatory on that government, for the hire of the ship Circassian to transport emigrants from the United States to Brazil, in the year 1867, with a view to ask said government to consider the said claim, and to provide for the allowance and payment of such sum as shall be found just, to such claimant.

THE MISSISSIPPI OVERFLOW.

Mr. HARRISON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to submit a report on a resolution introduced a week ago by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] requiring the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into the condition of the overflowed districts of Mississippi, and to report what further relief, if any, is necessary. I ask that the report may be read; and there is a resolution accompanying it on which I shall ask the action of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire that the report shall be read, or simply printed in the RECORD?

Mr. HARRISON. As I intend to ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution which the committee report, let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution reported by the committee will be first read.

The joint resolution (S. R. No. 49) making a further appropriation to relieve the sufferers by the overflow of the Mississippi River and its tributaries was read the first time at length, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That a further sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended by and under the direction of the Secretary of War, for the purpose of furnishing food to such persons as have been rendered destitute by the recent floods in the Mississippi River and its tributaries.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the following resolution: "Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the necessity and propriety of increasing the appropriation for the purchase and distribution of subsistence stores to aid in the relief of the laboring classes in the district overflowed by the Mississippi River and its tributaries made under and by Senate resolution passed February 23, 1882, and report by bill or otherwise," adopted by the Senate March 6, respectfully report that at the meeting of the committee on the following day a sub-committee was appointed to confer with the Secretary of War, and to get from him such information as he had received as to the probable number of persons needing relief, the time over which this relief would need to be extended, and the adequacy of the appropriation already made to afford that relief. This committee have had daily conferences with the Secretary, and have been kindly and promptly furnished with all telegrams from the overflowed districts received by him. In addition to the information thus received the committee have been furnished with some private letters and telegrams received by Senators and others. But after using all of the means of information accessible to them the committee do not feel that they are able to state with even approximate exactness the number of destitute persons in the overflowed districts needing assistance.

The difficulties of communication in the flooded regions are so great that neither State agents for the distribution of supplies nor the Army officers, who have been sent by the Secretary of War to report the real condition of affairs, have been able to enroll or enumerate the affairs. Many of these are crowded upon the levees and higher points of ground surrounded by the flood, where they must be sought out and supplied by the relief boats. The Secretary of War is of opinion, upon the information he has received, that very nearly 50,000 people have been driven from their homes by the waters and are in need of temporary relief. Of these, about 2,000 are in Illinois, 5,000 in Tennessee, 18,000 in Mississippi, 15,000 in Arkansas, 15,000 in Missouri, 5,000 in Kentucky, and 8,000 in Louisiana. A telegram dated March 13, from Captain Lee, one of the officers sent to examine into the condition of affairs in Mississippi, shows that the number needing aid in that State has been greatly underestimated in the figures already given.

It is also believed that the number of the destitute in the State of Louisiana will be largely increased, as the flood is only now reaching that State. The reports received at the War Department before the telegram of Captain Lee had led the Secretary to believe that the rations distributed and on hand would suffice to feed those entitled to relief until about April 1, and perhaps somewhat longer. Later information indicates that this calculation was probably incorrect. Captain Lee suggests that 500,000 rations, in addition to the 150,000 already sent, would be needed in Mississippi alone. The money already appropriated ($100,000) will buy, allowing nothing for transportation, 800,000 rations. We submit with this report a table showing the rations already purchased and distributed.

It will be seen that about 300,000 rations at the date of the last order for distribution, shown in the table, (March 11.) were still available. Since then 200,000 rations have been issued. It seems probable that some measure of relief must be extended to the sufferers for at least sixty days to come. The committee believe that the suddenness and extent of this disaster, and the extreme urgency of the case, justified Congress in giving the prompt relief which was furnished by the appropriation already made. There was not time to organize the charitable efforts and sympathies of the people. But the committee are not prepared to recommend that Congress shall continue relief until the destitute are again able to maintain themselves. The liberality of the people, which has so often responded with princely generosity to the call of distressed communities, can safely be trusted to take up and consummate the work of relief if appealed to by the governors of the States affected. If this work has not already been organized on a scale commensurate with the distress to be relieved, it is probably because of the belief that the public appropriation would meet the case. The committee are of opinion that there is still a very pressing demand for food supplies, which cannot probably be met in time by that organized private effort which should be at once invoked and hereafter depended upon. They therefore recommend an additional appropriation of $100,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, and report herewith a resolution to that effect, the immediate passage of which is recommended.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 161) making an appropriation to enable the Light-House Board to meet the extraordinary expenses consequent upon the flood in the Mississippi River, have instructed me to report it without amendment, and, as it relates to the important question of the overflow, I ask that it may be immediately considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read for information.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the sum of $10,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Light-House Board to pay the extraordinary expenses consequent upon the flood in the Mississippi River; said sum to be immediately available.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Reserving the right to object (as it seems that the true order of things is to take the last bills first and the first last) I should be glad to know whether all the appropriations for the current year for the uses of the Light-House Board have been exhausted?

Mr. ALLISON. I think not. I should be sorry to hear that they had been.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then why do they not use the money they have at command?

Mr. ALLISON. Because the appropriations are made specifically for specific things. If the Senator from Vermont objects, of course I shall not urge it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not objecting. I am waiting to see how the thing stands. I only reserve the right to object.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the accompanying letter from the chairman of the Light-House Board and the indorsement of the Secretary of the Treasury be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE LIGHT-HOUSE BOARD,
Washington, March 8, 1882.

SIR: The Light-House Board has the honor to state that the fifteenth light-house district extends on the Mississippi River from the head of navigation to New Orleans, and on the Missouri River from the head of navigation to its mouth, a distance of over 2,500 miles, and embraces all the aids to navigation within these limits, the number of lights maintained, including nine on the Red River, being over 500.

During the periodical inundations of the Mississippi River, all bank land-marks disappear, when the lights, which are constantly maintained, prove of incalculable value to those engaged in the navigation of the river, this being the testimony of all steamboat men.

The regularity with which these lights are exhibited is due in a great measure to the faithfulness of the men employed in caring for them. During the floods many of them who have lost everything are compelled to live in boats and on rafts, surrounded by water; but notwithstanding this they have maintained their lights with the most satisfactory punctuality, and steamers have thus been enabled to pursue their course by night as well as by day.

The average compensation paid these keepers is less than $10 a month, a sum which is not considered to be a just equivalent for the services performed by them in the present emergency.

When the present flood subsides it will be necessary for the officer in charge of the district to make an extra inspection trip to rearrange the lights to meet the new conditions of the currents of the river, and to re-establish stations that have been swept away, involving, in addition to other expenses, the cost of running the steam tender and launch.

Recommendation is therefore respectfully made that Congress be asked to pass an act, to take immediate effect, appropriating the sum of $10,000 to enable the board to meet these extraordinary expenses.

Very respectfully,

JOHN RODGERS,
Rear-Admiral United States Navy, Chairman.

The honorable SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Mr. ALLISON. Now let the indorsement be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 8, 1882.

The urgency of the case justifies this informal mode of expressing my approval of the within.

C. J. FOLGER, Secretary, &c.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The thing I should like to know, reserving the right to object, is whether the appropriation for the last session of Congress for these objects—I do not hold the appropriation act for the last session in my hand, but the forms are the same—covers this class of repairs. I find in one of the appropriation acts I have in my hand, in the volume of laws from 1877 to 1879, first "for light vessel" in general, "incidental expenses," and all that, $230,000; then for "buoyage," "supplying losses of buoys," $300,000; then I find a reappropriation of some old balances for the same object; then for "fog-signals," I find $40,000; then for "supplies of light-houses" of all sorts, "light-houses, beacon-lights, and fog-signals," &c.; then for "repairs of light-houses" "and buildings connected therewith," &c., and "repair of illuminating apparatus and machinery, $75,000;" then "for maintenance," which implies restoration as well as construction, the keeping up, "of lights and buoys on the Mississippi, Ohio, and Missouri Rivers, $140,000," and so on. This is not the last act, but they are all put in one form as to the heads.

It would seem as if at the last session of Congress we had made an appropriation of some considerable amount; although the act I read is not the one, because I did not wish to take time to hunt up the last one. There are large sums of money appropriated every year that are available, if they are not used up, for the very objects of restoring lights, buoys, fog-signals, and everything else on these rivers. What I wish to know is what has become of the money already appropriated, and whether it is entirely exhausted? If not, then the Light-House Board ought to pay this expense out of the money they already have, and give the Committee on Appropriations and Congress time to consider how much further appropriation should be made on account of this extraordinary expense for the next year.

I of course have no disposition to keep the Mississippi River from being suitably lighted and buoyed, but I have a disposition to know why it is that we are called upon for a special appropriation when it happens that by a flood in that river some buoys here and some beacon-lights there have been swept away, when in every annual appropriation act there is a liberal appropriation for all such purposes. Very likely it has been exhausted, but I should like to know the fact.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know whether the appropriation as read by the Senator from Vermont, which is undoubtedly similar to the one last year, has been exhausted, but I should think it is not exhausted. The committee took it for granted that the Light-House Board would not make this request through Admiral Rodgers unless it was an actual expense necessary to be met now.

I have no interest in the matter. I know only what the Light-House Board informed the Senate about it. If the Senator from Vermont objects to the consideration of the joint resolution, and asks for further information, I shall not urge its consideration to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont prefer to have the joint resolution passed over?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I only appeal to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether it is not wise to let it lie over for a little while so that he may ascertain how that fact is.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Vermont seems to think it is wise. I have no interest about this matter. I merely present it because the Secretary of the Treasury found it so urgent that he did not write even a separate letter, but made an indorsement upon the letter of Admiral Rodgers. The joint resolution passed through the House (if I may be permitted to refer to that) without objection, and the committee only had before it the papers which have been read. We took for granted what the Senator from Vermont seems to doubt, namely, that there was no appropriation now applicable to this purpose. If there is, so be it.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator from Vermont, before he makes his objection, will listen to a suggestion from me, I suppose the funds appropriated last year, which are covered in the light-house establishment in the volume which I have before me of last year's appropriations, were given with the view that they were needed for the ordinary demands of the service. Those appropriations were not made with a view to any such remarkable circumstances as confront us now. Undoubtedly the needs are admitted by everybody. If there is any money in the Treasury of this general fund unexpended, and if it should be used now for this exigency, the fund would be exhausted and we should be called upon for a deficiency. The Senator from Vermont will see that it is only a question of appropriating this money now, when the need arises, or of a deficiency by and by, if there is any money in the Treasury under the general fund. It is simply a question whether to deal with the matter now or by and by.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have got now the appropriation act passed on the 16th of June, 1880, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881. Here I find:

Lighting and buoyage: For maintenance of lights and buoys on the Mississippi, Ohio, and Missouri Rivers, $140,000.

For repairs and incidental expenses of light-houses and stations; for rebuilding, renovating, and improving the same, &c., $285,000.

For "supplies of light-houses, beacon-lights, fog-signals, &c., $375,000;" for inspection, $4,000; for fog-signals, $50,000; for buoyage, $25,000; and for expenses of light vessels, $240,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, if the Senator from Vermont will allow me to interrupt him right there, not one dollar of that fund can be used on the Mississippi River. These lights on the Mississippi River are little lights which are put in here and there and are attended by people on shore at a very small expense. They are not such lights as are contemplated by that item of appropriation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You had $140,000 for the Mississippi River. Now, what has become of it? That is what I wish to know. My friend from Maine says that very likely the fund is not exhausted but that the wise thing to do, inasmuch as here is a flood, is to appropriate in hot haste a very considerable sum of money for that flood so as not to have a deficiency by and by when the money is exhausted. If you go upon that principle about all the appropriations for the Government, as fast as the money is needed, not only on the Mississippi River but everywhere, then the check that Congress is to have of the executive department would be very considerably diminished.

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator see that if this $140,000 was only sufficient for the ordinary needs of the service on all these rivers, covering large tracts of territory not embraced in the floods, and if now you use the money appropriated for the regular purposes for this immediate need, you pinch all the other branches of the service; you take away from the other branches on all these rivers what they need for their every-day use and preservation and devote it to this object, if we are not to appropriate when the need arises, as is now proposed?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know whether there can be any pinch anywhere as long as there is any money in the Treasury. When there is any considerable sum of money in the Treasury there cannot be a pinch for the same object. Therefore, this does not appear to fall within the necessity of an immediate appropriation, inasmuch as the Department apparently, I assume, has money at its disposal that can be used for it.

Mr. HALE. The Senator says there will be no pinch. Let me put it in this way: Suppose there is $30,000 left of this fund of $140,000 needed for the every-day uses of the light-house establishment, and that $30,000 of extra damage has been done which requires the expenditure now of $30,000. If we use the $30,000 in the Treasury intended to carry the service through the whole year, for this remarkable need, how long would it be, I inquire of the Senator from Vermont, before there would be a most direct pinch, if we use the money up for this special purpose?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It would be long enough to enable the Department to know exactly how much had been spent for this extra purpose instead of guessing at it, as it is now a mere estimate, which puts this large sum of money at their disposal and really adds to the appropriation now before we know how extensive the injury is and what it will cost to replace these lights. It puts this large sum of money in addition to the amount appropriated for that purpose. Perhaps it is perfectly right, but I should be certainly glad to have the Department tell us whether it has any money left, and if so how much.

For that purpose, treating this joint resolution as I think I ought to treat a good many other measures that I do not, I should be glad to have it go over in order that the committee may get further information. It can be taken up again to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution goes over on objection.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of one o'clock has arrived, and the Anthony rule becomes absolute.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that the regular time for the morning business be extended until it be completed, and that at the expiration of that time the Anthony rule be in operation for one-half hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that will be the order of the Senate. The introduction of bills and joint resolutions is in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1468) to promote the efficiency of the United States Army by retirement of officers, voluntarily or otherwise, after certain periods of service; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not examined the bill with sufficient care to be sure that it is based on sound principles, but I think it worthy the attention of the committee, and so I introduce it.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LOGAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1469) for the relief of Albert Arrowsmith; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1470) for the relief of Caroline E. Cole; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HARRIS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1471) to authorize Rev. A. Laiselli, pastor of Saint Joseph's church at Fort Pickering, Shelby County, Tennessee, to import an organ for said church; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GEORGE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1472) for the relief of Julia A. Nutt, widow and executrix of Haller Nutt, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LAPHAM asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1473) to provide for courts of review in the various circuits of the United States, and to regulate the practice in civil and criminal cases in the courts of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ROLLINS (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1474) making an appropriation for the purchase of Fairbanks & Company's infallible American gold and silver coin scale and counterfeit-coin detector for use in the post-offices throughout the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MORGAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1475) for the relief of H. M. Jones; which was read twice by its title, and, with the papers on file in the case, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1476) to incorporate the National Gas and Electric Light and Illuminating Company of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. FARLEY (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 50) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be constructed and tested an automatic meter to measure the quantity and test the specific gravity of distilled spirits and malt liquors, and to make an appropriation therefor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. LOGAN, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Edward Shields and others be withdrawn from the files.

Ordered, That the papers on file in the Senate in reference to the claim of John Stewart be withdrawn and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. VAN WYCK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 3830) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON LABOR IN EUROPE.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 600 copies of the Special Report on Labor in Europe and America by Edward Young, late Chief of the United States Bureau of Statistics, be printed from the stereotype plates and bound, 300 for the use of the Senate, and 300 for the Department of State, to be transmitted to the ministers and consular officers of the United States.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES.

Mr. HOAR. Is the order of resolutions now before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. I move to take up the resolution reported yesterday by the Committee on Rules to appoint a committee of seven Senators on expenditures of the public money.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution reported by the Committee on Rules on the 13th instant:

Resolved, That there shall be a committee on expenditures of public money, composed of seven Senators, who shall consider such measures tending to economy in public expenditure as shall be referred to it, and conduct all investigations into the expenditure of public money which shall be ordered by the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senator if that is reported in response to resolution offered by myself at an earlier day?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir; it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

Mr. PLUMB. Does that necessarily come up this morning?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was reported yesterday, and is called up now.

Several SENATORS. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read again.

The resolution was read.

Mr. BECK. I should like to hear something about the scope of that. Does it mean that all appropriation bills and all matters connected with the expenditure of public moneys are to be considered by this new committee? What is it? It is a broad resolution.

Mr. HOAR. This resolution is reported from the Committee on Rules in obedience to an order of the Senate proposed originally by the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS.] The Senator from West Virginia proposed this order with authority to the committee so constituted to sit during the recess of the Senate and to send for persons and papers in all cases. The Committee on Rules thought that it was not expedient to grant that general authority, which the Senate never has granted to any committee, but that where such session during the recess with power to send for persons and papers might be needed, special authority should be asked and would be conferred by the Senate in each case with the reasons stated. It did not seem to us to be just to set afloat a committee which in times of great party excitement might serve, and serve very improperly, partisan purposes, which might sit in the recess and give out evidence to the public when the Department or officer affected would have no power to answer, or to meet, or to direct, or to guide the inquiry, and when the Senate itself would have no such power.

We therefore thought it would be expedient to have the committee appointed to have the authority for particular investigations given or not as the Senate should think fit in each individual case; but with that limitation it seemed, I believe, to all the members of the Committee on Rules that it would be a great relief to a good many of the standing committees of the Senate to have this general committee exist. Then whenever there is some special measure pending which does not change the method of transacting the public business provided by existing law, but only so far as tended to the public economy, whereby a particular matter of expenditure of money, whether charged as corrupt or otherwise, is to be inquired into, it may be convenient to have this standing committee instead of the committees to whom the general subject would be ordinarily referred. Take, for instance, the case of a committee of which I believe the honorable Senator from Kentucky is himself a member, the Committee on Appropriations. I understand they have been charged with an investigation into the expenditure, or alleged expenditure, of certain public moneys in the Treasury Department, which took that most important and most hard-worked committee from its ordinary labor, or a sub-committee of its number, for a very long time at the present session. Now it certainly would have very much relieved that committee to have been able to impose that particular investigation upon another committee of the Senate whose business it was to make such investigation. So of the investigation ordered on the motion of the honorable Senator from West Virginia who originated this matter, in regard to the method of keeping the Treasury accounts, though I believe in that particular instance he had a special committee. But if this committee had existed it would have done that work.

There are cases where the Committee on Finance, where the Committee on Pensions, where the Committee on the Judiciary, who are among the most hard-worked and important committees of the Senate, would be very much relieved if a particular inquiry which related merely to the lawfulness and to the economy with which money was expended in a special Department could be transferred to a committee of this kind.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky, if he will look at the phraseology of this resolution, will find that it does not refer all questions touching economy of expenditure to this proposed committee. It is not like the other rules providing for committees; for instance, the one providing for the Appropriations Committee, which says that all matters touching appropriations of money shall be referred to that committee. This is peculiar in its form, and only says that matters touching economy in the expenditure of money which may be referred to this committee by the Senate shall be considered by it; it shall only have jurisdiction of those, not that all questions touching economy in the expenditure of money shall be referred to this committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the Senator from Maine is mistaken as to the last clause of the resolution, which appears on the face of it to require that all investigations ordered by the Senate shall be conducted by this committee. I should like the Secretary to be kind enough to read the resolution again.

Mr. FRYE. I was speaking touching the first clause, not the last clause. The last clause does provide that all investigations on this point shall be made by this committee.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be a Committee on Expenditures of Public Money, composed of seven Senators, who shall consider such measures tending to economy in public expenditure as shall be referred to it—

Mr. FRYE. That was the clause I referred to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now read the rest.

The Acting Secretary continued the reading, as follows:

and conduct all investigations into the expenditure of public money which shall be ordered by the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I move to amend by adding the words "to be conducted by it," so that the last clause shall read:

And conduct all investigations into the expenditure of public money which shall be ordered by the Senate to be conducted by it.

I do not propose for one to tie up the hands of the Senate by a rule that we cannot get rid of without going at it in a roundabout way, to require any committee, from Foreign Relations or Privileges and Elections down to the Judiciary to take out of the hands of the Senate and carry on an investigation which the Senate may prefer some other committee should do, which this last clause would require if we adopt it. So I wish to put it as all the other committees are on the ground of having a right to conduct investigations that the Senate may think it fit to commit to it.

I do not agree to the proposition that the Committee on Appropriations has a right to have referred to it any bill or other appropriation. The Senate may consider it in Committee of the Whole and not refer it at all, if they like; they may refer it to another committee if they please. The only imperative part of the rule is that all amendments proposed to a general appropriation bill shall be referred one day before they are offered to the Committee on Appropriations, which of course implies that that committee will probably have the appropriation bill under consideration. But I do not think the Senate ought to bind itself by a rule for every case to send every investigation that it orders to be conducted, to a particular committee, in advance. That ought to be left to the judgment of the Senate when the question arises.

Mr. HOAR. This last clause only requires the committee to conduct such investigations as are ordered by the Senate. It relates solely to the matter of special investigations into the expenditure of public money, and not such investigations as come under the general duty of all committees who have measures under their charge which affect the expenditure of money. The reason for expressing the sense of the Senate in the phraseology which has been used is that it does not seem to be desirable to have investigations, which often affect very seriously the character of public officers, put into the hands, as has sometimes been claimed to be the parliamentary etiquette in such cases, of the person making the charge. I remember that the late Mr. Sumner very earnestly contended that some investigation which he moved in regard to the conduct of one of the Executive Departments of Government—I think it was with regard to the sale of arms—should be conducted by a committee at the head of whom was the Senator making the charge and a majority of whom should be Senators who believed the charge to be well founded. It seemed to me at the time and it seemed to the Senate at the time that that was a misapprehension of the old parliamentary rule which gave a measure to a committee of its friends.

I fear that the amendment of the Senator from Vermont will destroy the effect of this language by leaving any Senator who moves a special committee for an investigation with the same claim upon the etiquette or courtesy of the Senate that he has now; but at the same time I think the point of the Senator from Vermont has very great weight, and perhaps the Senate ought not to tie itself up so that if for any special reason the Senate desires to raise a special committee and not commit the investigation to this one, or desires to commit it to any other standing committee of the Senate, it should not be contrary to the rule, so that the Senate itself is entirely without power to raise a special committee or commit an investigation to another standing committee. I would suggest to the Senator that the point which I have in mind and the point which he suggests might perhaps be met by, instead of adding the language which he has moved, adding the words "unless the Senate shall otherwise order," which would leave the general policy of having this standing committee a committee to whom such matters should ordinarily go as expressed in the rule, and still leave the Senate at any particular time in perfect possession of its independence. I move to amend the motion of the Senator from Vermont by substituting the words "unless the Senate shall otherwise order."

Mr. FRYE. "Otherwise direct."

Mr. HOAR. Very well. I will say "otherwise direct."

Mr. HALE. I should like the resolution to be read as proposed to be amended by the Senator from Vermont, and as that would be amended by the amendment just offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary did not catch the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. Add "unless the Senate shall otherwise direct."

Mr. EDMUNDS. As a substitute for the words which I proposed.

Mr. HALE. Now, let us see how it would read with those words put at the end.

The Acting Secretary read the resolution as it would stand with the amendment of Mr. HOAR.

Mr. HALE. I suppose that the object of this resolution is to create what the Senate has not now, a committee of investigation into public expenditures, which shall take cognizance of such subjects; and the amendment that has been offered, it seems to me, is entirely in the right direction, leaving it for the Senate at any time to send any subject-matter to any special committee or any of the standing committees of the Senate. To me it is very clear that such a committee is needed. I have had some experience, and some members of the Committee on Appropriations have had, during the present session, alluded to by the Senator from Massachusetts, where a resolution for investigation into the expenditures of a particular fund was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, evidently nobody believing that the general work of that committee would be much interfered with or interrupted by the new work, whereas the result has been that for three months almost the entire time of that committee, not allowing it to attend to any other duties, has been consumed by that investigation, a subject-matter that might very properly have gone to just such a committee as the Senator from Massachusetts has now moved.

It seems to me that the resolution is just right as it is now with the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, leaving the Senate at any time to send any investigation of any matter of public expenditure to any other committee, but if it does not it naturally goes to that committee.

Mr. BECK. There are seventy-six members of this Senate, and there are forty-three committees already.

Mr. FARLEY. A good many of them special.

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir; a good many of them special. It seems to me that there are committees enough and chairmanships enough to satisfy all the ambitious gentlemen who desire them. In a body of seventy-six members it seems to me there is no necessity for creating another committee when we already have over forty. Every time we approach the House of Representatives for appropriations for expenses we have difficulty in getting appropriations to carry what we have now. There is never a meeting of conferees of the two Houses on bills covering such expenses that there is not a constant quarrel almost as to the enormous expenditures of the Senate on these matters. Another committee of seven seems to me to be unnecessary.

Mr. PLUMB. I think a great deal of the Senate's committees, and, with due respect to my friend from Kentucky, I suppose we ought to have a few more on the prevailing theory, and I think this committee, therefore, ought to be constituted for whatever purpose it may be put to. Now we have a Committee on Appropriations that controls all the appropriations made for the carrying on of the Government; the Judiciary Committee and other committees touch incidentally, of course, upon questions that require the appropriation of money; but I submit that it would not be expected that any committee investigating, for instance, the sale of public lands, or a question of the expenses of a court, would send that particular question to another committee to ascertain whether that appropriation was proper or not and the extent of it. Therefore there is nothing really which this committee could do which is not incidental and naturally cognate to the work of other committees of this body, except it be the case suggested by the Senator from Maine in regard to the investigation of the expenditures of a particular Department, and that is an investigation which has not been ordered by this body before since I have been a member of it. This is the only investigation of that kind that has been made in the last five years.

Now to create a standing committee to meet a purpose which has already occurred and passed is—what? Either to constitute that committee a censor over all the other committees of this body, a mentor, a committee to make suggestions and intrude itself into the business of the various committees, or it is a committee which will have a roving commission to investigate things outside. Neither of these purposes will naturally be accomplished by the constitution of this committee. It will simply be, as a large number of the existing committees of this body already are, supernumerary, a committee of course which being charged apparently with the transaction of some duty will apply at once for a clerk, and a stenographer, and a room, and all the other paraphernalia and surroundings and contingencies that attach to a committee and which, once attached, are never detached.

It looks to me as though we might with a fair regard to the public business and the public Treasury cut off about fifteen or twenty of the committees we already have. If there is more duty to be performed than can be performed by the committees now charged with the transaction of the important business of the country, that business might be reapportioned in some way so as to make use of the committees we have. I admit that the Committee on the Judiciary, the Committee on Finance, and some others are hard-worked, but this new committee will in no way relieve those committees of any portion either of their responsibility or of their labor. As I said, it either impinges on the natural and proper duties of committees now constituted or it is entirely supernumerary.

It seems to me we are running this thing somewhat into the ground; and unless we are to cut off some of the excrescences we already have in the shape of committees, we ought not to create any more.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I will accept, as far as I properly can, the amendment of the Senator from Vermont and withdraw mine. That will save a long talk, I understand.

Mr. ALLISON. Let us hear the amendment read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. At the end of the resolution it is proposed to add "to be conducted by it;" so as to make the clause read:

And conduct all investigations into the expenditure of public money which shall be ordered by the Senate to be conducted by it.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to suggest that the hour of half past one has arrived.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether we have not now a Committee on Retrenchment and on Civil-Service Reform? The House of Representatives has half a dozen committees on public expenditures in all the Departments, one for each Department, I believe, and so far as I have ever observed—and I am not talking now contrary to parliamentary rule—those committees almost never do any of the things that their name imputes to them; but the regular committees that have to deal with the various Departments really make the investigation into the operations of those Departments as they ought to do, just as in this body the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Appropriations ought to keep their eye on the Treasury all the time, and as the Committee on the Judiciary ought to keep its eye on the expenditures of the Department of Justice all the time. But as it is now proposed to leave this committee to stand like the other committees, I am not going to spend any time in opposing the proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order of the Senate which was made on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] was that the morning business should be continued until it was concluded, and that after that the Anthony rule should be operative for one-half hour.

Mr. PLUMB. Does the President hold that this is properly morning business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is a resolution reported yesterday which was called up to-day as morning business. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PLUMB. I am unwilling to have this resolution adopted without further discussion. I think it has more importance in it than is ordinarily attached to it. I therefore move to postpone the consideration of the resolution in order that I may move to take up the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate can move to postpone it until to-morrow or some definite time.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to postpone the resolution until the morning hour to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves to postpone the further consideration of the resolution until to-morrow.

Mr. HOAR. I think we might as well dispose of the matter now. I think every Senator has made up his mind. The Senate can repeal the resolution at any time after it adopts it. It is not a bill or joint resolution that we have got to get somebody else's consent to change. It is in the power of the Senate any morning to abolish it. I hope it will be permitted as the unanimous report of the Committee on Rules to be disposed of, and that gentlemen will act on it without dilatory motions.

Mr. PLUMB. The physical power to dispose of this matter hereafter is not doubted, but the fact is that no committee once organized has been repealed——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The merits of the resolution can not be discussed on the motion to postpone. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes, 30; noes, 12.

COMPENSATION OF HULL AND BOILER INSPECTORS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Anthony rule now has one half hour under the order of the Senate made to-day before the unfinished business is to be called. The first bill in order on the Calendar is the bill (S. No. 843) amending section 4414 of the Revised Statutes, fixing the compensation of inspectors of hulls and boilers in the several districts of the United States, which is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read. It proposes to amend section 4414 of the Revised Statutes by striking out the fourth paragraph of the section, and by inserting in the fifth paragraph the words "Michigan, Superior," after the word "Memphis;" also by striking out of the seventh paragraph of the section the word "Superior."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the bill explained.

Mr. RANSOM. I see the Senator from Michigan present. The bill concerns his State.

Mr. FERRY. This is a bill reported by the Senator from North Carolina from the Committee on Commerce, increasing the pay of the inspectors of boilers and hulls in the districts of Superior and Michigan.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the ground for it?

Mr. FERRY. They are paid $800 a year and it is not enough. This increases their pay to $1,500. I think there is a report in the case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear that. Is there any information from the Treasury Department?

Mr. FERRY. There is a letter from the Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is nothing in the papers with the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If there is not any letter there, I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. FERRY. There is a letter from the Department recommending the increase.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The papers have been sent for to the Secretary's office.

Mr. FERRY. It is confined to two districts in the State of Michigan.

Mr. RANSOM. This is a bill reported from the Committee on Commerce, and I think reported unanimously. The Committee on Commerce directed a communication to be addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury in reference to it. I do not know whether the letter of the Secretary is among the papers, but the letter is in favor of this proposition.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the bill go over until to-morrow without losing its place, and the papers can be looked up meanwhile.

Mr. CONGER. The salary of these officers was fixed before there was much shipping on these lakes requiring examination, years ago.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I only propose to let the bill go over until to-morrow without prejudice, and in the mean time the papers can be looked up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice if there be no objection.

Mr. CONGER. It seems to me it might as well be acted on now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would inform the Senator from Michigan that there is objection, and the objection is withdrawn provided there can be an opportunity of examination, and the objector suggests that the bill pass over without prejudice. That is the easiest way.

Mr. CONGER. It was a conditional objection, which I did not suppose would hold here.

Mr. FERRY. I suggest, in answer to the suggestion made by the Senator from Vermont, that the bill be passed by until the letter is found. The letter is with the papers. They have been sent for to the office, and when they are here let the bill be taken up if it is within the half hour.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest that the bill be passed over until to-morrow morning without losing its place so as to be the first case taken up to-morrow morning. Does the Senator object to that?

Mr. FERRY. Not if the Senator insists upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice to-day.

MRS. M. J. FLOOD.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 356) for the relief of the widow of George W. Flood; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to M. J. Flood, widow of George W. Flood, for his services as clerk in the Bureau of Topographical Engineers from the 1st of December, 1854, to the 16th of September, 1856, at the rate of the compensation or salary of a clerk of the first class, after deducting the amount received by him for services in the office during the period stated, to wit, the sum of $575.50.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CATHOLIC CHURCH AT CHATTANOOGA.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 211) for the relief of the Roman Catholic church of St. Peter and St. Paul at Chattanooga, Tennessee.

Mr. HARRIS. That bill cannot be considered under the five-minute rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If no one wishes to keep it on the docket it will be indefinitely postponed, being adversely reported by the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire it to remain on the Calendar, but it cannot be considered under the five-minute rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

MARTHA J. COSTON.

The bill (S. No. 706) for the relief of Martha J. Coston was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize Martha J. Coston, administratrix of B. F. Coston, to apply to the Commissioner of Patents for an extension, for the term of seven years from the expiration of the time for which the same have been renewed, of her letters-patent on the pyrotechnic night-signals dated April 5, 1859, and numbered 23536. The Commissioner is authorized to grant such extension if it shall be established to his satisfaction that Martha J. Coston has not already been reasonably compensated for the invention. The extension is to be subject to the right of the United States Navy to use the invention without charge.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report in that case?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a report made by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.]

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Missouri will allow me to make a brief statement he can then call for the reading of the report, or such parts of it as he shall desire.

This is a bill to authorize the extension, for seven years, by the Commissioner of Patents, if on inquiry he shall find that the patentee has not been properly compensated already, for a code of pyrotechnic night-signals. The right of the Government to use them is preserved. This is one of the most important inventions of the kind ever made, and the report contains testimony to that effect.

Here is a certificate by Admiral Rodgers, Captain C. S. McCauley, and Lieutenant Henry H. Lewis, in which they say this is "a perfect code of night-signals."

Then here is testimony from ex-Secretary Gideon Welles:

During the recent rebellion they were of incalculable service.

Here is the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, who says there is nothing "in any degree comparable to those known as the Coston night-signals."

Here is a testimony from Farragut saying that they "have been in constant use throughout the fleet."

Here is a testimony from Admiral Porter saying they have tried to get up something better but never have succeeded. "They are the very best ever invented."

Then here is a petition from the captains of all the great steamship lines plying all over the world, as far as they are in this country, the Clyde line, the Cromwell line, the Metropolitan line, the Charleston line, the Mayan line, the Texas, Florida, and Brazil line, and more than one hundred of that class.

Mr. HARRIS. Has the patentee enjoyed the benefits of the patent for the statutory term?

Mr. HOAR. Let me finish this statement. This lady's husband had decorations from nearly all the foreign commercial governments, a very earnest and enthusiastic recommendation from the head of the French bureau, and so on. The husband died shortly after making this invention, and his widow (so proved to the satisfaction of the committee) has received very slight compensation indeed. As I have said, the application for the extension is from all the persons interested in using the signals almost all over the country, the great steamship lines. The right of the Government to use the invention is excepted, and then the bill provides, in addition to our inquiry before the committee, that the Commissioner of Patents may inquire into the fact whether there has been proper compensation, and if he finds there has not he may authorize this extension for seven years more. That is the whole story.

Mr. HARRIS. The patent, though, has run the statutory time?

Mr. HOAR. The patent has run the statutory time.

Mr. HARRIS. And this is a proposition to extend it seven years more?

Mr. HOAR. That is true. The inventor, Mr. Coston, was a person in feeble health for many years, and died I think of consumption, and he failed to get this invention introduced in any way to afford him any considerable compensation.

Mr. ALLISON. Has the patent actually expired?

Mr. HOAR. It has either just expired or is just about expiring.

Mr. MCMILLAN. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts why it would not be proper for the patentee to submit the reasons upon which he relies for the extension of his patent to Congress, that our committees here may consider them, and not refer the matter to the Commissioner of Patents?

Mr. HOAR. The Senate Committee on Patents twice, in the last Congress and in this Congress, unanimously reported in favor of the measure, going very fully into all these facts. Here is a petition addressed to the honorable Mr. Kernan, who was chairman of the committee in the last Congress, in which Mrs. Coston sets forth all the details and all the reasons why her husband was prevented from introducing the invention and getting proper compensation for it. It is proper, if the Senate desires to have all the details before it, to have the report read, though it is eight or ten pages long. I did not know but that, considering the fact that there have been two unanimous reports of the Committee on Patents, considering the fact that the Government right is reserved, and considering the further fact that this subject is to be tried all over again by the Commissioner of Patents, the Senate might waive the reading of the report covering all these details. If they desire it, of course it can be read.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HARRIS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. CALL. This is a bill to which certainly there ought not to be any objection. I hear Senators say that the patentee has enjoyed the term allowed by the law. I venture to say that that is an unmeaning expression, if that be all. What is the object of the law granting a term to an inventor? It is that he shall have some compensation. If that be the object of the law, and there has been no compensation of an adequate character to the patentee, what kind of argument, or logic, or reason is it to say that the patentee has had the barren right under the law of a term of years, when the object of the law was to give a compensation and payment for the invention? If gentlemen were disposed to say, "We object to all compensation to inventors; the policy is bad; let us encourage the capacity and genius of poor people in some other way; let us make everything public; the system is bad," there would be some reason in it; but when an inventor comes here with clear proof—and certainly it will never get beyond that committee unless the evidence is clear—that his invention has benefited commerce, that it has saved human life, and when it is certified by the officers of the Government to have been of great benefit to the Navy during the war and is now to the commercial interests of the country, and when the evidence is presented that there has been no adequate compensation, no reasonable compensation, and the widow of the inventor comes here and asks for it, the committee have simply said that if these facts be verified in a manner perfectly satisfactory to the officer of the Government charged with the duty, he shall have the right to extend the patent. I venture to say that there can be no argument made and no reason given why under the facts of this case the inventor should not have the benefit of an extension.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 34, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—34.

Aldrich,	Hale,	Logan,	Rollins,
Allison,	Harrison,	McDill,	Saunders,

So the bill was passed.

RAILROAD AT PLATTSBURGH.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 650) to authorize the Secretary of War to release a right of way across lands of the United States at Plattsburgh, New York; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to empower the Secretary of War in his discretion, and on such conditions and restrictions as he may think necessary to protect the interests of the United States, to release to the Chateaugay Railroad Company, for railroad purposes only, a right of way not exceeding four rods in width over and along the northerly side of the lands of the United States in Plattsburgh, Clinton County, New York, and extending from the Saranac River to the depot grounds of the company, a distance of about —— rods, or so much thereof as the company may require for the purpose named.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report in that case?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) There is. Does the Senator desire the reading of the report?

Mr. COCKRELL. No, sir; I recollect the case now.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BATTLE OF MONMOUTH.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 188) in regard to a monumental column to commemorate the battle of Monmouth.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I request that that bill be passed over without prejudice, because the morning hour has so nearly expired, and I wish to submit a few remarks upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Jersey? The Chair hears none, and the bill will be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I will call it up to-morrow morning immediately after the morning business is concluded.

WILLIAM G. BUDLONG.

The bill (S. No. 375) for the relief of William G. Budlong was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize the Commissioner of Patents to hear and determine the application of William G. Budlong for the extension for the further term of seven years of the letters-patent for improvement in shoe-pegging machines granted to him the 12th of May, 1863, and antedated the 30th of June, 1862, and reissued upon an amended specification the 29th of February, 1876, the form of such application and the mode of proceeding under it to be in all respects the same as was provided by the act of Congress approved the 8th of July, 1870, entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes relating to patents and copyrights, for the extension of patents granted prior to March 2, 1861;" and if, upon such hearing, the Commissioner should be satisfied that Budlong, without neglect or fault on his part, has failed to obtain from the use or sale of his invention or discovery a reasonable remuneration for the time, ingenuity, and expense bestowed upon it and the introduction of it into use; and that it is just and proper, having due regard to the public interest, that the time of the patent should be so extended, the Commissioner is to make a certificate upon the reissue patent renewing and extending the same to Budlong, his executors, administrators, or assigns, for the term of seven years from June 30, 1879. But no person is to be held liable for the infringement of the patent, if extended, for making use of the invention between the time of the expiration of the extended term of the letters patent and prior to the date of extension; and no prior assignee or purchaser of an interest, legal or equitable, in the patented invention is to acquire any interest therein by virtue of an extension of the patent.

Mr. PLATT. The report in this case is very short and I ask that it be read, and I ask that the Senate pay attention to it, for if there ever was a case where a patent ought to be extended it is this case.

The Principal Legislative Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. CALL on the 26th of January:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 375) for the relief of William G. Budlong, have considered the same, and report:

William G. Budlong, of Providence, Rhode Island, a mechanic, obtained letters patent on the 12th of May, 1863, for an improvement in shoe-pegging machinery.

As shown by his statement, which is corroborated as to the main facts by other evidence, the invention is one of great ingenuity, value, and importance.

It consists in an apparatus to drive the peg by a blow similar to the one given by a hammer in the hands of a shoemaker.

Up to the time of this invention the most approved method was to press the peg by means of a cam into the hole previously made, the diameter of which had to be equal to the square of the peg used, to prevent the peg when so forced from breaking or brooming; the leather which formed the sole was required to be in a damp or wet state, consequently the only holding power was caused by shrinkage of the leather, as it became dry, which caused a friction or adhesion to the sides of the peg.

When the sole became dry the shrinkage of the leather often displaced the peg so much as to separate it completely from the inner sole, and cause the peg to project beyond the sole.

This patent was reissued February 29, 1876. Budlong, from lack of means, was unable to bring his invention into general use, and failed to induce others to assist him.

He used all reasonable effort to introduce it, but without success, putting into the invention and expending, in his efforts to realize from the same, his entire earnings for the past twenty years, except the amount absolutely required for the support of his family.

The entire right in the patent is vested in said Budlong, who now has assurance of assistance to manufacture and introduce his invention if the patent is extended.

No machine of his is in operation, and the public has never been taxed for the improvement.

A favorable report on this application was made to the House of Representatives at the last session.

We think the inventor should derive a reasonable reward for the benefit he has conferred upon the public, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. BECK. I only desire to say that the law as to the term of a patent was changed from fourteen years with the right to extend seven more, and fixed at seventeen years, in order to give men the right to have the benefit of their inventions during that time. If this and other cases such as that we passed a while ago are to go through merely upon the ground that somebody has not made all the money that he wants, and therefore the invention shall be withheld from the public for seven years longer than the law authorizes, upon the plea of charity, we may as well abandon the seventeen-year law altogether. At the end of seven years more the same argument will be just as good that the party has not made all that he wanted and wants a monopoly for seven years longer and prevent the public from using it until he gets all the money he chooses to ask, for a reference to the Commissioner simply means to give him all he asks. We are extending a monopoly seven years beyond what the law allows. If it is in order, as I believe it is at any stage of the proceedings, I propose to enter an objection to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator withhold that for a moment?

Mr. BECK. And I propose to object to all bills extending monopolies seven years beyond the time fixed by law on any patent whatever.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator does not make the objection now, I understand, and I have the opportunity to make a few remarks.

Mr. BECK. I withdraw the objection for the time being.

Mr. PLATT. I have the misfortune, Mr. President, to be chairman of the Committee on Patents. We have a great many applications before us, and I suppose we report favorably three or four or five applications during the session, which are very meritorious. Not more than 5 per cent. of the whole number which come before us is reported favorably.

I do not agree with the Senator from Kentucky that the law extending the term of patents to seventeen years was passed with the understanding that there would be no extension afterward, but I do not argue that now. I want to say one word about the person for whom this bill is to be passed. He was a mechanic; he was a poor man——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Kentucky as withdrawing his objection.

Mr. BECK. I did for the time being, so as to allow the Senator from Connecticut to explain the matter.

Mr. PLATT. He was a poor man; he had no opportunity to introduce his invention. He struggled through the entire seventeen years to get it introduced, and he has not been able to put the machine in operation. He has spent all the money which he earned, $15,000, to try to introduce the invention. The public never has paid a dollar or been taxed a dollar for this invention; and, as I said when I asked that the report be read, if there ever was a case where a patent ought to be extended, it is this case.

Mr. BECK. I renew the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill being objected to goes over, and the next case will be called.

Mr. BECK. I am urged by gentlemen all around to allow the vote to be taken. I do not care about preventing a vote. I am opposed to the bill. I ask for the yeas and nays on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is withdrawn.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, I do not desire to make objection in this case, particularly on the point to which I am about to allude, but I call the attention of the Senate to the form of this and the preceding bill, which recites that the inventor himself has not received sufficient compensation for his invention. Now there are thousands of cases of inventions where immediately after the invention is patented it is sold to a company or to individuals, and great profits are made by the companies or individuals who are the assignees of the patent. Whether that is the case here or not I cannot say.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. CONGER. Let me finish my remark. In the case of either of the two bills which have just been before the Senate the public might have been taxed hundreds of thousands of dollars and the recitals of the bill be absolutely true that the inventor himself, who may have sold his invention for a trifle, or given it away, may not have made any profit from it. I think such bills in their recitals and their requirements for the Commissioner to find should require him to find that the public have not been chargeable with moneys paid to anybody, either the inventor or his assignees; and both bills are faulty in that respect. I say I do not make an objection in this case, because from intimations made to me it is not probable that this inventor or any assignee has ever made a charge on the public for this invention, but I will oppose all bills which do not require a finding by the Commissioner that the public had not been chargeable for the use of the invention, whether the benefit came to the inventor or not.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time to which the consideration of bills and resolutions under the Anthony rule was extended having expired, the Chair will state that the unanimous consent of the Senate of yesterday evening was that the consideration of the tariff-commission bill, which is the unfinished business, should be informally laid aside in order that the Senate might proceed to the consideration of the resolution of the Senator from Florida, [Mr. CALL,] upon which that Senator has the floor.

Mr. PLATT. Can we not have unanimous consent to have a vote taken on this Budlong bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to proceed with the consideration of the bill just under consideration to its conclusion.

Mr. PLATT. It will take but a moment to vote on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. PLUMB. I object. ["No!" "No!"] I will withdraw the objection if there can be a vote without further debate.

Mr. PLATT. There can be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the continuance of the bill for the relief of William G. Budlong?

Mr. VEST. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. PLUMB. Before the Senator from Florida proceeds I desire to call attention to the fact that I gave notice yesterday that at the expiration of the morning hour to-day I should call up the bill making appropriation for the Post-Office Department. I am aware that the courtesy of the Senate accedes to a Senator desiring to make remarks a privilege which is superior to anything involved in the appropriation of money, or any other question that is likely to come before the Senate. I therefore desire to ask the Senator from Florida to consent that I may now move to take up the Post-Office appropriation bill with the agreement that until he has concluded his remarks it shall be laid aside informally after being taken up, and at the conclusion of his remarks it may then come up as the unfinished business. I am aware that the tariff-commission bill has the precedence now under the order of the Senate, subject to the privilege of the Senator from Florida, and I would be glad to make the arrangement, (if I should be entitled to make any arrangement whatever,) that as soon as the Post-Office appropriation bill is disposed of, the tariff commission bill shall then resume its place as the unfinished business, succeeding the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. BAYARD. There is no doubt that the appropriation bills are entitled to precedence here in consideration, and get it. Therefore I should not object that the Senator should move to lay aside the tariff-commission bill informally for the purpose of taking up the Post-Office appropriation bill; and if after that the Senator from Florida should think it wiser or more convenient to himself to be heard in preference to the passage of the appropriation bill, I shall not object; but I do not desire to have the regular order postponed twice, nor should it be; that is to say, made second to a second measure. The regular order of business now before the Senate, if this be the proper time for the consideration of the regular order, is the tariff-commission bill. Upon that as a matter of personal courtesy to the Senator from Florida, to allow him to make a speech upon a totally different subject, we propose to lay that aside in order to take up his resolution, and let the tariff-commission bill come up after that. I believe the Post-Office appropriation bill ought to have precedence of the tariff-commission bill.

Mr. PLUMB. I will accept the suggestion of the Senator from Delaware, and therefore will move to lay aside informally the tariff-commission bill for the purpose of taking up the Post-Office appropriation bill if I shall not be held to transgress any rule of propriety by yielding after I have done so to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CALL. I have no objection to that arrangement.

Mr. PLUMB. I make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair it requires unanimous consent to make such an arrangement as is suggested by the Senator from Kansas, and the Chair will ask if there be objection to the arrangement suggested by the Senator from Kansas. [A pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and it will be so ordered by the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. The appropriation bill is then taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the title of the appropriation bill as the bill under consideration.

The ACTING SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. No. 3548) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

Mr. PLUMB. I now consent that this bill shall be laid aside in order that the Senator from Florida may proceed with his remarks.

INTERNAL-REVENUE EDUCATIONAL FUND.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to give notice, as I understand that to have been the practice heretofore, that on Thursday morning in the morning hour I shall call up the bill (S. No. 850) to appropriate and expend the entire income derived from the internal-revenue taxes on the manufacture and sale of distilled spirits for the education of all the children living in the United States, for the purpose of making a few remarks to the Senate in reference to that bill.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate of the United States:

I inclose herewith an amended estimate for an increase in the clerical force of the office of the Commissioner of Pensions, which I recommend to your consideration.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 14, 1882.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of January 26, 1882, information relating to the amount of indebtedness of the Kansas tribe of Indians to individuals represented by certificates issued by any officer of the Government; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 353) to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 743) granting a pension to Elizabeth Wirt Goldsborough;

A bill (H. R. No. 3251) authorizing the Postmaster-General to adjust certain claims of postmasters for loss by burglary, fire, or other unavoidable casualty; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 140) to print certain eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Michael P. O'Connor.

PROPOSED AMERICAN CONGRESS.

The Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution submitted by Mr. CALL February 20, 1882:

Resolved, That the interests of peace between nations, the obligations and rights which are reciprocal between the United States of America and all the other peoples and governments of the Americas, as well as the commercial interests of the people of the United States, render it proper that the Government of the United States should, in some proper form, adopt measures to settle the controversy between Chili and Peru, and prevent the forcible dismemberment of Peru.

That a congress, to be convened in Washington City and composed of representatives from the peoples and governments of the different states of North and South and Central America, for the purpose of agreeing on some just method of settlement of all questions now existing or that shall hereafter arise between these governments, would be a wise and beneficial measure.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the subject of this resolution touches the interests of the people of the United States in many important points, not only as it concerns their policy toward the peoples of North and South America, but also as it concerns their present and future commercial interests.

The foreign commerce of the United States for the year 1881, including exports and imports, was over $1,600,000,000.

The total foreign commerce of the South and Central American states and Mexico and the West Indies was about $700,000,000. This comparison will serve to show how nearly the subject touches us, and how indefensible it is that we should stand before the world in silent indifference and without a policy, or an effort for the preservation of the states which were born of our example and to whom we pledged our public faith for their protection and support.

SOVEREIGNTY OF NATIONS.

Mr. President, the sovereignty of nations is exclusive within their territorial boundaries and within the limits of their rightful powers as prescribed in their forms of government. Beyond their boundaries, whether in peace or war, they encounter the equal authority of other sovereignties, with no restraining force except the arbitrament of war or the counsel of other sovereignties. Hence, whether of one or of many nations, force is at last the sovereign power to compel obedience to the decrees of nations assembled in council, as well as to settle questions which concern separate nations, between whom no peaceful solution of vexed questions can be had. But although the sword alone can cut the knot of conflicting interests and intense resentments and the lust of conquest and power, the wiser counsels of peace and good-will, the laws of a sound economy, the interests of industry and prosperity, are beginning in this our age, by the consent of nations, to hold in reserve this mighty power of force, and to establish in its place that moral coercion which power exerts over the weaker forces in contact with it.

CONTROLLED BY MORAL LAWS.

Many centuries ago, before Christianity had shed its brighter light on mankind, and while men and women were as much the subjects of brute force as they were of the powers of the elements, the philosophers of a former age had begun to see that the same moral laws which commanded the obedience of man in his separate and personal character were of force to control him in his collective capacity as a people, a nation, a sovereignty. The great lawyers of that wonderful civilization, that complicated and vast society of the ancient world, which even now cannot be said to have a parallel in its complex forms of social and industrial economies, of high and educated intelligence, of development in the arts and sciences which the excavations of the Old World are revealing quite as much as the remnants of their literature—the lawyers who formed the pandects and the codes and institutes of Roman law divided the whole system of law upon the basis of reciprocal duties, acts, consideration, and benefits, and over all inscribed as the directing genius and spirit of its interpretations, the golden rule: so use your own that you will not injure others. This principle is of necessity the guiding spirit of all society, of all association, of all intercommunity of exchange, and of all comity between sovereign nations.

The only difference in its application to the relations between sovereign states and individuals is in the tribunals by which it is administered and the methods by which it is enforced.

PRINCIPLE APPLIED TO CHILI AND PERU.

I propose to endeavor to apply this principle, if it be applicable, to the relations between the sovereign powers of the Americas, and to ascertain so far as we may whether its just application will lead to the settlement of the disputed questions between Chili and Peru, and whether the interests of the United States and of all the powers of the Americas demand that the integrity of Peru shall be preserved, and how far a congress of the powers will be potential to that end both in the present and in the future.

SHALL THE UNITED STATES INTERFERE.

The question presented by the resolution is, Shall the Government of the United States interfere to prevent the forcible dismemberment of Peru by Chili; and, if so, shall it be by a congress of the nations, or alone?

This depends, first, on its rightfulness. Is it right that the United States shall interfere? Second. What will be the benefits or the evils which will result from such interference? As to the first question, Is it right that the United States shall interfere to settle this question and to prevent the forcible dismemberment of Peru?—this may be regarded, first, in the light of precedent of the policy of this Government; and, second, in the light of its own original merits, irrespective of the former policy of the Government. Precedent is only valuable in the light of the probability, resulting from usage or custom, that whatever has been done before had some warrant of reason for it. It can never demonstrate the abstract right, the intrinsic merit, truth, or falsity of any proposition or measure. If this were not so the moral and material world, like Sisyphus of old, would be chained on the path of retrogression instead of progress.

PRECEDENTS ON THE SUBJECT.

Still precedent has its value, and may sometimes furnish a link in the chain of argument. What, then, has been the precedent of our history in regard to the nationalities or independent states of the Americas? Have we proclaimed to them that we were indifferent to their fortunes, and that we would stand aloof from their contests in sovereign indifference and in conscious power, or have we said to them like Manco Capac, and the children of the sun of that wonderful Peru, whose fortunes we are now considering, "we have started on an errand of beneficence to reduce under government and instruct in religion and the arts the savage tribes of America?" Are we carrying with us his golden wand, which of itself sunk into the earth where the new empire of the Incas was to establish the sway of art and science and industry and benevolence?

On the 24th March, 1818, Henry Clay, of Kentucky, in his speech on South American independence, said:

The independence of Spanish America is an interest of primary consideration. Next to that, and highly important in itself, is the consideration of the nature of their governments.

In April, 1826, Daniel Webster, in his speech on the Senate resolution to send a minister to the congress of the American states at Panama, said:

What do we mean by our neutral policy? Not (I suppose) a blind and stupid indifference to whatever is passing around us; not a total disregard to approaching events or approaching evils till they meet us full in the face. Nor do we mean by our neutral policy that we intend never to assert our rights by force. No, sir. Our neutral policy, therefore, not only justifies but requires our anxious attention to the political events which take place in the world; a skillful perception of their relations to our own concerns, and an early anticipation of their consequences, and firm and timely assertion of what we hold to be our rights and our own interests. Our neutral policy is not a predetermined abstinence either from remonstrance or from force. Our neutral policy is a policy that protects neutrality, that defends neutrality, that takes up arms, if need be, for neutrality.

On the 31st of May, 1872, Mr. Charles Sumner offered in the Senate the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That in the determination of international differences arbitration should become a substitute for war in reality as in name, and, therefore, co-extensive with war in jurisdiction, so that any question or grievance which might be the occasion of war or of misunderstanding between nations should be considered by this tribunal.

2. Resolved, That any withdrawal from a treaty recognizing arbitration, or any refusal to abide the judgment of the accepted tribunal, or any interposition of technicalities to limit the proceedings is to this extent a disparagement of the tribunal as a substitute for war, and therefore hostile to civilization.

3. Resolved, That the United States, having at heart the cause of peace everywhere, and hoping to help its permanent establishment between nations, hereby recommend the adoption of arbitration as a just and practical method for the determination of international differences, to be maintained sincerely and in good faith, so that war may cease to be regarded as a proper form of trial between nations.

On the 23d of June, 1874, the Senate of the United States passed the following resolution, which had been reported by Mr. Hamlin, of Maine, from the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved, That the United States, having at heart the cause of peace everywhere, and hoping to help its permanent establishment between nations, hereby recommend the adoption of arbitration as a just and practical method for the determination of international differences, to be maintained sincerely and in good faith, so that war may cease to be regarded as a proper form of trial between nations.

On the 17th June, 1874, the House of Representatives of the United States passed the following joint resolution:

Joint resolution authorizing the President to negotiate with civilized powers in regard to international arbitration.

Resolved, &c., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to negotiate with all civilized powers who may be willing to enter into such negotiations, for the establishment of an international system, whereby matters in dispute between different governments agreeing thereto may be adjusted by arbitration, and if possible, without recourse to war.

On the 15th of May, 1848, the Senate had under consideration the bill to enable the President of the United States to take temporary military occupation of Yucatan. Mr. Calhoun in speaking upon this bill said:

The President in his message recommends to Congress to adopt such measures as they may deem expedient to prevent, in the first place, Yucatan from becoming a colony of any European power, and in the next place to prevent the white inhabitants of that territory from being exterminated or expelled. In support of the latter he informed the Senate that there is now raging a cruel and devastating war on the part of the Indians against the whites, and that unless some foreign power should aid they will be destroyed or driven from the country. In support of the other recommendation he states that the Government of Yucatan has offered to the Governments of Great Britain, Spain, and the United States the dominion over the country in order to obtain aid. The President also informs the Senate that unless we grant aid some other power will, and that ultimately it may assert its dominion and sovereignty over the territory—a result which, he informs us, would be in contravention of the declaration of Mr. Monroe, and which must on no account be permitted. The Committee on Foreign Relations, in order to carry out these recommendations, have reported a bill which is now before us, the first section of which provides for taking military occupation of Yucatan, as recommended by the President.

In pursuance of these ideas so forcibly stated by the foremost statesmen of our country in this century, and by the statesmen of our own time, a lawyer of most eminent fame and ability, Hon. David Dudley Field, has published a code of international law, a book of rare merit, from the preface of which I read as follows:

The Brussels conference was called by the Emperor of Russia with a view to ameliorate the usages of war; or, to use an expression of an eminent French publicist, to promote "the civilization of war." The recommendations of the conference are given in the appendix to this volume.

The Government of Peru, now exhausted and helpless, in 1875 made the following proposition to the other sovereign states of the Americas:

It is impossible to overestimate the importance of this idea, which has occupied the attention of the people of the continent, which originated with them, which receives the support of the greatest intellects of America, and from which the most useful results are to be obtained; and the government of the undersigned, which sees in the meeting of a congress of jurists for the purpose of assimilating as far as possible the legislation of the different States, the most solid basis on which an American union can be supported, gladly submits this idea to the high consideration of your excellency, in the hope that if it should be well received your government will appoint representatives authorized to enter upon so important a transaction.

The congress might meet in Lima, or in any other place which the majority of the governments might determine, and it might commence its sessions with such plenipotentiaries of the invited nations as are present at the time fixed for installation, and to their decisions the other nations might agree, either during the sessions or subsequently.

INTERVENTION DEMANDED.

It will be seen that neither in the resolutions of the Senate nor the acts of the House of Representatives; nor in the opinions of our foremost statesmen, the great master minds of our country; nor in the contemporaneous acts of other nations; nor in the opinions of the most eminent publicists of the age, has the policy of indifference on our part to the internecine contests of the South American states received any countenance, or the policy of non-intervention by the united nations of Europe in the contentions between the separate sovereignties of the continent been favorably considered.

On the contrary, our policy in the past, our interests in the future, so far as regards the South American sovereignties, demand that we should be the arbiter of their disputes and the asserter, protector, and defender of their neutrality.

OUR INTERESTS IN CONTROVERSY.

What interests have we in connection with the controversy between Peru and Chili? What shall we gain or lose by preventing the dismemberment of Peru? What interests of humanity demand of us intervention, either forcible or peaceable? This branch of the subject involves a consideration of our own condition as a people, and also that of Peru, and her proximity and relations, present and future, to us.

Our population is now 50,000,000 and in its natural ratio increasing with great rapidity. To this must be added the increase from immigration. Our arts, industries, and productions are increasing with even greater rapidity than our population. It is time that in the countries, which steam and electricity and the rail will soon bring us into immediate and close contact, we should begin to take whatever interest is necessary to insure markets for our production, commerce for our people, and homes and employment for the enterprising and adventurous. In the speech of Mr. Webster, to which I have already alluded, that great man said:

DANIEL WEBSTER'S ARGUMENT.

But a very different case would have arisen if an army, equipped and maintained by these powers, had landed on the shores of the Gulf of Mexico and commenced the war in our immediate neighborhood. Such an event might be regarded as justly dangerous to ourselves, and on that ground to have called for decided and immediate interference by us.

Again Mr. Webster said:

It has been made matter of complaint that the Executive has not used already a more decisive tone toward Mexico and Colombia in regard to their designs on this island. Pray, sir, what tone could be taken under these instructions? Not one word, not one single word could be said on the subject. If asked whether the United States would consent to the occupation of that island by those republics, or to its transfer by Spain to a European power; or whether we should resist such occupation or such transfer, what could they say? "That is a matter we cannot discuss and cannot consider; it would commit our neutral relations; we are not at liberty to express the sentiments of our government on the subject; we have nothing at all to say." Is this, sir, what gentlemen wish or what they would recommend?

Again:

Mr. Chairman, it is our fortune to be called upon to act our part as public men at a most interesting era in human affairs. The short period of your life and of mine has been thick and crowded with the most important events. Not only new interests and new relations have sprung up among States but new societies, new nations, and families of nations have risen to take their places and perform their parts in the order and intercourse of the world. Every man aspiring to the character of a statesman must endeavor to enlarge his views to meet this new state of things. He must aim at adequate comprehension, and instead of being satisfied with that narrow political sagacity which, like the power of minute vision, sees small things accurately, but can see nothing else, he must look to the far horizon and embrace in his broad survey whatever the series of recent events has brought into connection, near or remote, with the country whose interests he studies to serve. We have seen eight states, formed out of colonies on our own continent, assume the rank of nations.

This is a mighty revolution, and when we consider what an extent of the surface of the globe they cover; through what climates they extend, what population they contain, and what new impulses they must derive from this change of government, we cannot but perceive that great effects are likely to be produced on the intercourse and the interests of the civilized world. Indeed, it has been forcibly said by the intelligent and distinguished statesman who conducts the foreign relations of England, that when we now speak of Europe and the world, we mean Europe and America; and that the different systems of these two portions of the globe, and their several and various interests must be thoroughly studied and nicely balanced by the statesmen of the times.

Again, further on in the same speech, Mr. Webster said:

I have but a word to say on the subject of the declaration against European colonization in America. The late President seems to have thought the occasion used by him for that purpose to be a proper one for the open avowal of a principle which had already been acted on. Great and practical inconveniences, it was feared, might be apprehended from the establishment of new colonies in America having a European origin and a European connection. Attempts of that kind, it was obvious, might possibly be made amid the changes that were taking place in Mexico, as well as in the more southern states. Mexico bounds us on a vast length of line from the Gulf of Mexico to the Pacific Ocean. There are many reasons why it should not be desired by us that an establishment under the protection of a different power should occupy any portion of that space. We have a general interest that through all the vast territories rescued from the dominion of Spain our commerce might find its way, protected by treaties, with governments existing on the spot. These views and others of a similar character rendered it highly desirable to us that these new states should settle it as a part of their policy not to allow colonization within their respective territories. True, indeed, we did not need their aid to assist us in maintaining such a course for ourselves; but we had an interest in their assertion and support of the principle as applicable to their own territories.

The extension of our territory to the Pacific, and of our commerce to Central and South America, the railway and steam, have brought Peru into close proximity to us. The elements of commercial interest, present and future vicinage, and interconnection, on which Mr. Webster based his logical proposition, all exist here.

HENRY CLAY'S ARGUMENT.

Mr. Clay in his speech described the Spanish-American colonies south in these words:

In contemplating the great struggle in which Spanish-America is now engaged, our attention is first fixed by the immensity and character of the country which Spain seeks again to subjugate. Stretching on the Pacific Ocean from about the fortieth degree of north latitude to about the fifty-fifth degree of south latitude, and extending from the mouth of the Rio del Norte, (exclusive of East Florida,) around the Gulf of Mexico and along the South Atlantic to near Cape Horn, it is about five thousand miles in length, and in some places near three thousand in breadth. Within this vast region we behold the most sublime and interesting objects of creation, the loftiest mountains, the most majestic rivers in the world, the richest mines of the precious metals, and the choicest productions of the earth. We behold there a spectacle still more interesting and sublime, the glorious spectacle of eighteen millions of people struggling to burst their chains and to be free. When we take a little nearer and more detailed view, we perceive that nature has, as it were, ordained that this people and this country shall ultimately constitute several different nations. Leaving the United States on the north, we come to New Spain, or the viceroyalty of Mexico, on the south. Passing by Guatemala, we reach the viceroyalty of New Granada, the late captain-generalship of Venezuela, and Guiana, lying on the east side of the Andes. Stepping over the Brazils we arrive at the united provinces of La Plata, and crossing the Andes, we find Chili on their west side, and further north the viceroyalty of Lima, or Peru. Each of these several parts is sufficient in itself, in point of limits, to constitute a powerful state; and, in point of population, that which the smallest contains is enough to make it respectable.

PERU'S CAPABILITIES.

Our inquiry, Mr. President, brings us to the consideration of Peru, her soil, climate, productions, and capacities of production; her people and the obligations which the Christian civilization owes her people for wrongs done to her in the past; and in this connection we shall briefly consider the merits of the pending controversies with Chili. Whether we regard the physical characteristics of Peru, or the former civilization of her people, or her present and future capabilities, she may be truly said to be the land of wonders, a region where realities put to shame the most beautiful fictions of romance, and where reasonable probabilities drawn from the actual beneficence of the former conditions of human life in her borders point to a realization of the most highly colored hopes of human happiness in the future. Prescott says of it:

The topographical aspect of the country is very remarkable. A strip of land rarely exceeding twenty leagues in width runs along the coast, and is hemmed in through its whole extent by a colossal range of mountains which, advancing from the Straits of Magellan, reaches its highest elevation—indeed, the highest on the American continent—about the seventeenth degree south, and after crossing the line gradually subsides into hills of inconsiderable magnitude as it enters the Isthmus of Panama. This is the famous Cordillera of the Andes, or "copper mountains," as termed by the natives, though they might with more reason have been called "mountains of gold."—Conquest of Peru, Prescott, volume 1, page 4.

HER ANCIENT CIVILIZATION.

If we compare the death and suffering, the murder of infant life and old age, the ruthless sacrifice of the tenderest ties, the pain, poverty, want, and disease which every day witnesses as the result of the cupidity of men, of the enormous gains of individuals under the operation of the forces of our social civilization and our laws, with the happiness, the comfort, the abundance of the people in Peru under the government of the Incas, we shall find much to learn from them, and much to deplore in ourselves.

What praise and glory belong to a civilization in which the head of the state exhorted the young men on assuming the duties of manhood as children of the sun to imitate their great progenitor in his glorious career of beneficence to mankind. What shall we say of a system of law which divided the people into ten persons each appointed the tenth man for the protection of the others and required him to see that each of them had the rights and immunities to which he was entitled, and required him to solicit aid for them from the government when necessary, and to bring offenders to justice and imposed on him the punishment of the guilty party if he failed to do so. What of a system in which the judges, high and low, were required to decide all suits in five days from the time they were brought. Where the land, after a reservation of a third for the state, was divided per capita among the people, and a new division made every year, increasing and decreasing according to the necessities of families. Where the lands of the old, the sick, the widow, the orphan, the soldier in actual service, of all who from bodily infirmity or other cause were unable to attend to their own concerns were cultivated by the rest of the people for them under requirement of law. Where manufacture was conducted in the same way, and the result in like manner distributed so that all should have and none should want. Where the mines were worked in the same way. Where a census of great accuracy was annually taken. Where communication by post or mail was established long in advance of Europe. Where the security, happiness, and comfort of the working classes were ever kept in view in all the regulations of the state; a system extending over a vast empire 3,000 miles in length and 400 in width, and lasting through centuries of conquest and power so perfect that a high Spanish authority said it was impossible to improve on the system of distribution, so carefully was it accommodated to the comfort and condition of the artisan and laborer; a system where spacious buildings, the granaries of the sun, stored with maize-corn, quinia, woolen and cotton stuffs of the finest quality, gold, silver, and copper utensils of every kind, were established throughout the country from whence the people, in time of scarcity, and the sick or unfortunate were supplied.

A system so complete and perfect that Mancio Sierra Lejesema, in his testament, made, as he says, to relieve his conscience, declares that the whole population under the Incas was distinguished by sobriety and industry, that such things as robbery and theft were unknown, that far from licentiousness there was not a prostitute in the country, and that everything was conducted with the greatest order and entire submission to authority—a country of public prosperity and private happiness. Shall we compare our civilization in its influence on the individual man with this?

COMPARED WITH OURS.

Society, nations, are but an aggregation of individuals. If all the units are surrounded with an abundance of the objects of labor; if the comfort and wants of each are provided for; if food, clothing, shelter, light, air, and water for each and for all are obtained, what other material result is there to be attained by wise laws and beneficent institutions? Shall we compare with this our declarations of barren and abstract right of every man's equality before the law, accompanied by the inaccessibility of the law to him, and by an inequality, in fact, in opportunity and in fortune?

RESULTS TO INDIVIDUALS.

Equal before the law, but vastly unequal in fortune and the opportunities of fortune, in comfort and the opportunities of comfort, the vast majority destined to ill-requited toil and want, the small minority to luxurious ease. With vast fortunes, often not the result of superior industry, or ability, or intellectual gifts, but of the unlawful use of functions intended for the public good, and the perversion of the public powers to private and personal ends; powers of appropriation of the labor of each and all without compensation.

OUR CIVILIZATION OWES IT SOMETHING.

This land in which human life was so happy, where gold and silver were so abundant, where the use of money was unknown, under the influence of its Spanish conquerors, became a desolation, and a place of human misery, despoiled, trampled upon, and impoverished. Do we owe it nothing? Shall we lift no hand to restore to its people something of happiness and prosperity? Shall it be left a desert waste, and instead of the vast empire of the Incas, with its teeming millions of happy, contented, and prosperous people, with whom a Spaniard, a religieuse of high character, said the moral man under their system is superior to the European?

Shall the influence of Christian nations be such as to make a desert waste, a savage horde, a reign of lawlessness, misery, and crime, of violence and bloodshed, of insecurity of life and property, of famine and want, where once was peace and happiness, law and order, morals and religion.

PERU'S CLIMATE PRODUCTIONS.

Its climate embraces every temperature, every variety of soil and scenery and production. Its mineral wealth, in all probability, is as exhaustless as in the days of the Incas, when the Temple of the Sun was covered with golden plates and cornices. There nature is so fruitful that great mountains of copper and silver and other metals are found, and the fertilizing material for the impoverished soils of other parts of the world is produced and reproduced in almost exhaustless quantities. All the fruits of the earth are produced in her rich soil with ease and abundance—sugar-cane, rice, cotton, tobacco.

The sugar-cane seeds require planting only once in several years. Wheat and corn of the best quality and indigenous textile growths of great value for various commercial uses abound. The mulberry and the silk-worm; the Saña Motupe and Jaen tobacco equal that of Virginia and Kentucky; the grapes and wines of Ica and Moquegua; olives and raisins in Carabaya, and Huánuco coffee of a fragrance delicious as Mocha; the chocolate of Cuzco rivals that of Guayaquil or Caracas. Vanilla, cloves, cinnamon, and pepper grow spontaneously in the provinces of the Amazon. Cochineal and indigo and a diversity of dye-woods are produced in profusion.

Gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, nickel, cobalt, coal, mercury, lead, saltpeter, nitrate of soda, borax, iodine, marble, wheat, sugar-cane, cotton, coffee, tobacco, rice, corn, vegetables, and fruits of every class, magnificent woods, in fact, numberless valuable productions here abound, manifesting the prodigality with which these fruitful regions have been endowed by nature.

RAILROADS.

In a pamphlet published in 1873 I find it stated that under the enlightened and wise policy of the then Government of Peru, President Pardo's administration, 504½ miles of railroad had been built and were then open to the public, and 868 miles of rails had then been laid, and 1,207 miles graded, and 2,030½ surveyed and contracted for at a cost of 180,174,606 soles.

REVENUES.

The import and export revenue of Peru from 1868 to 1872 is stated to have been $24,978,932.80, being an increase of 1,000,000 soles per annum.

Import and export revenue collected in the custom-houses of Peru from 1868 to 1872.

Years.	Import.	Export.	Total.
1868	$2, 904, 905 99	$55, 596 20	$2, 960, 502 19
1869	3, 958, 119 88	89, 778 52	4, 047, 898 40
1870	5, 110, 476 68	135, 341 52	5, 245, 818 20
1871	5, 678, 374 46	155, 324 97	5, 833, 699 43
1872	6, 714, 510 50	176, 504 17	6, 891, 014 67
Total	24, 366, 387 51	612, 545 38	24, 978, 932 89

For 1879 the revenue of Peru was $38,900,000, her imports were $27,000,000, and her exports $45,000,000, while the revenue of Mexico was only $17,811,125, her imports $29,962,407, and her exports $31,669,151. The revenue of Bolivia was $2,929,574, her imports $5,000,000, and her exports $5,647,000, while for Chili the revenue was $27,693,000.87, her imports were $22,740,000, and her exports $36,620,226.

PERU'S PRESENT CONDITION.

Such, Mr. President, was Peru in the days of the Incas, such is she now in natural capabilities. The victim of that chronic spirit of disorder and revolution which has followed the conquest by Spain, her former civilization has been buried in ruins, and her enterprising, active, and industrious people have retrograded in the arts and sciences; but under the rule of an enlightened and able president, Don Manuel Pardo, she commenced her upward march and the development of her wonderful resources, which have been interrupted and to some extent destroyed by the entirely unnecessary, unjustifiable, and cruel war waged against her by Chili, a war of conquest and subjugation, plunder and outrage. The following brief statement, taken from the advance sheets of Mr. Spofford's Almanac for 1881, will give in a few words a correct idea of Peru and Bolivia:

Peru, a republic on the western coast of South America, (area 432,297 square miles; population in 1876, 3,050,000,) is governed, under a constitution adopted in 1858, by a president chosen for four years, a senate of 44, and a house of representatives of 110 members. The revenue for 1870 was $38,900,000, about one-ninth of which was from customs, the expenditures $54,600,000; the public debt was $281,340,684, the interest on the foreign debt being in default. The revenue is chiefly derived from the sale of guano and nitrate of soda. The importations of 1879 were $27,000,000, and the exports $45,000,000. The premium on specie is 62 per cent., and the domestic debt sells at 50 cents on the dollar.

The army consists of 4,670 men, besides 1,000 gendarmes and 1,200 vigilantes; during the war with Chili, lasting from 1879 to 1881, Peru put about 16,000 men in the field; the navy consisted of 18 steam-vessels, well armed and equipped, of 3,396 horse-power, and 66 guns, among which were 7 ironclads and rams which were captured by the Chilians. The merchant marine in 1876 had 147 sailing-ships and 8 steamers. In 1819 there were 1,750 completed miles of railway and 600 more in construction, Peru having gone into the most extensive railroad building in proportion to its inhabitants of any country. Silver is largely mined, the annual product being from three to four million dollars, and coinage is free and unlimited. Peru has a fertile soil, producing cotton, sugar, grapes, and olives, while the forests abound in the cinchona-tree, which yields the precious Peruvian bark, or quinine.

BOLIVIA.

Capital, Lima; population in 1876, 101,488.

Bolivia, a republic of South America, named in honor of Bolivar, (536,200 square miles; population 1878, estimated, 2,080,000, to which should be added about 245,000 wild Indians,) is divided into 9 departments, each having a distinct governor. The government is popular in form, three legislative chambers being elected for four years, eight years, and for life. The president is elected for life by a majority of the collective legislature. The administration belongs wholly to the ministry, which is responsible to the senate. Religion is free, the Roman Catholic being the prevailing form.

The public debt in 1879 was $30,000,000. The revenue was $2,929,574 in 1879, one-fifth of which was derived from customs, about as much from Indian tribute, and half as much from the sale of guano; expenditure, $4,505,504. Imports in 1879, $5,000,000; exports, $5,600,000.

Bolivia abounds in high plateaus, constituting granaries of wheat production, has much valuable timber, and the lowlands are the seat of tropical forests and swamps, with every variety of climate, and two or more zones of production. It produces coffee, cotton, sugar-canes, garden vegetables, and fruits in surprising luxuriance and abundance. Western Bolivia contains the highest mountains of the two Americas, with frequent volcanoes. The great Cordillera range, reaching up into the region of eternal ice and snow, culminating in the peak of Sorata, 24,800 feet high. The silver-mines of Potosi, world-famous for richness of production, have yielded over $1,600,000,000 since 1545. Bolivia is poorly supplied with roads, and railroads are as yet almost unknown, great natural difficulties being presented to their construction.

PERU'S DEBT—EUROPEAN INTERVENTION.

The debt of Peru is £36,600,000. A publication made in Paris March 29, 1881, by the holders of Peruvian bonds in Europe, contains the following statement:

Unless the European powers interfere, a new and greater deception is in store for the creditors of Peru, to whom Chili has been represented as a savior and protector of her rights.

* * * * * * *

At that time Lima had not yet been captured; but since that event, Chilian pretensions appeared to be on the increase. If we can rely on current reports, it is no longer proposed to redeem the entire debt at the price of 10 per cent., but only the 6 per cent. loan of 1870, because the legality of the 5 per cent. loan being contested a rejection of the latter is said to be contemplated.

So that by means of a single payment of £1,192,000, which figure does not even represent the proceeds of the guano deposits during one year, the Chilian Government would consider itself discharged from every obligation toward the creditors of a debt of £36,000,000!

If all indulged in the same sentiments of national antagonism which seemed to have inspired the English creditors throughout this affair, the continental bondholders might have every reason to rejoice, as the 5 per cent. which Chili has, as rumored, the idea of rejecting, is almost entirely in the London market, that is to say, in the hands of the supporters of the very committee which has prompted the Chilian Government to carry its claims to extremes.

But when questions of public interest are at stake, all ill-feeling must be discarded, and make room for the mere consideration of right and principle. Loans have been made to Peru. Their only real and expressly given security is the guano and nitrate. Peru has irrevocably intrusted a banking establishment of unimpeachable character to liquidate all her debts in the only manner which may satisfy all her creditors. At the same time, Chili raises claims simply disastrous for the latter. What attitude must and can the European powers assume?

If the opinions expressed by all jurisconsults are to prevail, it is a strict duty, incumbent upon a government, to protect its subjects against any apoliation on the part of a foreign state. In the actual situation of the two belligerent countries, both interested in the cessation of a struggle which has exhausted their resources, but impeded in this work of reparation by the excitement pervading all minds in Chili and in Peru, moral intervention on the part of the great powers seems inevitable; but this intervention can only enforce the respect due to the vested interests and secure the reparation to which they are entitled.

MONROE DOCTRINE.

Hence it appears that we are again confronted with a reasonable demand on the part of European subjects for an armed intervention of European powers in the settlement of the affairs of the sovereign states of America; an intervention which carries with it the alternative of a guarantee by force of the Government of Peru and her protection against Chili by the European powers, or the compulsion of Chili to the performance of the obligations of Peru. How would the armed intervention of European powers in the maintenance of these states, with the necessary consequence of protectorates over the states of South America, comport with the Monroe doctrine as interpreted by our Government? There can be no question that with such a result the Monroe doctrine would be practically set aside and abrogated; neither is there any doubt that the demand of the subjects of European powers for such intervention by their governments for them is both reasonable and just unless protection is otherwise awarded to them.

CONGRESS OF NATIONS.

The argument on all sides and from every point of view leads to the conclusion of the wisdom, the beneficence, and the necessity of the intervention of the United States and the prevention of the forcible dismemberment of Peru, and the guarantee of a government in the interest of peace and industrial development. The form in which this shall be done has been necessarily indicated in the remarks I have made. It should be done by a congress of the sovereign states of North, South, and Central America, at the head of which the United States, guaranteeing peace, a just settlement of existing disputes, and guaranteeing stable government, and repressing revolution and disorder, and on all these points speaking with their united authority and power in mandatory terms.

PERU-CHILI CONTROVERSY.

Here I will briefly examine the merits of the Peru-Chili controversy. It will be seen that this rests on a claim of boundary and a claim of money in the exaction of a tax of ten cents per quintal on saltpeter. It will be seen from a careful examination of the facts, a statement of which I will print in the form of an appendix, that the relations of Chili to Peru are based on the assumption that Chili has a right to assume the ownership of the valuable properties of Bolivia and Peru, divide them out between some of the prominent members of her government, take military occupation of those states, accompanied by outrage and robbery, refuse to treat on reasonable terms for peace, and constitute herself a government over Peru and Bolivia and hold their most valuable territory.

INSULT TO THE UNITED STATES.

The United States having recognized Calderon's government in Peru, Chili arrests Calderon, imprisons him, and deposes him, so that the friendship and protection of the great Republic brings upon those whom she recognizes and befriends not security and protection but disgrace, insult, and punishment, and we find our ministers and representatives proclaimed throughout the world as not only consenting to this but as undertaking to bind the people of the United States to become a party not only to this insult to the dignity and majesty of this Government and this people, but also to make the vast power and dominating influence of our Government an instrument to force this vandalism upon Peru.

Is this to be tolerated by the Government of the United States? Shall the President and the Senate stand silent and, charged as they are with the preservation of the public honor and the regulation by treaty of our relations with foreign countries, raise no voice of indignant, stern, and mandatory remonstrance and protest?

I affirm, Mr. President, that no like case of indignity to our Government as this deposition of Calderon and his imprisonment and extradition by Chili, after his formal recognition by our Government, has occurred since the days when the pirates of Tripoli and the Barbary states captured our ships, seized, imprisoned, and sold into slavery our sailors and the people sailing under the protection of the American flag; and all this in the interests of a few men controlling the powers of Chili for their personal aggrandizement.

I will now examine very briefly the alleged causes and pretenses of the Chili-Peru war, for the purpose of demonstrating what I have stated.

CAUSES OF WAR.

In 1864 Chili assisted Melgazo to overthrow constitutional government, law, and order in Bolivia. She sheltered him in her capital, aided him in every way, and received from him valuable concessions of territory and rights in Bolivia.

Ossa and Puelma, two Chilians, residing in Bolivia, obtained from Melgazo unlimited gratuitous concessions for working the saltpeter mines. This was in violation of the constitution of Bolivia. This concession was sold or transferred to Melbourne, Clark & Co., who applied to Bolivia for a new grant, offering 10 per cent. of their annual profits. This was granted in 1878 by act of their congress. This tax was very low, as shown by the fact that when Chili took forcible possession of the country she increased it to twenty-five cents per quintal, and afterward to fifty cents. This tax of ten cents per quintal was purely a matter of concern between Bolivia and her grantees, with which Chili had no concern. Yet it was made a subject of complaint, and simultaneously with the diplomatic correspondence on the subject Chili took armed possession of the country. The communications on the subject between the two governments were on the 8th and 15th of February, and on the 14th the Chilian forces took armed possession of Autofagasta without any declaration of war.

The Chilian minister, with an amusing candor and naiveté, says:

The saltpeter territory of Tarapaca was the cause of the war. To return to the enemy after our triumph the cause of contention and the possession of these territories would be the height of imprudence and show an entire want of knowledge on questions of state.

A pamphlet published in Paris openly makes the following charge:

Chili has sacrificed her well being, her honorable antecedents, and her future to the blind ambition of a dozen of her men of influence. We had better be frank; it is no longer a mystery to any one that the principal members of the Chilian Government, state secretaries and congressmen, are members of the Autofagasta Saltpeter Company, the author of the conflict.

* * * * * * *

In this phase of the struggle the United States is appealed to to act as an arbitrator—to examine the claims of Chili and the resources of Peru—and to assist by her good offices in putting an end to a contest which has lost the character of honorable warfare to become brutal massacre. The action heretofore taken in the name of the United States, by which Garcia Calderon was presented to the Peruvians as a president indorsed and supported by the North American Republic, has to some extent contributed to the present helpless condition of Peru, and is an additional reason why the United States Government should intervene as a mediator.

Such is the melancholy picture which our national character presents to the nations of the world, and such the moral influence which our vast power is exerting on the states and people of South America, an influence in favor of disorder and revolution, of barbarism and wrong, of bloodshed and robbery, instead of peace, of industry, of religion, and civilization.

APPENDIX.

PERU—BOUNDARIES.

The Empire of Peru, says Prescott, at the period of the Spanish invasion, stretched along the Pacific from about the second degree north to the thirty-seventh degree of south latitude.

The capitulation made by Francis Pizarro with the Queen of Spain, dated Toledo, July 26, 1529, secured to that chief the right of discovery and conquest in the province of Peru for the distance of two hundred leagues south of Santiago.

Charles V, on May 4, 1534, confirmed in the fullest manner all the previous grants made to Francis Pizarro and his associates; and the boundaries of the governor's jurisdiction were extended seventy leagues further toward the south.

Almagro was empowered July 10, 1534, to discover and occupy the country for the distance of two hundred leagues, beginning, as Prescott says, at the southern limit of Pizarro's territory, and which country—Chili—was to be named New Toledo.

The same author further states that Pizarro, strengthened by the arrival of fresh adventurers, now turned his attention to the remote quarters of the country. Pedro de Valdivia was sent on his memorable expedition to Chili. After the death of Pizarro, La Gasca confirmed Valdivia's commission with the understanding that the "starting point begins at the village of Capiapo, in twenty-seventh degree." Valdivia himself writing to Charles V, on October 15, 1550, says: "Taking my commission from the Marquis I left Cuzco in January, 1540; traveled as far as the vale of Capiapo, which is the beginning of this land—Chili—after crossing the great desert of Atacama."

Pedro de la Gasca reformed the above boundaries, and fixed them at Santa Clara, 25° 37′ 9″, thirty leagues north of Capiapo. These data are found in the "Aubiguo Cedulario de Incas," volume 2, page 25, and expounded by the celebrated chronicler, Anthony Herrera, who, in treating about the audience of Charcas, says its places of importance are: "Mexillmes, Morro Moreno, Rio de Santa Clara, about thirty leagues from Capiapo, where the coasts of Chili begin and where those of Charcas end."

Mr. Carlos Mora Vicuña, a Chilian historian, asserts what everybody knows to be true, namely, that—

"Germimo Alderete succeeds Valdivia by provisions royal dated at Valladolid on May 29, 1555. After him follow Garcia Hurtado de Mendoza in 1557, Francis de Villagra on December 20, 1558; Rodrigo de Quiroga on August 20, 1573; Alonzo Schomayo on April 24, 1581; Martin Ordonez de Loyola on September 10, 1591; Francis de Quinnez in 1590. * * * And in order to weary not the reader and indefinitely extend the list, suffice it to say that there is not the slightest doubt that up to 1680 the Spanish monarch, Charles II, had not changed the boundaries assigned by his predecessors, Charles V, Philip II, Philip III, and Philip IV, to Chili, and that they comprised the territories designated in the jurisdiction of Alderete."

The royal orders, laws, and by-laws for the better management of the posts, carriers, and post-horses of the kingdom of Peru and Chili, of September 26, 1778, decree the erection of pyramids to determine the boundaries between these countries. There is no mistake that said pyramids were erected, for we find in the named orders that "two or three leagues from Rio Frio, toward Vequillas, are found the pyramids that divide the jurisdiction of the river of Peru from that on the side of Chili."

This assertion is proved too by the Chilian commissioner, Mr. Phillippi, who, in his "Travels in the Desert of Atacama," says: "Four leagues from Rio Frio we came across the said columns, which are nothing else but piles of stones ten feet in diameter and four and one-half high."

Viceroy Frey Don Francisco Gil de Taboada, of Lanos, in his report to his successor, Baron de Vallenari, and dated in Lima, June 6, 1796, says: "Peru is bound on the north by the new kingdom of Grenade, on the northeast by the plains of Sacramento, on the east by the ferocious tribes of Pajonal, on the southeast by vice-kingdom of Buenos Aires, on the south by the kingdom of Chili, separating from which is the desert of Atacama, and on the west by the Pacific Ocean." (See the Matalinares Collection of Papers, Documents, &c., volume 52, in the Library of the Royal Acadamy of History at Madrid.)

The royal letters of October 1, 1803, "order and command that the named port of Paposo, with its coasts and territories shall be reincorporated to the vice-kingdom at Lima." Some questions were raised about the erection of forts in the port on August 19, 1803, on account of the scanty population of the place, and Viceroy Aviles, on March 8, 1804, consulted the kingdom on the subject, who by royal letters of March 17, 1805, ordered "his wishes to be carried into effect." (Collection of Royal Letters, volume 26, kept in the above named library.)

Viceroy Abascal, in 1816, says in his report to his successor: "The vice-kingdom of Peru, after the late dismemberments and new additions, is bounded on the north by the province of Guayaquil, the desert of Atacama to the south, comprising in its territory from 32′ north of the equinoctial to 25° 10′ of south latitude."

CHILI—LIMITS.

Constitution of 1822, article 3: "The territory of Chili has for natural limits on the south Cape Horn, on the north the desert of Atacama."

Constitution of 1828, article 2: "Its territory extends from north to south from the desert of Atacama to Cape Horn."

Constitution of 1833, (in force to-day,) article 1: "The territory of Chili expands from the desert of Atacama to Cape Horn."

BOLIVIA AND CHILI—TREATIES.

In the name of Almighty God.

Whereas the Republics of Bolivia and Chili desire to consolidate their mutual and good relations * * * have agreed that:

ARTICLE 1. The boundaries between the Republics of Bolivia and Chili shall meet at the parallel on the twenty-fourth degree from the sea to the Cordillera of the Andes in the divortia aquarum.

ART. 2. The lines of the parallels 23 and 24 are to be considered as fixed and existent as they were drawn on February 10, 1870, by Commissioners Pissis and Majia, for what may regard this treaty.

Should there be any doubts as to the true situation of Caracoles or any other mining districts on account of their being considered out of said parallels, a commission of two, each party naming one, and the commissioners together, or his majesty the Emperor of Brazil, in case of discord, appointing the third arbitrator, shall decide on the subject. Until then it shall be considered within said parallels.

ART. 3. The present guano beds or those which may in future be discovered within the perimeter named in the precedent article shall be equally divided between Bolivia and Chili, the two governments agreeing to follow the form and method employed to-day for their exploitation, administration, and sale.

ART. 4. The exportation duties payable by the ores and minerals found in the above-named districts shall not exceed those charged to-day; and the persons, workmen, and Chilian capital shall not be taxed more than they are to-day.

The above stipulation shall last for twenty-five years.

ART. 5. Chilian and Bolivian products, respectively, imported within the twenty-third and twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth parallels shall be considered free of duties.

ART. 6. The Republic of Bolivia binds itself to permanently keep open the ports of Mexillmes and Autofagasta.

ART. 7. The treaty of August 10, 1866, is entirely void.

ART. 8. This treaty shall be ratified by each one of the contracting republics, and its ratifications exchanged in the city of Sucre within three months.

In witness whereof the undersigned plenipotentiaries of the Republics of Bolivia and Chili have set their hands to the present protocol, and assigned their respective seals in Sucre, this sixth day of the month of August, in year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-four.

[L. S.] MARIANO BAPTISTA.

This treaty was approved by the Bolivian Congress on November 6, 1874, and the ratifications exchanged in La Paz on July 25, 1875.

The same plenipotentiaries signed a supplementary treaty on La Paz on July 21, 1875, namely:

ARTICLE 1. It is understood that the provision made for the exportation in common of the guano existent, or which may be discovered according to article 3 of the treaty of August 6, 1874, refer to the territory extending from 23° to 25° south latitude.

ART. 2. All and every question that may arise in regard to the meaning and execution of the treaty of August 6, 1874, shall be decided by arbitration.

ART. 3. This treaty shall be ratified in some city of Bolivia, in the shortest time possible.

The above supplementary treaty was accepted, confirmed, and ratified in La Paz on September 22, 1875.

SALTPETER DUTY.

[Law of February 14, 1878.]

The Constitutional National Assembly of Bolivia, on February 14, 1878, decrees:

ONLY ARTICLE. The transaction celebrated between the executive and the manager of the Anonymous Company of Saltpeter and Railways of Autofagasta on November 27, 1873, is approved sub conditione of minimum tax of 10 cents for every quintal exported.

HISTORY OF THE SALTPETER COMPANY.

The envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary sent by Bolivia to Chili in 1866 during the war with Spain ceded to the "Society for Exploration of the Desert of Atacama" the right to elaborate saltpeter in the "Quebrada de Maters." Messrs. Milbourne, Clarke & Co., successors to the first society, established their works in another place called "Alto del Carmen;" they further pretended to hold the privilege for the 2,672 square leagues comprising the whole desert. Messrs. Milbourne, Clarke & Co. sold out all their actions, rights, and privileges to "The Saltpeter Company."

The first concession was illegal on the face of it; and besides the laws of Bolivia forbid all concessions that are not made through public auction and to the highest bidder. The mineral code of the country allows only a certain portion of mining districts to be had, and then under determined conditions. The working at "Alto de Carmen" was, to say the least, an abuse and a breach of faith on the part of Messrs. Milbourne, Clarke & Co. The pretended holding of the whole desert was checked by the government's decree of May 16, 1870. After this decree came the "pourparler" between the Bolivia officials and the representative of Messrs. Milbourne, Clarke & Co., and the result was the giving up of three hundred and seventy-five square leagues to said gentlemen. The administrations of Presidents Morales, Ballivian, and Frias, too, issued different orders on the subject.

The Saltpeter and Railways Company of Autofagasta in buying up the concern did it under the proviso contained in the decree of April 13, 1872, the giving up of the three hundred and seventy-five square leagues; and in the transaction made on November 27, 1873, it got, beside the three hundred and seventy-five square leagues, 80,000 square meters of mining soil and was empowered to build a railway from Autofagasta to Salinas, with the understanding that the government would get 10 per cent. out of the profits of the company. This transaction had to go up to congress for approval, which thought fit to impose instead a fixed duty, (see law above,) for governments should not enter into partnerships with commercial houses, because the time may come when justice cannot be administered.

DIPLOMATIC INTERCOURSE.

Since the 1st of May serious differences had arisen between Peru and Bolivia on account of the customs. Chili, choosing the time, enters a protest against the law of February 14, 1878, in very insolent terms and on July 2, 1878, notwithstanding this, Bolivia suspended the effects of the law. Chili is not satisfied; it wants the abrogation immediately by the government, a measure which was unconstitutional and threatens "to declare null and void the treaty we have with that country." The Bolivian Government then answered that the law must be executed. The Chilian chargé d'affaires on the following day (December 18) notifies the rupture of the treaty. Explanations are given as to the reason of carrying the law into execution and asking, at the same time, the arbitration on December 26.

Meanwhile Chili, that had been preparing and was ready for war, sent one iron-clad and troops to Autofagasta, Bolivia, and dispatched ammunitions and soldiers to Caldera, Chili, a port two hundred and nine miles distant from the first.

As soon as the above news reached the government, on January 27, it asked the Chilian chargé d'affaires what meant the presence of the Blanco Encalada and the troops she had on board. The answer was given on the same day, and of course it was most reassuring. The chargé d'affaires said: "There is no hinderance on my part to declare that the presence of the Blanco Encalada in Autofagasta has neither the significance nor the object attributed to her by the government of your lordship."

In order to avoid further trouble with Chili, and in accordance with law, the Bolivian Government, in a decree, recapitulating all the affair from its illegal foundation or concession, taking into consideration the usurping of power of the man who, as pretended president, grant it, and the laws given by the national assembly declaring null and void the acts executed by him and dated on February 1, rescinded the transaction of November 27, 1873, signed between the government and the Saltpeter Company of Autofagasta, and consequently suspended the effects of the obnoxious law of February 14, 1878. One of the ministers was ordered to go (February 8) to the coast as special delegate, and instructions were given to the prefect of Autofagasta to await his arrival and refer all questions to him. Meanwhile the Chilian chargé d'affaires, on February 6, gives forty-eight hours to draw back the decree of February 1, and on the 12th at one o'clock demands his passport. On the 14th of February, Mr. Sotomayor, the future nerve of the war, occupies Autofagasta in the name of Chili and "revindicates her own from the twenty-third degree of parallel." A very important fact must be borne in mind, namely, that La Paz is four days from Areguipa, and from hence to Mollendo, on the sea-coast, one hundred and seventy-three miles by rail. The distance from this port to Autofagasta is three hundred and fifty-one miles in direct line; or, in other words, from the Bolivian capital to Autofagasta at least a trip of six days is required. Autofagasta was kept by twenty or forty policemen and never had troops.

PERU AS MEDIATOR.

On February 6, 1873, Peru and Bolivia signed a secret treaty to mutually warrant their independence, sovereignty, and integrity of territories against the aggressions of states and pirates for taking the same for their own use or with the intent of secession to another power; selling, bartering, establishing a protectorate, or trying to force acts depressive against their common weal. (Articles 1 and 2.)

Availing herself of the good-will she had for her two sister republics and of the provisions of existing treaties of amity and commerce, Peru sent commissioners to Chili and Bolivia in the interest of peace. The first country declared war on April 4, 1879. Consequently the "casus fœderis" (article 4) was declared on April 6, 1879, "two days after the declaration of war and fifty-two after the occupation of Autofagasta by the Chilians." Thus war came about by the willful and unnecessary act of Chili.

The mission to Bolivia had been successful, as can be seen by the following protocol, signed on the 5th of March, 1879:

ARTICLE. 1. Retroaction of things as they were on November 8, 1878, on which date Mr. Fieres, the then Chilian minister of foreign affairs sent his comminatory note.

ART. 2. Evacuation of the Bolivian territory by the forces of Chili.

ART. 3. Awards for offenses inflicted on Bolivia and losses caused by Chili.

ART. 4. Suspension of the law of February 14, 1878, and of the decree of February 1, 1879.

ART. 5. Remittal of the whole question of arbitration, according to article 2 of the treaty of 21st July, 1875.

SALTPETER SHAREHOLDERS AND TAX.

When the Peruvian Congress in 1873 ordered the buying of the saltpeter works (the soil always was national property and its workers never paid a single cent of tax) capital was represented in Tarapaca as follows:

Country.	Number of companies.	Value in American gold.
Peru	80	$9, 628, 603 18
England	3	2, 196, 000 00
Italy	10	1, 552, 274 00
Chili	10	1, 510, 848 90
United States	2	1, 331, 478 00
Germany	3	1, 267, 000 00
Spain	3	670, 500 00
France	4	324, 939 92
Peru—France	1	270, 000 00
Germany—Chili	1	261, 900 00
Austria	4	213, 786 00
Bolivia	2	206, 960 00
Argentine Republic	1	72, 000 00
Peru—Chili	1	39, 600 00
Peru—Italy	1	36, 000 00
Total	135	19, 601, 890 00

Chilian capital was one-thirteenth of the whole.

Shortly after the occupation of Autofagasta the Chilian authorities levied a tax of $1.50 per quintal of nitrate exported.

Messrs. Anthony Gibbs & Sons, who held the consignment of saltpeter in Europe for the Peruvian Government, who loaned Chili money to prosecute the war, who retired their commercial house from Peru immediately after the occupation of Lima, who through two Englishmen, North and Jameson, in Iquique monopolize the guano business, were the principal shareholders in the Saltpetre and Railways Company of Autofagasta.

After them and among the prominent men and dignitaries of Chili, were: Mr. Pinto, the president who declared the war; Mr. Fierro, his minister of foreign relations; Mr. Sotomafor, who "revindicated Autofagasta," and some time since became minister of war, &c.

INVASION OF PERU—BRUTAL WANTONNESS.

Destruction of farms, pillages of beasts, cows, &c., in the country round Lima.

DEBT OF PERU.

The Peruvian Government issued in 1870 and 1872 two loans, amounting together to the enormous figure of £36,600,000, or nearly one milliard of francs.

The 6 per cent. bonds of the 1870 loan bear the statement that the government gives to the subscriber, as a security, all the revenues of the country generally, and particularly the net proceeds of the sale of the guano in the markets of Europe and of its colonies.

The same engagement is found on the bonds of the 5 per cent. loan of 1872, under reserve of the preference right granted to the loan of 1870, but the following guarantees have been added thereto:

1. The revenues to be created.
2. A special mortgage on the deposits.

A decree of the 14th November, 1873, issued in order to specify the nature and extent of the rights conferred on the holders of the bonds of the 1870 and 1872 loans, stipulates that in case of the non-payment of interest in one half year, the bondholders are entitled to send for and to take away the quantity of guano necessary to meet every half-yearly payment.

In a diplomatic circular of the 16th January, 1876, Mr. Elguera, minister of finances of Peru at that time, declared, on behalf of his government, that the nitrate deposits of Tarapaca had been taken possession of by the Peruvian authorities, in order to constitute a new and serious security for the loans of 1870 and 1872, and to make up for the guano should the latter become insufficient or exhausted.

Lastly, by a contract signed in Paris, on the 2d January, 1880, in conformity with a special law voted by the congress, constitutionally assembled, the Peruvian Government gave to its creditors the power of taking possession of the deposits of guano and nitrate, and of working them definitively themselves, until the entire amortization of the loans guaranteed by these deposits.

It is therefore beyond contest, in fact and in law, that the deposits of guano and nitrate of Peru are not only the guarantee of the loans of 1870 and 1872, but are also the property of the bondholders, under the only reserve of the rights of third parties resulting from public contracts.

It is all the more necessary to insist on this point, that it seems to have been altogether overlooked in the midst of the events which lately occurred in the Pacific.

Under good management the guano and nitrate might yield and secure, almost indefinitely, a yearly minimum of £2,300,000, all charges for the working of the deposits being deducted.

The interest to pay on the loans guaranteed by them not requiring more than £1,500,000 per annum, how is it that with an annual surplus of £800,000, Peru became a defaulter, incapable of overcoming any crisis, internal or foreign?

* * * * * * * *

Finding at last that the competition created by its own acts was leading to the final ruin of its creditors, and even to the utter discredit of the guano, its sole and supreme resource, the Peruvian Goverument took, at the end of 1879, the resolution it had unfortunately dreaded to face in 1876, namely, to execute loyally the decree of the 14th November, 1873, authorizing its creditors in case of non-payment to take possession of the deposits mortgaged to them as security for their bonds, and to work them on their own account.

On this basis the congress voted the law of the 10th October, 1879, carried out by the contract entered into in Paris on the 7th January, 1880, with the Société Générale de Crédit Industriel et Commercial.

A few days before, on the 25th December, 1879, a revolution had broken out in Peru. But it could then be assumed that the contract made by the commissioners of the overthrown government would find favor with the new dictator, because, on the one hand, the latter had raised no obstacle to the negotiations which he knew were going on, and, on the other hand, the general features of the contract with the Credit Industriel et Commercial corresponded with the ideas which the new president had himself openly praised when he was only a pretender. Besides, it was the only way of obtaining the necessary means to carry on the war with Chili, and it was the opinion of all the jurisconsults consulted, both in Chili and in Peru, that, considering the peculiar circumstances under which it was concluded, this contract was unimpeachable from the point of view of international and Peruvian law.

Nevertheless, against every expectation, Don Nicolas de Piérola suspended the execution of this contract. Explanations followed, and in February, 1881, fresh negotiations took place, not with a view of modifying what had been arranged in 1880, but to settle the questions left at issue, namely, the accounts of the former consignees, in order to allow an immediate and definitive return to the monopoly.

This arrangement was made on the following basis: According to a judicial decision which had become executory, Messrs. Dreyfus had been recognized creditors for a very large amount, the legitimacy of which, though contested in notorious lawsuits, had been acknowledged in 1878 by the courts of France, England, Belgium, and Germany. To meet Messrs. Dreyfus's claim the government had only guano. Therefore, had Messrs. Dreyfus been paid in guano, to be sold by them in opposition to the other consignees, this payment would have required twice as many tons as was necessary under a monopoly, since it has been shown that the net proceeds of a ton of guano amount to £6 under such a monopoly, whereas the same does not exceed £3 under the present system of competition.

According to the contract signed on the 7th June, 1876, the Peruvian Guano Company had as guarantee for its advances, expenses, and disbursements all the guano it exported. These advances, expenses, and disbursements amounted, at the end of 1880, to about four million pounds. Therefore, if the Peruvian Guano Company had been obliged to repay itself out of the proceeds of the stock under such conditions of competition, this stock would have been entirely absorbed, to the great detriment of the bondholders; but if the same stock is sold under the monopoly, an important surplus may remain for them.

The interest of the creditors of Peru was, therefore, the appointment of a general liquidator—to be in future the sole dealer in guano—by whom the net proceeds might be proportionally divided between all parties, according to the rights of each of them individually.

The Crédit Industriel et Commercial, faithful to the policy it had adopted, accepted this trust at the request of all the continental committees, and established for the purpose a special company, which, under the name of the "Compagnie Financière et Commerciale du Pacifique," was appointed liquidator of the two former consignees, and trustee for the Peruvian bondholders.

One would have imagined that the creditors of Peru, taking into consideration the efforts made and the advantages obtained, would have applauded the arrangement bringing the Credit Industriel et Commercial to their rescue.

Such was not the case, however, at least so far as the English creditors were concerned.

Chili had conquered Peru, and a portion of the British public, bending before brute force, turned to Chili to implore as a favor what on the continent was claimed as a right.

How could the result of the war alter the rights of the creditors of Peru? How could even the annexation to Chili of the territory containing the deposits of guano and nitrate interfere with the contracts entered into with the Credit Industriel et Commercial?

Is it not a principle of international law that the annexing country is bound to respect scrupulously, not only the mortgages consented to foreigners by the dispossessed state on the national domains, but also the contracts which rule the management of such property?

By what strange aberration of mind—forgetting the mortgages inscribed on the bonds, and the right of taking possession of the deposits, granted by the decree of the 14th November, 1873, and rendered executory by the contract of the 7th January, 1880—had the English holders of Peruvian bonds been led to adopt a theory set forth by a committee, which an English judge declined to recognize, a theory by which Chili would be at liberty to dispose of the guano as she thought fit, and would most generously grant an undeserved favor if she abandoned to the creditors of Peru a few shillings out of the enormous revenue arising from this product?

Such an attitude might be understood were Chili dealing with Peruvian subjects, for, in this case, she would be face to face with an enemy; but dealing with foreigners, Chili can no more violate the existing rights than she can decline to indemnify the foreigners who have sustained loss in consequence of the war.

We shall not inquire at present into the motives of the strange conduct of the English committee, but it is our duty to point out the dangers to which are exposed the parties whose interests the said committee claim to represent and to serve.

TARIFF AND TAX COMMISSION.

Mr. GARLAND. I believe the unfinished business is the tariff-commission bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The tariff-commission bill is the unfinished business.

Mr. HARRIS. By unanimous consent it was agreed that the Post-Office appropriation bill should be considered to-day.

Mr. PLUMB. I rise for the purpose of calling up that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When the tariff-commission bill comes up the Chair will recognize the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. GARLAND. Let the bill be announced. I wish to make a short statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be announced by the title.

The ACTING SECRETARY. A bill (S. No. 22) to provide for the appointment of a commission to investigate the question of the tariff and internal-revenue laws.

Mr. GARLAND. I suppose that the friends of the measure reported from the Committee on Finance have it exactly in the shape that they wish it. I give notice that when the bill comes up again regularly for the consideration of the Senate I shall offer as an amendment the bill that was reported by the committee adversely. I shall move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the pending bill and insert the bill which I introduced and had referred to the committee, and which the committee reported back adversely.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3548) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That cannot be done; it is a short bill. The amendments of the committee will be acted on as they are reached.

Mr. BECK. That is what the Senator from Kansas desires.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I suggest to the Senator from Kansas that the amendments be acted on as they are reached.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask to have the committee's amendments considered as they are reached in the order of reading.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That course will be pursued.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in the appropriations for the "office of the First Assistant Postmaster-General," in line 31, to increase the item "for compensation to clerks in post-offices" from $4,235,000 to $4,385,000.

Mr. PLUMB. I have in my hand a letter of the Postmaster-General transmitting to the Committee on Appropriations a letter of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, under whose direction this money is expended, explaining the necessity of, and making an estimate for, the increase recommended by the committee. The theory of the committee was that upon the basis of the expenditure of last year, as settled by the urgent deficiency bill, which was passed a few days since, the amount here added would not more than meet the increased expenses of that branch of the service during the coming year as it ought to be carried on. I ask that the letter of the Postmaster-General and the First Assistant Postmaster-General be printed in the RECORD. If any member of the Senate desires the letters to be read, of course they may be read from the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letters will appear in the RECORD.

The letters are as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., Marc 7, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a letter from the First Assistant Postmaster-General, recommending an increase of the appropriation for clerical help in post-offices over the amount estimated by the Postmaster-General.

In the conclusions reached by the First Assistant I entirely concur.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. O. HOWE,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. WM. B. ALLISON,
Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., March 7, 1882.

SIR: After giving the matter the closest attention, I am decidedly of the opinion that the amount asked for by the late Postmaster-General, for compensation of clerks in post-offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, was too small, and therefore I most urgently request that the sum be increased from $4,235,000 to $4,500,000.

In October last, prior to making up the estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, the Postmaster-General asked for estimates from the First Assistant Postmaster-General. Among the estimates submitted to the Postmaster-General was that for compensation of clerks in post-offices, and the sum named was placed at $4,350,000. This amount was agreed upon in the office of the First Assistant, after carefully estimating what it was supposed at that time the requirements of the future service would demand. The Postmaster-General, in submitting the estimates to the Secretary of the Treasury, reduced the estimate for clerk hire to $4,235,000, cutting off $115,000. This was an increase over the appropriation for the present fiscal year of $385,000. In his annual report the Postmaster-General recommended that Congress make an extra appropriation for clerks for the present fiscal year of $100,000. This has been complied with, thus making the appropriation for clerks for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, only $285,000 more than the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, an increase of about 7 per cent. After I had assumed the duties of First Assistant Postmaster-General, I learned that these estimates had been made. Since that time I have become satisfied that not only the amount asked for by the Postmaster-General is insufficient, but the estimate of my predecessor as well.

The estimates on the increase of receipts for the present fiscal year over the last are not, in any instance, based on less than 10 and 11 per cent., while some of the most sanguine are figuring on an increase of 13 and 14 per cent., and more. The gross revenues of the Department have increased in round numbers from $19,772,000 in 1870 to $36,785,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, showing an increase of 86 per cent. in eleven years. During the same period the amount expended for clerk hire has increased from $2,457,000 to $3,677,000; showing an increase of only 50 per cent. The estimated receipts for the present fiscal year, even at $40,000,000, will show an increase of over 100 per cent. in twelve years, while the increase in clerk hire for the same time (counting the $100,000) will amount to only 60 per cent., plainly illustrating the fact that the increase in the appropriation for clerk hire has not been equal to the very large increase in the volume of work performed, as shown by the great increase in the receipts.

For the information of Congress, as well as the Department, I telegraphed on March 3 to forty of the principal post-offices of the United States, embracing, as you will see, every section of the Union, asking what percentage of increase there had been in the gross receipts for the month of February this year over the gross receipts for the same month last year. The responses I submit herewith, together with the following tabulated statement of the same:

The larger offices were selected not because they were the most important, but for the reason that any increase of business at the great centers is always felt elsewhere. There are many offices that show a larger increase than any of the above named, but with a view of obtaining the general increase of business at the present time, it was thought best to confine our inquiries to the principal offices of the different sections. The result showing an average increase of 24.5 per cent. is highly gratifying, and further illustrates the necessity of a larger appropriation, to the end that the service and those who perform it may not suffer. Only one of the offices mentioned shows no increase, that of Hartford, Connecticut, yet no decrease is reported. There are reasons why the receipts at Hartford have not increased, the principal one of which is that for several months past the postmaster, on the allowances made to his office, has been unable to perform the work of the service in that city. The expense of the service has been increased at Hartford only $700 in ten years. In obtaining the average of increase at the offices in question, it will be observed that Hartford has been included.

* The postmaster at Saint Louis reports that the high water during February, 1882, causing trains to be abandoned and delayed, very materially affected the receipts of the office. The report from Kansas City not having been received at the time this statement was completed, the percentage of increase is figured the same as it was for January, 1882, over January, 1881.

I desire in this connection to call your attention to another fact of great importance: if the Department should expend during the remainder of the present fiscal year the additional $100,000 which Congress has recently appropriated to be expended as clerk hire during the remainder of the present fiscal year—say during the last quarter—it would necessitate cutting down the allowances on the 1st of July next, the beginning of the fiscal year, provided the general appropriation for the coming year is not increased, and yet every dollar of the extra appropriation, and much more, is needed. Should the Department make permanent additional allowances for clerk hire beginning on April 1 next, the amount required to continue the same during the coming fiscal year would exceed the amount asked for by the late Postmaster-General $15,000. It is very important, in fact an absolute necessity, that the Department should have at its disposal on July 1, the beginning of the coming fiscal year, a satisfactory appropriation for clerks, for the following reason:

On the returns for four quarters ending March 31 next (the present month) the salaries of postmasters at all Presidential offices are to be adjusted to take effect from July 1, the beginning of the year. At that time they expect their allowances for clerks and other necessary expenses will also be adjusted, on the basis of the increase of business. This has been the custom for eighteen years, and so firmly has the custom become established that many deserving postmasters will not apply for clerical assistance till toward the close of the old fiscal year, being under the impression that allowances can be made only at the beginning of the new fiscal year. Especially is this true at the close of the old fiscal year and the beginning of the new following the biennial readjustment. You will therefore readily see the necessity of increasing the regular appropriation for clerks for the coming fiscal year in order that the Department may be relieved of great embarrassment.

I am clearly of the opinion that the appropriations for clerk hire for several years has been too small—not in proportion to the increase of business.

The postmasters at small offices, the salaries of whom range from $12 upward, are also, in very many instances, very poorly compensated for the labor they perform. In many instances they are compelled to distribute mails at all hours of the day and night, not only the mail coming to and going from their own towns, but mail in transit to and from other offices, frequently much larger than their own. They are on intersecting railroad, steamboat, and stage routes, and are called upon to perform a great amount of labor for which they receive no compensation whatever. The only way, under the law, by which this class can be relieved is by granting allowances for assistance. The present daily demand for aid from this class of postmasters is very great, as every Senator and Member of Congress understands, yet the number of applications will largely increase during the closing quarter of the present fiscal year, for reasons previously stated. The call for aid comes from all sections. The increasing business largely affects the work in the small separating offices in the East and South, while the rapidly developing West furnishes more work for many of the postmasters of this class than they can hire performed, without paying from their own pockets a sum greater than their salaries amount to.

There is no branch of the public service that the people are so much interested in as they are in the postal service, and they have a right to expect that such service will be satisfactorily performed. They look to the Department to keep it up and improve it, and, of course, the Department must look to Congress for sufficient appropriations to perform the work well and fairly compensate those upon whom the work falls.

In asking that the appropriation for the compensation of clerks in post-offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, be increased $215,000 in addition to the amount already agreed upon by the House, I do so in the true interests of the service and the public, believing, as I do, that a larger appropriation for this purpose is a matter of necessity. It is the intention of the Department to give this branch of the service the closest attention, with a view of making the compensations uniform and placing the appropriation where the needs of the service most require it.

Any further information desired will be most cheerfully given.

Very respectfully,

FRANK HATTON,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. T. O. HOWE, Postmaster-General.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "establishment," in line 37, to insert "under existing law;" so as to read:

For payment to letter-carriers and the incidental expenses of the free-delivery system, $3,000,000; $100,000 of which may be used, in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, for the establishment under existing law of the free-delivery system in cities where it is not now established.

Mr. PLUMB. The purpose of that amendment, I will explain to the Senate, is that there shall be no extension of the free-delivery system as it is now recognized and established by statute, but that this appropriation shall be used by the Postmaster-General for the purpose of extending the delivery system to cities now entitled to it under the statute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 43, to increase the appropriation "for miscellaneous and incidental items" in the office of the First Assistant Postmaster-General from $90,000 to $100,000.

Mr. PLUMB. This is precisely the amount estimated for by the Postmaster-General. It was reduced in the House to $90,000. The sum required was not appropriated last session for the reason that a certain proportion of it had been expended by the railway mail service for miscellaneous expenditures, and it was expected (and was so announced upon the passage of the bill in the other House) that that amount would be provided in another portion of the bill, which was not done. The Senate committee therefore, to avoid the constitution of another contingent fund, concluded to put in the amount asked for by the Postmaster-General.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was in the appropriations for "inland mail transportation," in line 47, to increase the item "for transportation on railroad routes" from $10,655,000 to $11,155,000.

Mr. BECK. Has the Senator from Kansas any information on that subject?

Mr. PLUMB. I have a letter of the Postmaster-General transmitting a letter of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General on this point.

Mr. BECK. I think it ought to be made a part of the RECORD either for the benefit of this body or the other. Very nearly twelve thousand miles of railway service have been added in the last year.

Mr. PLUMB. I will send to the desk the letter to which I have referred. The recommendation of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, made to his superior, the Postmaster-General, in December last, sets out fully the necessity for this increased appropriation. The late Postmaster-General in his report arbitrarily recommends the cutting down of the amount estimated for by his subordinate, the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, $500,000; but upon consideration and hearing before the committee, in which the statements of the Postmaster-General and the Second Assistant Postmaster-General were received, the committee believed that the extension of railroad lines upon which service is practically required to be put will necessitate the appropriation of this additional amount. The amount is not a sum to be expended by the Post-Office Department within its discretion, but is fixed by law. When a railroad line is either newly created or extended, the only discretion which the Postmaster-General has is whether he will put service upon it at all or not.

In a large majority of cases the creation of railroad mail transportation supplants star-route service already existing, which is at a much higher rate per mile per annum. Therefore the extension of the railway mail service is actually in the line of economy, for the service rendered is so much cheaper. As to the item for the compensation of postmasters, the committee felt that declining to appropriate would be simply to deny totally the service to communities entitled to it.

I ask to have inserted in the RECORD, unless some Senator may call for the reading of them, the letter of the present Postmaster-General and of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, in which the necessity for this appropriation is set forth specifically.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letters will be incorporated in the RECORD.

The letters are as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., March 3, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose, for the consideration of your committee, letters addressed to me by Hon. Richard A. Elmer, Second Assistant Postmaster-General, concerning appropriations for the items of railroad transportation and mail-messenger service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883.

The suggestions of Mr. Elmer are correct, and will, I trust, be favorably acted upon by your committee.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. O. HOWE,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
RAILWAY ADJUSTMENT DIVISION,
Washington, D. C., March 3, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to recommend that the estimate for appropriation for inland transportation by railroad routes for 1883 be revised and placed at $11,155,000, as recommended in my annual report addressed to your predecessor.

The growth of the railroad service has been so extensive, showing at this time an increase of about one thousand miles per month, that the present cost approximates $10,500,000 per annum, and the amount asked for in the estimate, although believed at the time by your predecessor to be all that was necessary, is clearly insufficient.

Very respectfully,

RICHD. A. ELMER,
Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. T. O. HOWE, Postmaster-General.

Mr. BECK. I wish to make an inquiry for the purpose of meeting an objection. I was one of the sub-committee along with the Senator from Kansas, but as there has been a good deal of talk indulged in with regard to the extravagance of the Senate adding so much to the bill, I thought under those circumstances, to show the necessity for this additional appropriation, the number of additional miles of railroad and other things should be in the RECORD for the benefit of both Houses. That is all I wished.

Mr. PLUMB. I will state for the information of the Senate that when this bill was under consideration elsewhere, the fact that a deficiency would inevitably result under the estimates made by the Post-Office Department incorporated in the bill of the House was freely recognized It was so stated; and the bill was voted upon in the House with the understanding by the persons having the bill in charge that on the failure of the House to make the necessary appropriation a deficiency would inevitably result by reason of the extension of railroad facilities during the coming year.

Mr. BECK. What is the number of miles of new railroad?

Mr. PLUMB. The number of miles of new railroad service is estimated at about twelve thousand, for which we provide by this appropriation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 48, after "and," to strike out "hereafter when" and insert "if;" in line 49, after the word "company," to strike out "fails or refuses" and insert "shall fail or refuse;" and in line 50, after the word "mails," to insert "for which this appropriation is made;" so as to make the clause read:

And if any railroad company shall fail or refuse to transport the mails for which this appropriation is made, when required by the Post-Office Department, upon the fastest train or trains run upon said road, said company shall have its pay reduced 50 per cent. of the amount now provided by law.

Mr. PLUMB. The purpose of this amendment is to limit this provision, which is a new one and which practically changes existing laws, to the appropriation made by this bill, in order that Congress at a succeeding session, having the matter under consideration then and having observed the practice under this appropriation, may determine freely whether it will continue the provision or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "sub-contractor," in line 72, to insert "on any contract hereafter made;" and in line 76, after the word "may," to insert "whenever he shall deem it for the good of the service;" so as to read:

For inland transportation by starr outes, $7,250,000: Provided, however, That whenever any contractor or sub-contractor on any contract hereafter made shall sublet his contract for the transportation of the mail on any route for a less sum than that for which he contracted to perform the service, the Postmaster-General may, whenever he shall deem it for the good of the service, declare the original contract at an end and enter into a contract with the last sub-contractor, without advertising, to perform the service on the terms at which the last sub-contractor agreed with the original contractor or former sub-contractor to perform the same.

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like to ascertain from the committee why that first amendment was made?

Mr. PLUMB. The purpose of the committee in the amendment which is found in lines 72 and 73 was to limit the provision to contracts which may hereafter be entered into, not because the committee doubted perhaps the power of Congress to interfere with contracts which have heretofore been made, but because they doubted the expediency of it. A large letting has recently occurred. The parties bidding and accepting contracts under awards made upon those bids have undoubtedly had in mind the existing law on the subject of sub-contracts, and the committee believed that, while not perhaps interfering with the legal rights of the parties, it would be inequitable to now come in and insert a new provision, heretofore not existing in the statute, which should prevent these parties from exercising the privilege, which they had at the time the contract was let, of making a sub-contract for the carrying of the mails.

Mr. McMILLAN. If this provision is to have in any case a beneficial operation, I do not see why it should not be made to take effect immediately. As I understand the effect of these amendments, however, it seems to me they leave the whole matter in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, the first amendment making it applicable to any contract hereafter made, and the second amendment providing that in the case of subletting the Postmaster-General may, "whenever he shall deem it for the good of the service," declare the original contract at an end. Is that the intention of the committee?

Mr. PLUMB. That was the idea. The committee believed that the first object to be attained was the good of the service, whether the good of the service referred to the price at which the contract should be made or the character of the service to be rendered, or both, and that after that whatever might properly be done for the protection either of the sub-contractor or of the employé of any person entering into or doing anything about the carrying on of the contract should be taken into consideration. For that reason they have given the Postmaster-General a discretion, if a person should have sub-contracted his contract at a price lower than the price which he had obtained it at himself, and whether he should be required to surrender it would be what was the interest of the service in the discretion of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think perhaps it would be very well to leave this matter in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, but I am unable to see why the operation should be postponed until future contracts. These contracts have been let, or at least the proposals have been made; the biddings have been submitted; they are not, I think, yet concluded, and these parties have been at this letting, bidding just as heretofore, making bids that the parties making them knew at the time were too small to permit of performing the service at all. They have put in bids that every person who knows anything about the service must know are totally insufficient to compensate for the services, so that these bidders shall get the contract and then the contract will be not accepted by them, and the next highest bidder will take the contract, defrauding the Government in that way, and it is done intentionally.

That is the way the irregularities which have existed in the postal service have grown up. The Postmaster-General has never had the discretion heretofore to regulate and correct this abuse. He should have that discretion. But the system of bidding which has prevailed should be stopped now, and this provision should be made to apply to contracts that are to be let this year. It should not be postponed for another year. Let this discretion be vested in the Postmaster-General to strike at this abuse which has brought such disgrace upon the country and upon the postal service. Let the Senate refuse to concur in the first amendment, but retain the provision giving to the Postmaster-General the discretion as that seems to the committee to be proper.

Mr. BECK. I should like to state to the Senator from Minnesota that the contracts are made for four years. In one-fourth of the cases, perhaps in one-third, the contracts were made three years ago, or two years ago. Sub-contracts have been made, and made in accordance with the law, the original contractor perhaps making money out of some and losing on others. Does the Senator think it is fair dealing to close down now on contracts which were made two years ago, when all the service is now put upon the route, where there is no complaint as to the fairness or justice of it? Would not that be substantially violating the obligation of the contract made with the man?

Mr. McMILLAN. This provision relates to contracts, not to sub-contracts.

Mr. BECK. It relates to future contracts, made after this act takes effect.

Mr. McMILLAN. It does not relate to sub-contracts heretofore made, but refers to contracts hereafter made, and permits contractors at the bidding to sub-contract just as they have been in the habit of doing; so that those who have abused their rights under the bidding can assure themselves of the fruits of their conduct by having the privilege of subletting their contracts hereafter. Cut off the right to sublet now, and let that matter be left to the discretion of the Postmaster-General. Make it applicable to the contracts that are now being left.

Mr. BECK. But what about those made two years ago?

Mr. McMILLAN. If sub-contracts have been made there, the Postmaster-General can permit those to stand. The provision refers to contracts, not to sub-contracts. It reads:

Provided, however, That whenever any contractor or sub-contractor on any contract hereafter made shall sublet his contract for the transportation of the mail on any route, &c.

Make this provision operative upon the passage of the law, and the Postmaster-General would then have the discretion under the law of refusing or permitting sub-contracts. Then he could protect the Government against the abuse which has existed heretofore.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask the Senator a question. Does he think it would be right for us to legislate with reference to a class of contracts where they have been sublet at a lower rate than is provided for in the original contract?

Mr. McMILLAN. I think it is right for us to legislate by vesting the discretion in the Postmaster-General in regard to all these contracts.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. Suppose a contractor a year ago or two months ago, if you please, contracted to carry the mails at a fixed rate, and made a sub-contract at a less rate than that which he received, if this provision is made to be retroactive he would absolutely forfeit the contract. Is that what the Senator desires?

Mr. McMILLAN. It leaves the discretion in the Postmaster-General; and where there is no harm done or no wrong perpetrated he will exercise that discretion to protect the rights of parties interested. But if he has the discretion and can apply it to all these contracts, then he can prevent these abuses and strike at them wherever he finds them.

Mr. BECK. All the legislation from line 70 to line 85 of the House print of the bill, and from line 72 to line 119 of the Senate print as proposed to be amended, is new legislation, and much of it of a pretty doubtful character. I thought when I first read the House print that the clause would remedy a great evil, but since I came to understand it better I have grave doubts as to whether any of the legislation will be of any value at all, and for this reason: the principal contractors of the country would no longer make sub-contracts on their great routes, but they would carry them on themselves, hiring men to do the work. It would not change the character of the bidding. It would not enable men of the different States to go in, and there would be no change in that regard. The same combination of which complaints are made will exist under this legislation that exists now, and the men who are now hired to do the work by the sub-contractors will be entirely at their mercy, instead of being as now protected under the law by the Post-Office Department paying them under their sub-contracts, and withholding the pay from the original contractor until the sub-contractor is paid.

We had to pass that law some years ago, because when contractors employed men and did not pay them the men who did the work for the United States came to Congress and appealed constantly that they had done the service and had received nothing. Now they are secured. The Government has the double guarantee both of the original contractor and his sureties and the sub-contractor and his sureties that the work shall be well and faithfully done. While this is an effort on the part of the House to seek to get clear of some very flagrant evils that have existed in times gone by, it will not get clear of them, because the great contractors on the star routes, where alone the great trouble comes, will simply employ men to run their coaches, and they may cheat them just as much as they please. The Department under the House provision will have no power to protect them; the Government cannot protect them, and it will effect nothing except to change the employés to the original contractors, who will obtain all the profits they do now, changing it to that class of men instead of having sub-contractors who are protected by the Government and who are paid by the Government. While I do not want to strike out the provision of the House, if there is any good in it, if it can be amended and extended; while it is extremely doubtful whether any of the good that the House thought would come out of this provision will be obtained with all the amendments that we have added, I desire to say the provision does not seem to me to do much good.

Mr. McMILLAN. If the Senator from Kentucky will permit me to call his attention to the suggestion that I have made, it is that this matter shall be left to the discretion of the Postmaster-General. I myself am not certain as to the effect of the House legislation. The Senate Committee on Appropriations has amended the House provision by placing the matter in the discretion of the Postmaster-General whenever he shall deem it for the good of the service. My point is that that provision should apply to all these contracts, and not be made to operate only upon contracts which shall be made four years hence or two years hence.

Mr. BECK. Oh, no; any contract made after the bill becomes a law will be affected by it. Another suggestion that bore on my mind at least is that if we amend the House provision we can have a full and a free conference over it all and further deliberation, whereas without amendment it would be closed forever, no matter how bad we might ascertain it to be, and it would cut off further consideration.

Mr. McMILLAN. Still, the amendment vesting the discretion in the Postmaster-General will leave that open. The Senate need not agree, however, to the other amendment making it apply to future contracts, because, as I said, these lettings have been made, and the bids made, with the intention of having the contracts go to higher bidders than those who get them as the lowest bidders, and they may sublet their contracts. I think if the first amendment is disagreed to the second may stand, and the conference committee will then have an opportunity of conferring upon this matter.

Mr. PLUMB. It is fair to state perhaps that the committee, being advised by the Post-Office Department, did not attach a great deal of importance to the provision of the House permitting sub-contracting. I have in my hand a letter of the Postmaster-General upon the subject, which I ask to have read, and which explains perhaps not only the doubts of the Department but those which were thereby communicated to the committee in regard to the effect of this proposed legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

The Principal Legislative Clerk read as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., March 11, 1882.

SIR: I submit for the consideration of your committee the following objection to the amendment to the Post-Office appropriation bill providing for annulment of a contract when sublet by a contractor at a lower rate of pay than the amount under which it was awarded by this Department:

First. It does not prevent a contractor from hiring parties to carry the mail in lieu of a formal sub-contractor, and will deprive such carriers of the protection now given under the present sub-contract law.

Second. It does not prevent a contractor from subletting to a partner at the full or a higher rate and filing such sub-contract in this Department.

Third. A contractor can arrange for subletting a contract by obtaining a cash advance of his margin from a carrier, and then sublet the route at the full rate of pay.

Fourth. After a contract has been annulled, with the view of making a new contract with the sub-contractor, this Department would be without recourse, except to readvertise, should the sub-contractor refuse to enter into contract.

Fifth. On those routes where contractors are losing money they can sub-contract at lower rates to partners with the intention of having their contracts annulled; and, after the contracts are so annulled, the sub-contractor can refuse to enter into contract with the Department, thus saving his associate from loss.

It seems hardly just, even if it be constitutional, to deprive those who now have contracts of their existing right to sublet. I should fear the effect of the amendment would be to discourage competition among bidders. It is doubtless amiable for the law to favor local bidders, but I think it more prudent to favor only the lowest bidder who can perform his offer. In my judgment the amendment should not be adopted.

Very respectfully,

T. O. HOWE,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. W. B. ALLISON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. There the reason is substantially stated which moved the committee to make this amendment. It was believed that the provision ought to apply to contracts hereafter to be let, because it seemed unwise, it seemed arbitrary, it seemed unjust, to attach conditions to contracts already let which did not attach at the date of their execution. We believed it would not add to the efficiency of the service; we believed it would not add to the checks or guarantees against fraud, because the frauds, whatever they were, had already been perpetrated.

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Kansas whether the contracts do not in all cases provide for any change or alteration in the law which the Government sees proper to make, and if any contract cannot be changed at any time by the Department, in accordance with law?

Mr. PLUMB. The contracts do provide that the Department may abrogate them, but the contracts do not provide that the Department may change them. If the Department abrogates a contract, the Government is required to pay to the contractor one month's extra pay.

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like to ask if, where the contracts have been let, it has not been the uniform practice to change the contract from time to time in regard to the service?

Mr. PLUMB. I think not, except upon the consent of the contractor. But admitting the question of power, for the sake of the argument, what is gained to the service by coming in now after the contracts have been let and perhaps sublet, and attaching a new condition to the contract? The Postmaster-General has exacted all the guarantees which the law provided he should exact for the performance of the service; he has got the bond; the contractor has entered upon the performance of the service perhaps, and how do we add to the efficiency, the main thing which the law is concerned about, that which we most desire, to wit, the carrying of the mails at the contract price, by putting in here something which disturbs, which does not create, which dues not reform, which does not add to the value of one single guarantee the Government has got for that which it has heretofore contracted it should have. Why say to a man we are willing to make a raid upon you by law? Why say to a man, "because we have got the power, therefore we will jump you," so to speak, "and put other onerous conditions on your contract," unless the Government thereby is to gain something?

The point which the Senator from Minnesota makes in reference to strawbidding, &c., has no place here at all. These contracts have been let, whatever they are; they have been let upon the law as it now stands; they have been let with all the guarantees of competition, with all the guarantees of security to the Government; and in what way, if in any way, could the Government be benefited by now making a change in the contract?

Mr. McMILLAN. The contracts are not closed.

Mr. PLUMB. Suppose they are not?

Mr. McMILLAN. Then they are not entered into. They are not made then.

Mr. PLUMB. What would the Government gain by changing them now? If the Senator from Minnesota will permit me to ask him the question, what will the Government gain by making the change now? Would it get any better service? Would it get it at less price?

Mr. McMILLAN. If the Senator is through——

Mr. PLUMB. I have asked a question.

Mr. McMILLAN. The committee, as I understand it, do not propose at all to change the provision which is contained in the bill as it came from the House, so far as that question is concerned; they only propose to make the operation of the law take effect upon contracts which shall hereafter be made, that is two years or four years hence, so that the provisions here contained shall not be operative until that time. If the provisions here are beneficial at all the Government should have the benefit of them immediately. That is my point. This legislation is contained in the bill as it came from the House, and the committee do not propose to take it away; they only propose to postpone its operation by making it take effect two years or four years hence, when the contracts hereafter to be let shall be made.

If this is good legislation it ought to take effect immediately in the bill, as amended by the Senate committee, even if it should be made to take effect immediately, all the objects referred to by the Senator from Kansas can be attained by the action of the Postmaster-General, because the amendment of the committee leaves the whole matter in his discretion, who will take care of the interests of the Government and also protect the interests of contractors where they ought to be protected. He knows all about the matter.

Mr. PLUMB. The committee believed with the Postmaster-General that there was more than that, the question as to whether this provision would be effective at all of any good to the Government; but inasmuch as it had been put into the bill as it came from the House, the committee deemed it best not to disturb it entirely, but merely to limit it to future contracts, believing that unless something was to be substantially gained it was not fair to interfere with contracts already made.

Mr. McMILLAN. The contracts are not already made; they are not finished yet.

Mr. DAWES. If the contracts are not completed when this bill takes effect, then the bill applies to those contracts.

Mr. PLUMB. It applies to "any contract hereafter made."

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Minnesota says certain contracts which he has in his mind are not yet completed, and he is desirous to have this provision apply to these contracts. It seems to me that the phraseology of the bill will make it apply to them.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Senator from Kansas said the contracts were already let. The contracts now are not closed, but they will be before the time of the operation of the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I desire to vote for the bill as it passed the House of Representatives in this respect, because I think that there was good reason for the House arriving at the conclusion at which it did in passing the bill in the form in which it came to us. The object of it was to break up a certain notorious combination or ring in Washington City which has taken literally the control of the star routes of the entire country. It has brought the Government service into public scandal and disgrace recently in the courts of the country. We have all known for years past that this star-route contract matter has almost exclusively been under the control of a combination here in Washington City.

The House of Representatives and the Senate Committee on Appropriations seem to differ upon what I conceive to be a constitutional question. The Senate committee seem to think it necessary, in order to act constitutionally, that the words "on any contract hereafter made" shall be inserted, so that the operation of the statute shall be in the future and not upon existing contracts. I am not sufficiently well informed in either the practice or the law upon this subject to be able to state a very clear opinion about it; but I have always understood that contracts entered into with the Post-Office Department for carrying the mails, this particular class of contracts, were under the control of the Post-Office Department, that the Post-Office Department could abrogate them or could modify them, and that it has exercised that right very frequently in the interests of the public service.

If I am mistaken in that proposition, then the constitutional question of course would arise whether we can alter a contract already entered into, the stipulations of which have been agreed upon by the contracting parties—and I should like to be better informed on this subject by the honorable gentleman who has this bill in charge as to the precise state of the law, for if we have the power to make these excellent provisions applicable to existing contracts, I am in favor of doing so. I think we should thereby at least put a check on a great public evil, something that the country demands that we should consider, and that we should do if we have the power. I should therefore be glad to know from some of the gentlemen who have familiarized themselves with the statutes and the practice on this subject whether or not it has been the practice of the Post-Office Department to modify contracts after they have been entered into with a view of providing a better service for the Government. It seems to me that it ought to be that way, that our legislation ought to be in that shape, for this Department, the Post-Office Department in Washington, can never secure justice and fidelity in the execution of the obligations of the Government unless some such power as this has been reserved. I should be glad, therefore, to hear what the gentlemen have to say upon the constitutionality of this question, for, if it is constitutional, I shall certainly give my vote in favor of the provision of the House bill.

The Senator from Kentucky said that the amendment was put in in rather a tentative sense, that one object of it was that after the bill might be got into conference the Senate would have the advantage of this proposition for discussion in the conference. This old matter is coming back to us again. Conference committees are doing the legislation of Congress. The Senate of the United States on almost every appropriation bill has been in the habit of relegating these questions to conference committees. We put in propositions here to test our power to overcome the House either by the adroitness or the persistency of our conference committees. I do not consider that legitimate constitutional legislation. I think that every Senator has the right and it is his duty to pass his judgment by his vote upon every material proposition connected with every bill that passes this body, and I am in favor of cutting off the powers of conference committees instead of increasing them and making opportunities for conference committees to go out and juggle and pass bills just as they may see proper. The amendment does not commend itself to me in that view at all. On the contrary, I would rather keep it out of the power of a conference committee to make an arrangement with a committee of the House whereby legislation may be perfected and the Senate have very little to do with it.

Mr. PLUMB. The evils which the Senator from Alabama refers to were fully recognized and they are by the committee, and an anxious consultation and a long one was had with the Postmaster-General, with the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, and with various persons in that Department other than those whom I have named who are familiar with the execution of the law as it now stands. There was as anxious a desire to arrive at a conclusion which would prevent what is known as commercial bidding, which should give to the Government the best possible service for the lowest price and at the same time reserve the right of local bidding against the combination which the Senator from Alabama has spoken of. We submitted this amendment to the Postmaster-General and asked him if it accomplished the design the House bill had in view. His reply has been read in the hearing of the Senate. More than that, it has been stated by the subordinates of that Department having this matter in charge that the House provision alone was totally ineffectual in their judgment.

Under these circumstances the committee felt that but for matters which I will advert to in a moment they would have been authorized in rejecting it as a matter which would accomplish nothing; but with respect to the power and with respect to that opinion which led to the adoption of the provision in the bill, they determined to retain the provision in the bill limiting it to future contracts, as a matter which they believed to be fair, and then to put on as they did two subsequent provisions of their own, which they believed would much more nearly accomplish the object that the Senator from Alabama and others similarly situated have had in view.

The Postmaster-General in his letter expressly says that this provision against sub-contracting does not reach the case it is designed to reach at all. As, for instance, here is a commercial bidder in Washington who bids on five hundred routes in half a dozen Southern States. He does not need to sub-contract his lines in order to relieve himself from the immediate responsibility of carrying the mail. Why? Because he can with just as much facility, just as easily go into those States and hire men to carry the mail as he can go into those States and make sub-contracts with persons to carry the mail.

We are brought in that connection to another evil which has been adverted to both here and elsewhere, and that is the fact that certain of these commercial bidders take contracts either at improvident prices or at, we will say, adequate prices, and in the first instance charge off the cost on that contract to some person whom they either sub-contract with or hire at their will, and make a profit out of these sub-contractors or employés by not paying the price of the sub-contract or of the employment. Of course anything which enables a commercial bidder to pirate, so to speak, upon the local people facilitates his bidding. It tends to create a profit for that class of persons. For the purpose of meeting that case, and not meeting the general proposition hinted at by the Senator from Alabama, the committee proposed to insert an amendment to the bill, which gives to the local people who are employed for the purpose of carrying on these contracts a lien upon the contractor's price for the payment of what he has agreed to pay them.

We think that will accomplish much more toward the extinguishment of the evil the Senator from Alabama is concerned about than the provision which we are now discussing; and, as I said, if that does not seem entirely obvious, in order to re-enforce them the committee on that point have the opinion of the Postmaster-General and of his subordinates, and the amendment which we introduce at a subsequent point in this section, from lines 90 to 112 inclusive, is in substance a provision which is the result of the best judgment and best thought and care and skill of the Post-Office Department upon that subject, and which they say will more than anything else meet the very case the Senator from Alabama presents.

Now, there is no pride of opinion about this particular amendment. We thought, on the whole, that inasmuch as it only put these parties under the necessity of evading these provisions by hiring others instead of sub-contracting with them, it was best not to get up an unnecessary ruction, so to speak, about a contract already executed, insisting on our right to amend it in a way not contemplated when it was let, and while doing this really accomplishing nothing for the service. In other words, if we interpose to put a new and apparently onerous condition into a man's contract we should at least have the excuse for it that it accomplishes some public purpose. That we could not see that this would accomplish, and we sought with diligence and with painstaking care, covering days and days of time, from every accessible source, information that would enable us to make up a judgment. Now, of course, if the Senate think notwithstanding the judgment of the Postmaster-General, notwithstanding all that has been said, that the proviso that a man shall not sub-contract at all practically (because that is what it amounts to) is something which tends to the efficiency of the service or to the prevention of abuses in letting contracts, they will retain the House provision just as it came here. Mind you, the contracts have already been let on the argument of the Senator from Minnesota. The House provision does not correct one single abuse in regard to the contracts yet to be let; it only touches the evil already done. If that is deemed advisable in regard to this matter, so far as I am concerned I have not the slightest objection to any amendment which any person may suggest, and I think the committee is of the same disposition. They will be glad to take the judgment of any member of the Senate. Open the door wide, put on anything, everything you can which will tend to do three things: increase the efficiency of the service, prevent frauds upon sub-contractors or upon local employés, and give the Government the most service it can possibly have for the money it spends.

Mr. MAXEY. I want to ask the Senator from Kansas, who has charge of the bill, a question. I do not understand this language, and I should like to have him explain it, as he has charge of the bill:

> That whenever any contractor or sub-contractor on any contract hereafter made shall sublet his contract for the transportation of the mail on any route for a less sum than that for which he contracted to perform the service, the Postmaster-General may, whenever he shall deem it for the good of the service, declare the original contract at an end, &c.

I do not understand that a sub-contractor makes a contract with the Government at all; he makes it with the contractor. I want this phraseology, "whenever any contractor or sub-contractor," &c., then the original contract is at an end, explained so that I can understand it.

Mr. PLUMB. That was designed to meet this case, as I understand——

Mr. VOORHEES. Will the Senator from Kansas pardon me for interrupting him just a moment to say that it is evident that this bill cannot be finished to-night, and there are reasons why it is desirable, to a portion of the Senate at least, to adjourn at this time and not later. If the Senator will allow me to take the floor for that purpose, I should be glad to move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. PLUMB. I hope the Senator will permit me to answer the question of the Senator from Texas. Then I will yield for a motion to adjourn.

Mr. VOORHEES. Very well.

Mr. PLUMB. The word "sub-contractor" was put in there for this reason: the whole pith and point of this controversy is as to subletting at a lower price than the original contract. Now, then, suppose the original contractor should sublet to his partner at the same price at which he got the contract, and then that partner should go on and sublet to somebody else at a lower price, unless the word "sub-contractor" was in there this whole provision would be absolutely ineffectual. It was designed, therefore, not only to catch the contractor but the person to whom he might collusively make a sub-contract.

Mr. MAXEY. Then I submit to the Senator that the expression "may declare the original contract at an end" does not cover it fully.

Mr. PLUMB. The original contract expresses the entire obligation of the Government. I reckon the sub-contractor's contract would not be of any avail if the contractor's contract was not in existence.

Mr. BECK. I only desire to say a word in reply to the Senator from Alabama, who seems to be afraid of conference committees. He is entirely mistaken if he believes there is any desire to have this put in such a shape that there may be any juggling in a conference committee, as was his expression. We cannot refer here under the rules of the Senate to what took place in the House, either in debate or otherwise; and having all sorts of difficulties about this part of the bill, and having the recommendation of the Post-Office Department against the action of the House, and not being prepared to differ with the House absolutely, we deemed it safer and wiser to have it open so that further information may be had both from the House and the Department, not to change in conference committee anything the Senate may agree to. I hope the Senator from Alabama will understand that. The object is to get all the information we possibly can, not to overrule the House, although the Post-Office Department seems desirous to do it, but to leave it open, so that they seeing what the Post-Office Department have said, and we, as we may, hearing what they had to say, might, having the whole matter left open, come to some wise conclusion satisfactory to all of us.

Mr. VOORHEES. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business which is the bill (S. No. 22) to provide for the appointment of a commission to investigate the question of the tariff and internal-revenue laws, upon which the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] has the floor. If the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] desires to go on with the appropriation bill to-morrow, probably there will be no objection. The Senator from Indiana moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 14, 1882.

The House met at three o'clock and thirty minutes p. m., pursuant to adjournment. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

THE JOURNAL.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to dispense with the formal reading of so much of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings as relates to the introduction of bills and joint resolutions.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the Journal.

Mr. RANDALL. The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday should be read at some time. I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois to modify his request, and allow the Journal to be read to-morrow morning.

Mr. SPRINGER. Very well, I have no objection to that. I ask consent then that the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday be read to-morrow morning.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we dispense with the morning hour to-day.

There was no objection.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, I move that we now proceed with the special order of business set for to-day, which is the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3540) to regulate, limit, and suspend the immigration of Chinese laborers to the United States.

Before the bill is read, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill, now upon the Speaker's table, may be substituted for the House bill, so that we may consider the Senate bill under the special order of the House, instead of the House bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Do I understand that the House has entered upon the consideration of the special order?

The SPEAKER. The special order is the consideration of the bill referred to by the gentleman from California.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is another special order to which I desire to call the attention of the House, which is the bill to send private claims to the Court of Claims. That is a continuing order. Have we not a right to ask for the consideration of the other special order?

The SPEAKER. That was made for a previous day, and has never been called up. It does not, however, lose its place.

Mr. PAGE. I hope there will be no objection to substituting the Senate bill for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The chair will submit the request to the House. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 71) to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese, and substitute it for the House bill.

Mr. HOOKER. I wish to ask if these bills are identical.

Mr. PAGE. They are very much the same. There is a slight difference only.

The SPEAKER. The chair hears no objection.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I object.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will not object to this substitution.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I will ask the gentleman from California if this is the same bill as the House bill.

Mr. PAGE. The bills are very similar, although not identically the same.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. If that be the case I withdraw the objection.

There being no further objection, the Senate bill was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time.

It is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the expiration of ninety days next after the passage of this act, and until the expiration of twenty years next after the passage of this act, the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States be, and the same is hereby, suspended; and during such suspension it shall not be lawful for any Chinese laborer to come, or, having so come after the expiration of said ninety days, to remain within the United States.

SEC. 2. That any master of any vessel, of whatever nationality, who shall knowingly on such vessel bring within the jurisdiction of the United States, and permit to be landed, any Chinese laborer from any foreign port or place shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 for each and every such Chinese laborer so brought, and may be also imprisoned for a term not exceeding one year.

SEC. 3. That the two foregoing sections shall not apply to Chinese laborers who were in the United States on the 17th day of November, 1880, or who shall have come into the same before the expiration of ninety days next after the passage of this act, and who shall produce to such master before going on board such vessel, and shall produce to the collector of the port in the United States at which such vessel shall arrive, the evidence hereinafter in this act required of his being one of the laborers in this section mentioned; nor shall the two foregoing sections apply to the case of any master whose vessel, being bound to a port not within the United States, shall come within the jurisdiction of the United States by reason of being in distress or in stress of weather.

SEC. 4. That in order to the faithful execution of articles 1 and 2 of the treaty between the United States and the Empire of China ratified July 19, 1881, in case any Chinese residing in the United States on the 17th day of November, 1880, or who shall have come into the same before the expiration of ninety days next after the passage of this act, shall depart therefrom, they shall, before such departure, cause themselves to be duly registered at a custom-house in the United States, and produce to the collector of the district at which they shall seek to re-enter the United States the certificate of such registration properly viséd by the indorsement of the proper diplomatic representatives or consul of the United States as required in cases of passports by the fifth section of this act.

SEC. 5. That in order to the faithful execution of articles 1 and 2 of the treaty before in this act mentioned, every Chinese of any class or occupation whatever who may be entitled by said treaty and this act to come within the United States, except such as resided in the United States on the 17th day of November, 1880, or who shall have come within the United States within ninety days next after the passage of this act, shall obtain the permission of the Chinese Government in each case, to be evidenced by a passport issued by said government, which passport shall be in the English language or accompanied by a translation into English, showing such permission, with the name of the permitted person in his proper signature, or, if signed by his mark, attested by a competent witness, and which passport shall state the name, title, or official rank, if any, the age, height, and all physical peculiarities, former and present occupation or profession, and place of residence in China of the person to whom the passport is issued, and that such person is entitled by the treaty in this act mentioned to come within the United States. This passport and the identity of the person named in it shall, before such person goes on board any vessel to proceed to the United States, be viséd by the indorsement of the diplomatic representative of the United States in the Empire of China, or of the consular representative of the United States at the port or place from which the person named in the passport is about to depart. Such passport shall be prima facie evidence of the facts set forth therein, and shall be produced to the collector of customs of the port in the district in the United States at which the person named therein shall arrive.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall forthwith cause to be prepared and kept at the custom-houses of the United States proper books, in such form as he shall prescribe, for the registration of Chinese who shall be entitled under the provisions of this act to the privilege of entering and residing in the United States. Entry shall be made in such books of the name of every such Chinese, and his proper signature, or if signed by his mark, attested by a competent witness, his place of birth, (giving town or district,) date of birth, last place of residence before coming to the United States, place of residence in the United States, if any, names and residences of his parents, if any, date and place of arrival in the United States, employment or business, height, and physical marks or peculiarities by which he may be identified. Every applicant for registration shall make oath to the facts stated in his registry, which oath shall be recorded in the book of registry. Collectors of customs and their deputies shall have power to administer and certify to all oaths under this act.

SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of the collector of customs to issue to every Chinese entitled to registry, and registered by him, at the time of registration, a certificate, in such form as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, setting forth all the facts contained in such registration, and the data of identification prescribed in section 6 of this act, which certificate shall be signed by the collector of customs of the district, or his deputy, and attested by his seal of office, dated the day of its issue, and upon which shall be written the proper signature of the person registered. A minute of the issuance of such certificate and date of issue shall be made in the book of registry on the margin of the registration. The certificate so issued to a Chinese shall be prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated.

SEC. 8. That any person who shall knowingly make a false statement under oath in the registration of any Chinese under the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of perjury; and any person who shall register at more than one custom-house in the United States, or procure more than one certificate of registration, or alter or substitute any name for the name written in such certificate, or forge any such certificate, or utter any forged or fraudulent certificate, or falsely personate any person named in any such certificate, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor; and upon conviction of any offense mentioned in this section the guilty person shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $1,000, and imprisoned in a penitentiary for a term not more than five years.

SEC. 9. That the master of any vessel arriving in the United States from any foreign place shall, at the same time he delivers a manifest of the cargo, and if there be no cargo, then at the time of making a report of the entry of the vessel pursuant to law, in addition to the other matter required to be reported, and before landing, or permitting to land, any Chinese passengers, deliver and report to the collector of customs of the district in which such vessel shall have arrived a separate list of all Chinese passengers taken on board his vessel at any foreign port or place, and all such passengers on board the vessel at that time. Such list shall show the names of such passengers, (and if accredited officers of the Chinese Government traveling on the business of that Government, with a note of such facts,) and the names and other particulars, as shown by the respective passports and certificates, as the case may be, of other Chinese passengers; and such list shall be sworn to by the master in the manner required by law in relation to the manifest of the cargo. Any refusal or neglect of the master to comply with the provisions of this section shall incur the same penalties and forfeiture as are provided for a refusal or neglect to report and deliver a manifest of the cargo.

SEC. 10. That before any Chinese passengers are landed from any such vessel, the collector, or his deputy, shall proceed to examine such passengers, comparing the passports and certificates, as the case may be, with the list and with the passengers, and no passenger shall be allowed to land in the United States from such vessel in violation of law.

SEC. 11. That every vessel whose master shall knowingly violate any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed forfeited to the United States, and shall be liable to seizure and condemnation in any district of the United States into which such vessel may enter or in which she may be found.

SEC. 12. That if any consular officer, on examination of the claims and identity of any Chinese proposing to depart to the United States, shall be satisfied that such person seeks so to do in violation of this act, he shall refuse to certify to the sight of such person to so depart; and every collector of customs shall refuse to allow any Chinese to enter the United States if he shall discover that such entry is unlawful under this act.

SEC. 13. That any person who shall knowingly bring into, or cause to be brought into, or shall aid or abet the bringing or coming into the United States by land, or who shall land or aid or abet the landing in the United States from any vessel of any Chinese not authorized by law to enter the United States, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, for each person so brought or aided to come into the United States, or so landed, be fined in the sum of $100, and imprisoned for a term not exceeding one year.

SEC. 14. That no Chinese shall be permitted to enter the United States by land without producing to the proper officer of customs the certificate herein required of Chinese seeking to land from a vessel; and any Chinese who shall knowingly come into the United States contrary to the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both said punishments, in the discretion of the court; and any Chinese unlawfully entering within the United States, or who shall have unlawfully entered the United States, in any way, either by land or by water, shall be removed therefrom to the place from whence they came by the collector of customs of any collection district in which such Chinese may be found, at the cost of the United States, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

SEC. 15. That this act shall not apply to diplomatic and other officers of the Chinese Government traveling upon the business of that government, whose credentials in the usual form shall be taken as equivalent to the passport in this act mentioned, and shall exempt them and their body and household servants from the provisions of this act as to other Chinese.

SEC. 16. That hereafter no State court or court of the United States shall admit Chinese to citizenship; and all laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 17. That the words "Chinese laborers," wherever used in this act, shall be construed to mean both skilled and unskilled laborers and Chinese employed in mining.

Passed the Senate March 9, 1882.

The SPEAKER. The bill is now before the House for debate.

Mr. CALKINS. I want to yield to my friend from California before proceeding with the remarks I have to make.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. How long a time is allowed for debate?

The SPEAKER. One hour to each member recognized.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Debate is not then limited?

The SPEAKER. No time has been fixed for closing the debate.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, I consented that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] should occupy the floor first, as I did not feel like speaking myself to-day, having been in the House since ten o'clock this morning, and prefer, therefore, to wait until to-morrow. The gentleman from Indiana is prepared and desires to speak to-night. I desire to say further, that there is a House print of the Senate bill which members can obtain by applying to the Doorkeeper.

Mr. BUCKNER. What is the number?

Mr. PAGE. The Senate bill numbered 71, printer's number 5672. I desire to say, also, that there is a clerical or typographical error in the bill on page 3, line 6. Where it now reads eighteen hundred and eight, it should read eighteen hundred and eighty. At the proper time, if necessary, I shall offer an amendment to correct the error.

The SPEAKER. It will not be necessary for the gentleman to offer an amendment to correct an error of that kind, for the original bill of the Senate will be the bill before the House for its consideration.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I understand the bill which bears the printer's number 5672 is the correct imprint.

Mr. PACHECO. That is the correct imprint, as the bill passed the Senate.

Mr. CALKINS. Mr. Speaker, I am aware that in discussing the question before the House now I shall not be able to do the subject the justice or to discuss it with as great a degree of understanding as those gentlemen who will follow me and who have made the subject one of careful study, and have, so far as they can or are able to do, mastered it. But I thought proper to discuss one branch of the subject to-night, and leave the general features of the bill, as well as the general system and the policy to be pursued by the Government, to a more thorough discussion by those who shall follow me. It must be borne in mind at the outset that we are now entering upon a policy, just after having passed the one hundredth year of our national existence, which has heretofore been unknown to our system and to our legislation. It has been the universal sentiment of our people heretofore that our doors were open to the immigration of all people; that we invited people from all other lands and climes to find homes upon our shores; and that we would not only protect them but give them homes among us and clothe them with the garb of American citizenship; that all persons were cordially invited to come to this model Republic.

It must not be forgotten that our Republic bore a prominent and conspicuous part in opening up traffic, trade, and commerce with the Empire of China in the first instance, and that it was one of our own citizens who did much to bring into close relations the people of that empire with those of our own Republic.

In dealing with this subject, therefore, it is necessary to find some basis on which to stand and upon which the policy as directed or sought to be directed by this bill may be safely anchored. For if such a principle or proposition or basis does not exist, certainly to launch upon a sea such as is presented by the provisions of this bill would be very dangerous to this Government, if not dangerous to those that are immediately affected by it in other lands.

I recognize as a cardinal principle for governments, as well as for families, that that person or that government that does not protect the members of his or its own household first is worse than an infidel. If the principle is a wholesome one for families it applies as well to nations. I am aware of the further fact that the recent distinguished Senator from my State, now deceased, had come to a conclusion somewhat in conflict perhaps to that which I shall try to maintain. But whatever may be said of his very able report, fragments of which have been left to us, I find in it a basis upon which every person can safely stand, and which I am willing now to take as the text, if you please, of the remarks I propose to submit upon this subject. It will be found on page 3 of his report, in the printed volume of testimony taken before Senator Morton's investigating committee in 1880. In considering this question this occurs:

> In permitting the people of other countries to come here and live and become citizens, we have the right to prescribe such conditions and create such safeguards as may protect us from pauperism, crime, and disease; to fix the period of probation and the reasonable terms upon which they may become citizens and entitled to participate in government. To regulate immigration and prescribe the terms upon which we will admit men of foreign birth to the exercise of civil and political rights is one thing, but their prohibition or exclusion in whole or in part is quite another. To make such regulations as will protect the interests, morals, and safety of our people against foreigners is both our right and duty; and in the exercise of a sound discretion I do not see that we may not discriminate among the nations and exact terms and conditions from the people of one country that we do not deem necessary as to others. We have always made this discrimination with regard to the right to become citizens, of permitting none but white persons to be naturalized. As to all other rights of foreigners coming to our shores to work or trade or manufacture and acquire property, we have never made any distinction. To do that now would be a great innovation upon the policy and traditions of the Government, and would be a long step in the denial of the brotherhood of man and the humanitarian policy inaugurated by our fathers.

While Senator Morton recognized the right of this Government to take such steps as would prevent crime, pauperism, and disease, as well as other things, his conclusion was that to attempt to exclude them altogether, or so restrict immigration as would practically amount to exclusion, would be an innovation upon that which we had regarded heretofore as one of the great rights or pillars of our Government.

I am for this bill because it will restrain crime and prevent pauperism and disease.

I do not understand that the bill before the House is obnoxious to the points made by Senator Morton. It is not a bill to exclude Chinese altogether from our shores, but is a bill to so restrain Chinese immigration, to place around it such bulwarks and barriers as will protect our citizens from the very things which are mentioned in the report. And if this is the purpose of the bill, as I understand it to be, I am entirely content to give my voice and my help to such protection as I am convinced the people of the Pacific coast need against undue Chinese immigration.

We are confronted, then, at the threshold of the investigation of this question with this fact to which we cannot shut our eyes: the population of the Chinese Empire has been variously estimated by various people at from 300,000,000 to 435,000,000. Upon that subject I read an extract from the statements made before Senator Morton's committee in 1880, by Mr. Pixley, found on page 26 of that volume. To the question—

> What is the population of China, as far as can be ascertained, and the general condition, manners, customs, and institutions of the people?

The answer was:

> The population of China is estimated by the Statesman's Year-Book, which is an American authority, at 405,213,152, and later at 450,000,000 in round numbers. The encyclopedia of Charles Knight, an Edinburgh book, an English authority, fixes the number at 360,279,612. Maunder's Treasury of Knowledge, one of the most reliable compilations of English literature, fixes the number at 375,100,000. Mr. Shaw (and where he obtains his figures I do not know) fixes it at 400,000,000. Governor Low, our late minister to China, for some reason puts it still lower, at 300,000,000. Charles Walcott Brooks puts the figures at 413,267,030. Mr. Doolittle, the author of Social Life of the Chinese, fixes the number at from 348,000,000 to 435,000,000.

Probably as accurate a statement as can be made or on which we can safely stand is that there are from 365,000,000 to 400,000,000 people in the Chinese Empire.

This empire, overcrowded as it is with this great population, is brought into close proximity to this country by the interchange of commerce which has sprung up between the two nations. It is idle to scoff at the idea that in a very short time enough of this population might not be transferred to the Pacific slope and to other portions of our country to entirely inundate and crowd out from certain sections the race or races of people who now inhabit this continent.

I say it is idle to shut our eyes to that fact, for the reason, among others, that during several years after commerce and friendly relations were established between the two countries, as has been shown by the testimony in this volume, a very great influx of Chinese occurred, with much less facilities for transportation than now exists. Whatever there is of speculation or theory or conjecture in what may take place in the future, we are to deal with facts that have occurred and now exist. And I very much prefer to confine my remarks to the knowledge which we have than to enter into that realm of conjecture which has no safe anchorage.

I apprehend there is good ground for fears of such an influx from China to this country as to crowd out those who now live in and inhabit parts of this Republic, and which furnishes one reason, and a strong one to my mind, why some restrictions should be placed on this immigration.

If I thought it would destroy or largely injure or interfere with the commerce which now exists between the two nations, I should hesitate much before voting for a law that would tend to bring about that result. I acknowledge and admit that any nation of the great family of nations on this globe that attempts to shut itself out from commerce with its sister nations is doomed to one of two conditions: either a retrograde movement toward semi-civilization or to semi-barbarism and inevitable decay.

Upon this subject, then, of how this restrictive legislation will affect the commerce between the two nations I am guided entirely by the opinions of those who have made the subject a study. I submit for the consideration of the House the testimony of Mr. King, of California, who has been long in the merchant service of the United States, and who has also acted as United States consul at one of the ports of China. On page 120 of this volume he submits a statement as to how the commerce between the two nations would probably be affected by a law restricting immigration from China to the United States.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question, so that I may see if I understand him correctly?

Mr. CALKINS. Certainly.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understand the gentleman to say that if this proposed legislation interfered with the commerce between China and this country he would be opposed to it.

Mr. CALKINS. Not exactly that.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is the theory, I understand. Then I would ask the gentleman what necessity is there, other than of commerce, that would justify the proposed change of the great rule of our Government?

Mr. CALKINS. In the course of my remarks I take it that my views on that subject will be fully made known. It would somewhat detract from the force of the argument I am now making for me to stop and answer the question of the gentleman now. I will state, however, that I have tried to consider that subject, and in the course of my remarks my conclusions will fully appear.

Upon this question I propose to submit the views entertained by Mr. King, a gentleman who is an expert on the question, who has studied it not from any stand-point of partisanship but from the higher plane of what would be right and what ought to be done in this matter. I will read from page 120 of this volume what he says. The question propounded to him was this:

What is the condition of commerce between the United States and China? And how has it been or may it be affected by Chinese immigration?

The answer was this:

The condition of commerce between China and here likely to be affected by Chinese immigration I conceive to be unimportant, consisting only of commodities imported for their use, which become proportionately less all the time as other places contribute those articles, as rice from Siam and Honolulu.

Further on in his testimony he states that after a careful examination he thinks the commerce that exists between the two nations would not be and could not be seriously interfered with if such restrictive legislation should be passed as would not excite the hostility of China; because the Chinese, like all other people, will trade in that market of the world where they can obtain cheapest what they want.

Taking, then, his views on that question as being authoritative, so far as they can be so, I pass to another question. It is objected by a large portion of the people of our Republic that this legislation tends to hinder and delay the Christianization of China; that it is an obstacle to success in that direction. From the testimony adduced and elicited investigation I deny that to be the case.

After a careful reading of this testimony, as well as of other works upon the subject, putting aside for the present the testimony of our missionaries, I affirm that we have made little or no progress, with all the treasure we have poured out for the purpose, in bringing the pagan Chinese to acknowledge the Christian civilization of our age or the Christian religion in its purity.

Mr. TAYLOR. Not as they saw and understood it.

Mr. CALKINS. It is in evidence before the committee, and not denied, that there is not a single one of the class of Chinese sought to be restricted by this bill who professed Christianity and was still professing it after he had lived in California a sufficient length of time to become familiar with our language. Notwithstanding the fact on their first arrival they take advantage of our Sunday-schools, and of all the avenues opened to them by the Christian people of that coast, they do so for the sole purpose of becoming familiar with our language so that they may trade and traffic and amass sufficient money to enable them to return to China. When they attain some proficiency in our language they immediately abandon the Christian churches and the Christian religion, and turn their knowledge thus attained to worldly accounts.

It is sworn in this testimony, and not denied, that the class of men whose immigration this bill seeks to restrict have in no instance that can be found been converted to Christianity, so that the most devoted friend of Chinese immigration can say that the person was a converted Christian. I make the challenge openly for any gentleman to find one instance in this whole volume where one of that class of persons denominated "coolies"—which means the lower class of day laborers—has been converted to Christianity, although they have been with our people ever since 1850 I believe.

Upon this point I submit some small part of the testimony which I have gathered in my researches. I read now from the examination of Mr. King, on page 115. The testimony I am about to read was given under cross-examination; and I will state to those who have not had occasion to examine this volume that on the Pacific coast an organization known as the "Six Chinese Companies" are engaged in procuring the lower class of Chinese laborers, known as coolies, to sell themselves in China into a sort of slavery, and transporting them to this country, where the amount which was necessary to pay the sum named in their contract made in China is worked out by them as slaves; for I can use no other term that sufficiently describes it.

Mr. BROWNE. My colleague will allow me to ask him how it is possible in California or any other State of the Union to enforce a contract made between a cooly and the Six Companies, or anybody else, by which the cooly becomes to any extent the slave of his employer.

Mr. CALKINS. My colleague would not have asked that question if he had given this subject as careful investigation as I have tried to do. These coolies do not regard our system of laws except for the purpose of evading them. They bring with them to this country a system of laws of their own; and they enforce among themselves these contracts and their own laws; so much so that, according to the sworn testimony in this examination, men are hired to assassinate those who dare violate their contracts, and when prosecuted in our courts are protected by the rankest perjury of men who dare not testify to the truth.

Mr. BROWNE. Then I understand it is by the enforcement of Chinese law in the State of California that these persons are in a state of servitude.

Mr. CALKINS. Exactly. They do not assimilate with our people, and will not, as I shall presently show.

Mr. BROWNE. This servitude is voluntary.

Mr. CALKINS. Perfectly so in this country, but nevertheless it exists.

Mr. SPRINGER. Voluntary as to classes, but compulsory as to individuals.

Mr. CALKINS. I was stating that the Six Companies employed very learned attorneys, who appeared before this committee and subjected every witness to severe cross-examination. This man, Mr. King, was being cross-examined when these facts were elicited:

Q. You stated that you did not believe that one of a thousand became Christians here?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How do you know it?
A. I do not locate it here so much as in China. I say I believe it from the statements made by the Chinese themselves to me, and from my observations of those who have been professedly converts among the missionaries in the different ports of China, that when the missionaries left they returned right to their pagan worship.

I do not read these passages in extenso; I simply call attention to these extracts for the information of persons who may want to search this matter down. On page 31 Mr. Pixley, speaking upon this question, says:

Upon the religious question we shall admit, in advance of its discussion, that we have no views in common with that class of well-fed, well-salaried, and comfortable missionaries who when enjoined by Gospel authority "to go forth from Boston to teach the Gospel in heathen lands," are endeavoring to outwit the Divine Master by importing the heathen to California. Our religion is not broad enough nor our humanity sufficiently comprehensive to be willing to share our country, our civilization, our Government, and our future wealth and welfare with the heathen Chinese.

He then goes on to give his reasons. I have read this extract for the purpose of making the observation that in a country like ours, broad in territory and having all climates within its territorial limits, a person who will not respond to the necessities of the people in any part of the country is not broad enough to legislate for the Republic. If there is a condition of things applying peculiarly to any part of the country which demands at the hands of Congress serious consideration and legislation, no sentiment, however plausible, should stand in the way of doing justice to that community.

It is a well-known fact that all classes of citizens in California—with the rarest exceptions—men of all shades of political opinion, all denominations of Christians demand at the hands of Congress some legislation restricting this immigration. There is no adverse sentiment on that coast upon this subject. There may be here and there an exceptional case, but I am speaking of the great sentiment of the people. Standing, then, as they do, demanding of a common legislature some legislation on this subject, I say the question is not one of sentiment, but it is our imperative duty, legislating, as Congress does, for the whole country and all portions of it, to respond to the demands and necessities of that people.

Mr. BROWNE. I would like to ask my colleague whether he remembers the time when the people of Indiana, by a vote of over one hundred thousand majority, excluded negroes from the State?

Mr. CALKINS. I do recollect that not only the State to which my colleague and I belong did so but other States in the West took that stand. I bear in mind also that the cases are as dissimilar as night and day. We then had to legislate and did legislate with reference to a class of people whom we found upon our shores, who were brought here not by their volition but against it; and however harshly I might criticise what I now believe to have been legislation in the wrong direction, I am not willing to concede that there is any parallel between the two cases. They are not similar.

Mr. WHITE. Do I understand the gentleman to mean that the provisions of this bill have reference only to a particular class of Chinese immigrants?

Mr. CALKINS. Simply to coolies.

Mr. WHITE. Is no other class excluded?

Mr. CALKINS. They are denominated in the bill "laborers," but which simply strikes at the cooly traffic.

Mr. WHITE. I simply ask for information.

Mr. CALKINS. I must ask my friend to pardon me for not being up with the minutiæ of this bill, as I have left all that to my friend from California, [Mr. PAGE,] who will to-morrow enter upon a detailed statement covering all these points. In my researches I have left the frame-work of a bill and its details to those familiar with the subject, simply striking the center of what I thought to be important questions.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. As this is to be noticed in advance, I hope the gentleman who undertakes to tell us that laborers mean coolies only, will at the proper time tell us what then is the occasion for having section 17 define laborers to include both skilled and unskilled laborers and persons engaged in mining?

Mr. CALKINS. The gentleman will excuse me.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I only do it to have it all out.

Mr. CALKINS. That will be explained by my friend from California and those who have given it special attention.

In the next place, Mr. Speaker, after having simply glanced at this question of Christianization, I come to examine another question, and this only casually, and that is the policy of the Government in admitting a class of people into our country who do not, and cannot, and will not, assimilate with its people; who come here for a special purpose only and who, when that purpose is accomplished, immediately return to and remain in their own country. When they land on our shores it is not for the purpose of becoming citizens, but for the purpose of amassing sufficient fortune to return to their own country, there to live and die in its enjoyment. I state it as a fact developed by this investigation, and I state it as a historical fact as well, that you cannot find within the territorial limits of this Republic any Chinese neighborhood (and I use the word neighborhood to describe a colony) who have any idea of becoming American citizens. You cannot find one who has ever given any thought or attention to our institutions or form of government.

Mr. BRIGGS. Do not the laws prohibit naturalization?

Mr. CALKINS. We do not prohibit people who do not ask it of us. We ought not to be so excessively liberal as to extend it to those who do not ask that boon or benefit. It is a sufficient answer to say that none of them, except in rare instances, have ever sought to become citizens of this Government. But as to that I do not care to go further, as I am confining myself to the class of Chinese known as coolies. On that subject I wish to read from the testimony of Frederick F. Law, on page 65. It is as follows:

Taking our system of government in its broad sense, of course I am of the opinion that the immigration of any people who cannot assimilate, amalgamate, and become part and parcel of this Government and of its people is a disadvantage per se.

That is a proposition which I take it no thoughtful man will dispute.

Now, will they assimilate or amalgamate? Let us see. When we deal with facts and leave that realm of speculation where so many men like to lose themselves, it is shown conclusively that not only do they not wish to assimilate and amalgamate but that any such action is against their present wish, sentiment, and religion.

As to why this immigration should be restricted I will read again from the testimony of Governor Low, who was not only governor of the State of California but at one time our minister to the Chinese Empire. He says at page 71, in answer to the question—

Do they come here for the purpose of making this their home and living here, as immigrants from Europe, or to make money and return to China?

A. From my knowledge of these people they all come here to make what money they can and with no idea of remaining.

I need only say here that a better informed man on any subject cannot be found anywhere in the United States. Judging from his testimony, he is as broad in his humanity as he is in his knowledge, and his judgment is that this immigration must be restricted for the benefit of our own people.

Bearing on this subject, I make the following quotation from Mr. Pixley's statement at page 16:

All Chinese contemplate returning. They must be buried in celestial soil. Their superstition and their religion is that there is no approach to the heavenly or celestial realm except from the Celestial Kingdom. The spirits of those who are buried here wander in darkness throughout the ages, separated from their ancestors, which is a serious bereaval to them.

Therefore, when they come to this country they intend to return, from superstitious and patriotic ideas, and it is so thoroughly ingrained into their history and superstition that they enter into a contract that if they die pending their contract their bodies shall be returned to China. When you see a burial passing through our streets; when you see the express wagon passing along our avenues, burning Joss papers, and throwing out upon either side of the street their little clippings of white and colored papers, they are taking their dead to the cemetery, not for burial, but for deposit until an accumulation is sufficient to justify the charter of the whole of a ship that shall carry them all back to the port from whence they came. Twenty-seven years have demonstrated the purpose of the Chinese in coming to this city, and, as I said, they come to make a stake and return.

I also read the following extracts from Mr. King's testimony before the committee, (page 103.) It has a peculiar significance, and I especially invite the attention of the House to it:

By Mr. PIXLEY:

Q. For what purpose do they come? With the intention of remaining and making the United States their home, or returning to China when they have acquired a competence?

A. They come to earn a certain sum of money and return. They never care to learn our customs or habits, or to follow them. Except to this end and for this purpose only do they attend schools and missionary places.

Q. Do they become attached to our institutions and reconciled to live and die here?

A. But few ever know more of our institutions than that which they are brought to labor about. They know the police and courts punish or protect them, and that the use of money enables them often to escape punishment. They have no respect for oaths. (Page 104.) The courts of Hong-Kong and China never rely on their oaths. I do not believe that one in a thousand of the claimed converts to Christianity respects or believes in it but as a means to obtain employment. They (coolies) often abscond from their contractors bringing them to Hong-Kong, or when they may have been stolen for the Peru or Cuba trade by their contractors. I have often seen their contracts, and had them translated. They generally bear the seal of some petty Chinese official of the interior, and state that their relatives or friends pledge for their security, and that the contract will be kept by the cooly; contractor advancing money to be repaid out of small earnings, with interest often as high as 5 per cent. per month, and that pay as due shall be given or remitted to China. Nearly all who come to California are from two districts or counties lying close to the city of Canton—Tinong and Sinwai. They are always at variance, often fighting on ship-board, and have been known to have pitched-battles in California. But few are artisans arriving here, being mostly ignorant agricultural or other laborers from the very lowest classes. From these districts go also all Australian Chinese coolies, and these are caught or bought, mostly those for Peru and Cuba, but not from there to Luzon, Strait Settlements, Java, Borneo, &c. They are obtained at Swatow, Amoy, and Ning-Po for those places. (King, 94.) On their arrival here they are packed like hogs to such companies having his contract viséd, and commences his fees to insure his care if sick and return dead or alive, but not his pay from the contractor, but that he shall fill his part, if able to compel him, the coolies to do it, or prevent his return until he does.

I come now to another branch of the discussion to which I desire to call attention.

I plant myself on that part of the report made by the distinguished Senator from my State as to the duty of our Government to prevent disease as well as pauperism being transplanted from other countries to ours. On that question I read extracts selected from the testimony taken by the committee before alluded to, and I may say that the testimony, uncontradicted, of physicians called before the committee, shows that these Chinese have brought with them to this country that loathsome disease known as leprosy. According to the testimony it exists among them all the time; it never has been eradicated and never can be. Are we to say that the people of this country can or ought to amalgamate with a class of men in whose system is sown the seeds of that awful disease?

I quote from the testimony of John L. Mears, M. D., at page 131 of the testimony taken before this committee:

Q. How is the skin of the (leprous) patient?

A. The disease of leprosy the name indicates. Leper means "scaly." It first commences on the extremities, a little, round, circular spot, red and shining, and then a scale forms on that, and it is a succession of scales forming and dropping off all the time, and after awhile another adjoining that, and so on, until it will cover the whole body.

Q. Do you see anything like that here?

A. O, yes. I have seen men at the hospitals—some of those we sent back. Their feet dropped off by dry gangrene, and their hands were wasted and attenuated. Their finger-nails dropped off.

Mr. King, at page 105, says:

Of eight hundred and odd whom, with the physicians, I had stripped from head to foot and closely examined, more than seven hundred and forty showed to the satisfaction of the physicians that they had had the small-pox before.

* * * * * * *

I should state here that on taking them back to China I found a greater proportion then than that. It was very rare to find a Chinaman thirty years of age returning to China but what had the small-pox, whether before he came or after he was here; but it exists among them all the time.

Governor Low, at page 74, says:

I think that the well-being of the whole coast would be promoted by limiting it, (Chinese immigration.) I think on the broad principle, as I stated, that it is undesirable to have an unlimited quantity of an alien people who cannot assimilate, who cannot with safety to ourselves be allowed to become citizens in a republican form of government.

But it does not stop there. Ninety-nine out of every hundred of them have the small-pox, and that is testified to by those who are well qualified to give information upon the subject. It has been testified that from the time the first ship arrived on the Pacific coast with coolies up to the present day these people have never been free from that loathsome disease.

Now here is the cooly's idea of America in his own home, and some time it is well to know just what people think of us. This is the idea that the cooly brings with him here of our nation, as testified to by these witnesses. Of course I understand and appreciate that in all heathen and pagan lands other nations are regarded according to the physical force displayed by them, and the American Navy at the present time, or, in fact, at any time since we have had any commercial relations with the Chinese, has never been remarkable for its display of physical force when compared with the navies of other nations. But from that Navy, as far as they can see it, and from mingling with our traders, they get their idea of this nation.

Thomas H. King, in his testimony, page 99 of this report, says:

The Chinese always say that the Americans in China oppress them less, fight with them less, make less demonstration, have less men-of-war, with less naval forces, than any other nation. They say he is a good trader and a very "small-fightee man."

In other words, their idea is that we do not amount to much in a fight but to a good deal in driving a close bargain.

Passing then to the question of citizenship, and as to whether it is desired by these persons to become citizens of the United States or not, I desire also to read from the testimony taken by this committee. Mr. Pixley says, in reply to the question—

Do they become attached to our institutions and reconciled to live and die here?

A. They have no love for our institutions. They have no knowedge of our institutions. There are many of them who are intelligent in trade, intelligent in the books of Confucius and the classics of the Chinese Empire; but I presume there is not one in this State who could answer intelligently what was the form or scope or object of our constitutional form of government.

Again Mr. Louderbeck, police judge, testifies, in answer to interrogatories, as follows:

By Senator COOPER:

Q. Do you think it possible for them to assimilate with our institutions?

A. I do not know what might become of these parties here, with their children born here and reared here, with the contact which is going on with the white race in the process of ages, such as was arrived at in bringing the colored people from Africa for the sake of getting cheap labor in the South. They brought them there and had the cheap labor. I cannot tell what result ages might have on these people. I do not know what effect years and years and centuries of contact with the civilization and intelligence of the white race would have on them.

Now, that is the testimony of men who have been with them from the beginning, of men who have mingled with them for years, who have studied the subject in all its aspects, and are competent to give the character of testimony to which I have referred. Again, Mr. King says, on page 114:

Q. What interest do the Chinese take in the politics or institutions of the country, and how many of them have become citizens of the United States?

A. As near as I can learn none of them learn much of our institutions except the prisons. They do not know or care about citizenship, only to evade the merest duties, tax, or burden of it.

Speaking upon another subject, as to how they enforce contracts, and about which my colleague was inquiring, Mr. King testifies that they not only bring their own ideas upon the subject but their own law for the enforcement of contracts, which is the enforcement of them through the influence of physical fear, and speaks of the organization among them of a system of hiring men to assassinate persons who dare to violate contracts made in China. Upon this subject Mr. King testifies as follows:

Q. Are there not men who could be hired to assassinate a man?

A. I think there are, and frequently do assassinate about this town. I am told they frequently assassinate Chinese in this town.

Q. At the instance of the Six Companies?

A. At the instance of the Six Companies. I have it from Chinese who have explained this to me when beyond the fear of their country or persecutors, where they would tell the truth.

Q. That is to say, in our language, if one of these men supposed to be subordinate to these companies, and many are here under their patronage, rebels and revolts, and will not do what he has agreed to do, then these companies can hire these men to assassinate such person?

A. They keep them in their employ to intimidate these coolies.

Q. To the extent of assassination?

A. They have been pointed out to me by reliable Chinese.

Mr. REED. Reliable Chinese!

Mr. CALKINS. That is true—as the gentleman from Maine has said sotto voce—that the testimony is of that character, and it is not such evidence as could be desired; but it is the only available source of testimony upon that subject, for they refuse to be bound by any of the laws or proceedings in our courts. This, Governor Morton, in his report, admits; and while upon that subject I desire to read a clause from his report. He says:

A common vice with them is perjury in the courts. The testimony shows them in many instances to have imperfect conceptions of the obligation of an oath.

That is a very mild way to put it if you will read the testimony taken on that subject.

But it is also true that their women are imported as slaves and are brought here and held here as slaves.

I do not care to read further on this subject.

He admits that these men have no more moral sense of the obligation of an oath administered in our courts than a brute; nor do they pretend under any circumstances that the oath is binding upon them or upon their conscience.

Now I come to another question. Out of the eighty thousand Chinese now upon the Pacific slope it is admitted that there are not a dozen Chinese men who have their wives with them. There are perhaps two thousand Chinese women who have been brought here and are now on the Pacific slope, but not as wives. They are slaves, and fill baser positions than that. The testimony upon that question I will print, and not offend the ear by reading.

Mr. Pixley, on page 30 of his remarks, says:

I understand there is a law forbidding the immigration of married women. It is a matter I undertook to investigate some years ago, but like all matters involving the investigation of Chinese laws there is such a conflict of testimony that it is impossible to get anything correct. They have no printed code that we know anything about, but a gentleman by the name of Breck, who was consul at Swatow for a long series of years, and who seemed to be very intelligent on this subject, informed me of the existence of that law. He was quite positive that no wife would be permitted to leave the country, and I think it will trouble people here to prove that any wife of honor who was married there has ever been brought to this country. We know that boys go back from here—cooks and servants—and they bring back a wife. They send for women, and buy them or marry them and bring them, and they are their wives according to our law, but according to their code or their law I have never known of an instance where an adult Chinese resident of respectability brought to this country his first wife or wife of honor.

Thomas H. King, page 96:

Of the women but very few, rarely any, come of their own will, but they are bought in China, generally from brothels, to be sold here on arrival or held by importers in brothels here. Of those few rare instances, there are some who send to China direct for mistresses, purchasing there rather than to rely on the limited market here afforded. But they are commodities, and the traffic as carried on has all the supervision, yet greater profit to the Six Companies, as I am told by many of Chinese here. The cooly women, or bawds, make a business traveling to and from China conducting this trade; and when official or unofficial outcry or obstacle is offered here, the stream continues from China nevertheless. This is but less true of the coolies who come here via Portland, Oregon, where sailing-vessels are constantly loading for Hong-Kong.

Mr. Pixley, on page 22, says:

Interrogatory 18. How many Chinese women are there in this country, and what is their condition and character? Are they free, or are they bought and sold as slaves?

Our answer is, that we shall prove that there are 4,000 Chinese women in the State. There are from 1,200 to 2,000 in the city, and they are all prostitutes or concubines, or second wives.

We shall show by Mr. Shaw, and by reference to his testimony, that prostitution in China is a profession, and not a disgrace. We shall show by the police that houses of prostitution hold their inmates here in bondage. We shall show that they are bought and sold, and transferred by bills of sale like cattle, and as slaves were in pre-rebellion time. We shall show that they command a market price like any other human chattel which has ever been subjected to the market for the sale of service.

Mr. King says, on page 109:

But few (Chinese women) come here except from Chinese brothels, or raised for prostitution in China, which is a business there. They are sold here after their arrival to live with some one man in the city or some place in the interior from where the men come to purchase them, or to live in some brothel in the city or the interior. As a rule they are young, often only thirteen years old, and accompanied by less diseases on arrival than the men, but mentally they are very weak, acting like slaves, with but little or no education, and often appear dejected.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I come to another question, which is the main one, to which I desire to call the attention of this House, because all these other subjects, in my judgment, lead to this one, and which I shall discuss very briefly. That is the protection this Government owes to the labor of the country. I plant myself upon the broad ground of protection to American labor, and I challenge the humanitarians and the sentimentalists to reconcile their views of the right of unrestricted Chinese immigration with their ideas of a protective tariff if they can. Let them, if they can, go to their laborers and convince them that unrestricted Chinese immigration is right and still advocate the protection of American labor. I announce as a fact that the wages of a Chinese laborer in China is from three to five dollars a month. That is the total sum which he receives. He performs in this country three-fourths as much work per day as our laborers do.

Mr. FISHER. Is it not greater than that when he comes here?

Mr. CALKINS. I will not get into a colloquy with the gentleman, but will read the testimony and he can answer it when he comes to speak in his own right.

Governor Low says, page 67:

Q. What is the general wages of that, the lowest class of unskilled labor, in the province of which you speak?

A. I should say that from three to five dollars per month, or its equivalent, would be a fair statement of the wages.

Mr. Pixley, on page 19, continues:

And here comes the question, How does their employment affect our white labor?

We answer, and this is the burden of our arraignment of this Chinese immigration: it is not our sympathy for the wealthy classes, it is our sympathy for the labor classes, upon which, whatever may be our feelings, depends really the whole superstructure of our Government.

It is admitted by every man who studies the genius of American institutions, that labor is noble and ennobling; that the man who has arrived at a competency must labor to hold his own and not relax into that system of do-nothingness which we see in other countries. In other words, the idea of the American is that every man must work, and that all protection which can be planted about the laborer shall be given; that his hard toil may be amply compensated, for he has nothing to sell but his day's work, and that he ought to receive the highest wages which can be paid for the labor which he performs. And yet you invite, by throwing your doors open to competition with these Chinese laborers, whose maximum wages is $5 a month, a countless number of men to compete with our labor at a price which cannot be borne.

When you go to your people, you who have looms and spindles and forges, you who are going to vote against this bill, I ask you to explain to your laborers how it is possible that you have left the doors all open to a competition by which their labor may be entirely rooted up and destroyed, and by which their children and themselves may become paupers; for that is the inevitable result unless you restrict this immigration.

I quote again from Mr. Pixley:

One hundred of them would live in this room—

The room in which the testimony was taken—while the poorest Christian family of five in the State would think themselves crammed in double the space. In your minds you may drift off to see how this affects rent. Sixty thousand people live in six or seven blocks of this city. If 60,000 adult male laborers could take their place, we would have 60,000 Christian, white workingmen.

Mr. King, at 105, says:

By Mr. PIXLEY:

Q. How does their employment affect white labor, and do they prevent the immigration of white labor to this coast from Europe and from the Eastern States?

A. For reasons mentioned in my answers to the 6th, 7th, 8th, and 9th interrogatories, they are fast closing upon all such pursuits, and stopping white Europeans or Americans from coming here, as well as driving out those who have come here and been engaged for many years past.

Governor Low, on page 75, says:

The laboring classes of the Eastern States and of Europe could not get here; they had no means. The inconvenience and expense of getting here was so great that they could not come; but with the completion of the railroad, and with the surging of the tide westward, coming by easy steps, from this time forward there would probably be sufficient labor to replace Chinese that will go home. The State would not suffer in its material interest if Chinese immigration should practically cease or become very much lessened. The unlimited importation of Chinese and settling them in colonies, as they do here, undoubtedly in its competition with free labor does harm.

Mr. Pixley, on page 18, remarks:

A Frenchman conceived the idea of introducing the manufacture of slippers into San Francisco, and did it. Every Chinaman whom he employed in turn became a manufacturer. It required no capital. A single piece of sole-leather and the remnant of a carpet was the stock in trade; and to-day the Chinaman has driven France from the field and occupies the position in the slipper trade. The cigar manufactory went through the same process. Originally the Germans had the cigar trade. In their zeal or overzeal for profits they introduced Chinese labor to their shops. They instructed Chinese cigar manufacturers, and to-day the Chinaman controls the manufacture of cigars in the city of San Francisco.

Governor Low, on page 84, says:

Q. A Chinese shoemaker is hired at $1 per diem. He boards himself and finds his own lodgings. He is hired by a middleman; somebody hires him; he has nothing to do with the manufacture?

A. You can get information from others. Statistics are better than impressions.

Q. Do you think a white man can sustain himself on a dollar a day and find himself, and board himself and family in this city?

A. It would be pretty hard.

Thomas H. King, at page 104, says:

By Mr. PIXLEY:

Q. What kind of labor do they perform?

A. As domestics they plod along in drudgery. They are not so valuable as formerly. Before, many, including artisans' occupations, offered, but of late they canvass the cities as tinkers, chair and crockery menders, drive carts, and act as hostlers and gardeners, besides large numbers who are peddlers of fruits and vegetables and provisions imported by Chinese, which they also peddle about town, as rice and oil. They do the largest part of the laundry work of the Pacific States, carry on fisheries of the inland waters, are largely employed in all agricultural pursuits as employés, often are proprietors of garden and fruit farms, and are also largely engaged in gold mining, generally working out poor or abandoned diggings or claims. In this city they find employment in factories, and in all kinds not requiring steam power. Learning the trades they soon set up for themselves in the craft, and by their cheap mode of living soon control such industries as shoe and cigar making and other kinds. They are the only scavengers of the city. Of late they have entered into trades as masons, carpenters, painters, tinsmiths, &c., keep stores of their own, and sell American commodities. It applies more to this city than to the interior as I have seen them.

Q. What rate of wages do they receive?

A. From my observation of them as domestics, about 10 per cent. less than Europeans; as hostlers and gardeners, from 30 to 50 per cent. less; as agricultural laborers, 20 to 30 per cent. less; as common laborers, 50 to 60 per cent. less; as artisans from 50 per cent. and upwards less than Europeans or Americans and all others; as laundrymen and peddlers they earn about half that which supports white labor here.

Thomas H. King, at page 101, says:

By Mr. PIXLEY:

Q. What is their moral and physical condition?

A. Bad, dirty, with vermin and skin diseases especially.

Q. Do they come voluntarily, and by what means do they get here?

A. They sell their services for a term of years to cooly brokers, and some have declared that it was to pay debts they were inveigled into by gambling and other vile ways. I would state that that method is a very common one by which the Peruvian and Cuban cooly trade is supplied. The Chinese being inveterate gamblers, they are by pimps and runners coaxed into places of dissipation, where they will readily begin gambling and soon lose money upon their pledges given, and when not able to pay it they are obliged to go as coolies, fearing the consequences, as intimidated by the petty officials, who are a party with the pimps or runners, generally obtaining the money.

Thomas H. King, in his examination, page 93, says:

That makes the cooly trade to California a very remunerative one for consuls, consequently it is their interest to continue it; and especially is this true of the women. Of the many thousand Chinese whom I examined while acting for the consul at Hong Kong, nearly all, but a few boys, or those who had been to California before, appeared to be going under contract, seldom knowing the purport more than that they were going for three or five years, for as many dollars per month, to labor as directed, often knowing that they were to be cared for if sick, and sent back at the expiration of the contract, or their bodies, if dead, and so otherwise ignorant that they were very easily scared if any one intimated to them that they were deceived. Sometimes they refused to go on board at Hong Kong, as was the case with a few cargoes once a few years ago going to New Orleans, when they nearly all jumped overboard, some drowning, in Hong Kong Harbor.

That is the exact fact. Wherever they come they spread mildew and rot throughout the entire community. And yet, upon a mere notion of humanitarianism, you throw open the doors because you say the sentiment of the people of this great Republic is to invite the people of other nations to these shores. By so doing you plant a cancer in your own country that will eat out its life and destroy it from among the nations of the earth. On the subject of the cooly trade and what are coolies, I call attention to the testimony here given. Also to the question of slavery which is made manifest in our own midst without power in our courts to interfere.

I have already occupied more time than I intended. I will close by saying to this House, and especially to this side of the House, that you cannot justify your action upon the proposition that you must protect your industry and your labor, if at the same time you open wide the doors on the Pacific slope against the protest of every man and every woman and every child in that section, and allow these people to come in upon them like the locusts of Egypt.

With these facts before us, with a bill the policy of which is simply to protect our people against that which they say is surely and certainly sapping and destroying all of their industries, which is proving a sure source of pauperism and of crime, which is ingrafting upon this great people the disease of leprosy, which is also disseminating among them other diseases worse than those mentioned—with all these facts staring you in the face, can you upon a simple question of sentiment say that you will extend no relief to these people? Can you reconcile that with your conscience?

For me, whenever any person in distress, though he may be the lowest and humblest citizen of the Republic—black, white, red, or any other color—shall hold out his hands and ask that by legislation or in any other way in my power, I shall extend aid to him, I will relax no effort to make that man better and happier. I will come to his rescue and to his aid. If any gentleman on this floor or in the country does less, he certainly does not come up to the standard which the great average of civilized mankind has fixed for all.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the House now adjourn.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the motion to adjourn, leave of absence was granted, by unanimous consent, as follows:

To Mr. RICE, of Missouri, until Monday next, on account of important business;

To Mr. SHERWIN, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family; and

To Mr. BELTZHOOVER, indefinitely, on account of very serious sickness in his family.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 4754) to admit free of duty certain steam-plow machinery now at the port of San Francisco.

EMPLOYÉS OF PENSION BUREAU.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I inclose herewith an amended estimate for an increase in the clerical force of the office of the Commissioner of Pensions, which I recommend to your consideration.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 14, 1882.

MAILS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND NEW SOUTH WALES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Postmaster-General, transmitting a communication from the colonial secretary of New South Wales, urging the importance of maintaining the present direct mail steamship communication between San Francisco and Sydney, New South Wales; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DESTITUTION FROM THE MISSISSIPPI OVERFLOW.

Mr. KING, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish this House with an estimate of the number of persons made destitute by the overflow of the Mississippi River and its tributaries who are now receiving subsistence under his direction, and an estimate of the time during which the necessity for giving that aid will continue.

Mr. KING moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGE G. SNYDER.

Mr. RICE, of Missouri, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 4867) for the relief of George G. Snyder; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ASSAY OFFICE DAHLONEGA, GEORGIA.

Mr. SPEER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5203) to establish an assay office at Dahlonega in the State of Georgia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING OF TESTIMONY.

Mr. FISHER. I ask consent to report from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, for consideration at this time, the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures be authorized to print the testimony taken before the committee in regard to the establishment of new mints, as well as the needs and requirements of the Philadelphia mint and the New York assay office, for the convenience and use of the committee as well as for the information of the members of the House.

Mr. PAGE. I ask the gentleman to include in the order to print the testimony taken in the mint investigation in San Francisco last year.

Mr. FISHER. I do not want to include that in this.

Mr. SPRINGER. The statute requires that all motions of this kind shall be referred to the Committee on Printing, if the cost is over $500.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made; and the proposition will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

SAMUEL H. M'MILLAN.

Mr. RYAN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5204) granting a pension to Samuel H. McMillan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

SALE OF OSAGE INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. RYAN also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5205) to provide for the compensation of registers and receivers for selling Osage Indian lands; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

ELLEN M. GODFREY.

Mr. MURCH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5206) granting a pension to Ellen M. Godfrey; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

FLORA SKINNER.

Mr. PEELLE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5207) for the relief of Flora Skinner; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

E. P. THOMPSON.

Mr. PEELLE also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5208) for the relief of E. P. Thompson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ABRAHAM HOWARD.

Mr. CAMPBELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5209) granting a pension to Abraham Howard; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JURORS IN UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. PETTIBONE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5210) prescribing the method of drawing jurors in the courts of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, the Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4190) for the relief of John A. Coan, and the same was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

On motion of Mr. NORCROSS, by unanimous consent, the Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Alfred H. Brooks, and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. BLISS, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Appropriations was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4780) for the relief of Solomon Spitzer; and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

IMPROVEMENT OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. POUND, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, in favor of the improvement of the Mississippi River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that he had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 3541) directing the issue of a check to the Pequonnock National Bank, in place of one heretofore issued to Juliaette Prescott, a pensioner of the United States, and lost.

The motion of Mr. PAGE that the House adjourn, was then agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 15, 1882.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of February 13, 1882, a report from the Chief of Ordnance of the number and character of cannon owned by the United States which have been condemned or are unfit for use, the market value of the same, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of February 8, 1882, a report from the Light-House Board respecting the lighting of harbors and rivers, including the invention of John M. Foster, the Pintsch lighted buoy, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask the Senate to grant me an indefinite leave of absence on account of illness in my family. I shall try not to abuse it, if the Senate will give me that leave.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks for an indefinite leave of absence from the Senate on account of sickness in his family. [A pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and the leave is granted.

LAKE PONTCHARTRAIN BRIDGE.

Mr. JONAS. I present a petition of the Mariners' Mutual Aid and Protective Association of New Orleans, protesting against the construction of a railway bridge by the New Orleans and Northeastern Railway Company across Lake Pontchartrain from Point-aux-Herbes to Bonfonca. As this railway is one of great importance to the people of New Orleans, and one in the construction of which I feel a deep interest myself, and I think this may merely be a question of the construction of the railway as to whether the mode of construction will interfere with the navigation of the lake or not, I offer the following resolution, which I ask may be immediately considered, calling upon the Secretary of War for information which I understand he has in his possession:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed and instructed to communicate to the Senate any information that he may have in regard to the proposed construction of a railway bridge by the New Orleans and Northeastern Railway Company across Lake Pontchartrain, from Point-aux-Herbes to Bonfonca, in Louisiana, and to report whether said proposed bridge will be an obstruction to the navigation of said lake, and what restrictions, if any, should be placed upon the said company in the construction of said bridge, in order to prevent any interference with navigation.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Mr. JONAS. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ALDRICH presented a memorial of the Providence Board of Trade, in favor of the termination of the so-called reciprocity treaty with the Sandwich Islands after proper notice; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BAYARD presented the petition of Joseph E. Vantine and 24 others, citizens of Delaware, praying for the passage of a bill providing for the equalization of bounties; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLATT presented the petition of William H. Moore and other soldiers who have lost an arm or leg, of Fair Haven, Connecticut, praying for an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LAPHAM presented a petition of soldiers and sailors who lost a leg or an arm while in the line of duty, praying for the passage of a bill granting them an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MILLER, of California, presented a petition of citizens of California, praying for legislation providing for the forfeiture of the land grant to the Texas Pacific Railway Company; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1093) for the relief of George W. Saulpaw, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 787) for the relief of David Waldo & Co., submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BROWN. I am instructed by the Committee on Railroads, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. No. 60) ratifying the act of the General Council of the Choctaw Nation of Indians granting to the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railway Company right of way for a railroad and telegraph line through that nation, to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. As the Senate will remember, when this bill was referred a second time to the committee it was understood that when it should be reported it would take the place on the Calendar where it stood at the time the recommitment was made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was the understanding, and the bill will be placed upon the Calendar where it stood formerly.

Mr. CAMDEN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Amos Cross, late first lieutenant Sixth New York Artillery, praying for an increase of pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. HAMPTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of T. J. Mackey, in behalf of the State of South Carolina, praying that the Court of Claims may be authorized to adjudicate the claim of said State for rent of the Citadel Academy, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1477) to empower the Secretary of War to audit the claim of the State of South Carolina for rent alleged to be due for the use and occupation of the Citadel Academy, at Charleston.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 837) for the relief of the Mechanics and Traders' Bank of New Orleans, Louisiana, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MAHONE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of the Albemarle and Chesapeake Canal Company, praying compensation for the use of that canal for the passage of naval vessels through the same from January 10, 1864, to July 27, 1866, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1478) for the relief of the Albemarle and Chesapeake Canal Company.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1143) for the relief of Timothy E. Ellsworth, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. The Committee on Claims makes an adverse report on the bill (S. No. 150) to provide for the settlement of accounts with certain railway companies. I desire with the report of the committee to present a report of the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. GEORGE,] who concurs in the report but states some reasons separately.

Mr. FRYE. I represent the views of the minority in that case, and ask that they be printed.

Mr. HOAR. The bill is reported adversely, but goes to the Calendar with the minority report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks leave to present the views of the minority, which will be received, and both reports will be printed and the bill placed on the Calendar.

LAYING AMENDMENTS ON TABLE.

Mr. FRYE. I am instructed by the Committee on Rules, who were directed by a resolution offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] "to consider and report upon the expediency of amending the rules" so that "whenever an amendment shall be made to any pending measure which is not germane thereto a vote to lay such amendment on the table shall not carry the measure with it," to report an additional rule, as follows:

Resolved, That the following be an additional rule to the rules of the Senate:
"A vote to lay on the table a proposed amendment shall not carry with it the pending measure."

Mr. FERRY. Do I understand the chairman who reports this rule that the object is to apply it to all amendments?

Mr. FRYE. In all instances.

Mr. FERRY. In this connection, having had some interest in the rules, I beg to inquire whether we are to understand that it is proposed to shut off debate in case any Senator moves to lay on the table an amendment to any measure whatever?

Mr. FRYE. Not to shut off debate, if a majority of the Senate desire debate.

Mr. FERRY. The subject is not before the Senate for discussion, but at the same time I desire to state that while everything is under the control of a majority of the Senate, the proposed rule would put it in the power of any Senator to move to lay an amendment on the table and test the Senate upon the question whether there should be any further debate.

Mr. HOAR. As the Senator has made that suggestion, I should like to utter one sentence upon the subject. Under the present rule it is in the power of a single member of the Senate to compel practically the Senate to discuss any question whether it wants to or not, and whether it be germane to the pending measure or not. If the Senate is desirous of voting on the question of a tariff commission, some Senator may, under our rules, move an amendment in regard to dealing with polygamy in Utah; he can make his speech, and if he can get enough to call for the yeas and nays he can compel Senators to record their votes, and thereupon every Senator who has got to record his vote on the merits of that amendment feels that he must defend his vote, and the Senate may be turned away from the question properly before it. This proposed amendment to the rules simply permits, after the mover of the amendment, who of course has the privilege, in the first place, has made his speech, a majority of the Senate, if it sees fit, to dissever that amendment from the pending measure, and to require it to be brought up separately at some other time, or not at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed rule will be placed on the Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FERRY asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1479) granting a pension to Mary C. Thomson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CONGER asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1480) for the relief of Daniel T. Wells; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MAHONE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1481) for the relief of William Tabb; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1482) for the relief of Jaqueline M. Wood; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LAPHAM asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1483) for the relief of Guy V. Henry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLATT asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1484) relating to the adjudication of pension claims; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1485) granting a pension to Ann Atkinson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McPHERSON asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1486) granting a pension to Mary A. Dougherty; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BAYARD (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1487) to promote justice in the Army and Navy by excluding judge-advocates from courts-martial during consideration of findings; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MORGAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1488) to amend section 688 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MITCHELL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1489) to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for the United States district court, post-office, and other Government offices at the city of Williamsport, Pennsylvania; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BROWN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1490) to appropriate $60,000 for the improvement of the harbor of Brunswick, Georgia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CALL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1491) for the relief of Milton L. Sparr; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VAN WYCK asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1492) for the relief of settlers and purchasers of lands on the public domain in the State of Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

AMENDMENT TO BILL.

Mr. LAPHAM submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 3830) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask to have the following order:

Ordered, That the memorial and accompanying papers relating to the proposed purchase of the picture of "The origin of the American Flag," by Henry Peters Gray, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Subject to the rules.

Mr. BAYARD. It is an order simply to re-refer papers already on the files of the Senate which were before the Library Committee at a previous session.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is granted, subject to the rule. If there has been an adverse report it cannot be done without leaving copies.

Mr. BAYARD. There has been no report, adverse or otherwise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words "subject to the rule" have to be inserted in all cases, as the Chair does not know whether or not there has been a report. The order will be agreed to as amended.

SMITHSONIAN REPORT FOR 1881.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That 15,560 copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1881 be printed; 2,500 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate; 6,060 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 7,000 copies for the use of the Smithsonian Institution.

THE TOBACCO TAX.

Mr. MAHONE submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That in the event of any reduction in the tax on tobacco manufactured in the United States, it is hereby declared that a rebate equal to such reduction shall be granted on all stamped or tax-paid tobacco manufactured in the United States since the adoption of this resolution and between such date and the time when any law making such reduction shall go into effect then remaining in the hands of licensed dealers other than manufacturers.

IMPROVEMENT OF BAYOUS.

Mr. KELLOGG submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to transmit to the Senate any information in his Department showing what improvements have been made of Bayou Courtableau from Port Barre to Atchafalaya, and also of Bayou Teche from Saint Martinsville to Port Barre; and also of Bayou Terrebonne, Louisiana, and what further appropriations, if any, are necessary.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McPHERSON. If there is no further morning business, I ask to take up the bill (S. No. 188) in regard to a monumental column to commemorate the battle of Monmouth, which was passed over yesterday without prejudice when reached on the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. I should like, if the Senate is disposed to have a vote upon it, to call up the resolve reported by me on the 13th instant from the Committee on Rules, for the appointment of a committee on expenditures of public money.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not morning business.

Mr. HOAR. That was pending as morning business yesterday, and I understand it comes over in the same way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was in error in treating it as morning business. It is not morning business; it is a resolution on the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. If the Chair will hear me a moment, I understand, and I think the Chair on consideration so ruled early in the session, that a resolution comes in as morning business, (I am not speaking of joint resolutions, but simply Senate resolutions like this,) and it stands as the regular morning business, except subject to another rule, that it shall not be taken up the first morning it is submitted if there be objections. Thereupon it goes over and stands as a Senate resolution, or just like an order. Otherwise there is no time in the business of the Senate when such a resolution is in order. The Chair so held yesterday and the Senate acquiesced.

This resolution was taken up as morning business and it went over as the unfinished morning business at the expiration of the morning hour. It seems to me it is too late to reverse that ruling now. Still I do not want to make any question about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks he is right in his ruling upon the subject. Yesterday his attention was not called to it. All resolutions and bills are provided for under the Anthony rule, and the Chair decided some time ago that the Anthony rule became absolute whenever the current morning business was finished. A resolution submitted on a preceding day, and which was laid over, is not current morning business.

Mr. HOAR. It is the Calendar of Resolutions of which the Chair speaks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before the Anthony rule was adopted it was the duty of the Chair under the rules of the Senate to lay before the Senate the resolutions that were passed over on a preceding day, but now the Chair understands that when the current morning business is ended the Anthony rule is absolute, and runs through all the time until half past one.

Mr. HOAR. However, if the Chair will permit me to make one suggestion, the Anthony rule speaks not of resolutions, but the "Calendar of Bills and Resolutions."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is of that kind.

Mr. HOAR. The Chair will pardon me. A resolution of this kind never was placed on the Calendar, and is not upon the Calendar now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is on the Calendar, reported from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HOAR. It is not on the "Calendar of Bills and Resolutions." What time under the Anthony rule would the Chair ever call such a resolution? The Chair will see, I think, on reflection, that there never is any time when under the Anthony rule such a resolution will in its order be laid before the Senate. New bills and new joint resolutions come in; they are put on the Calendar of Bills and Resolutions, and these little Senate resolutions never are reached in any order upon that Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Calendar of Bills and Resolutions. The Chair suggested to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] that it ought to be distinguished whether bills should be considered first or resolutions, and the bills were called. The resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts was reported from the Committee on Rules, and is on the Calendar of Resolutions.

Mr. HOAR. When will the Chair order that resolution to be called?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not know. When the first call was made under the Anthony rule the Chair submitted whether bills or resolutions should be called first.

Mr. HOAR. Then resolutions should be put on the Calendar with bills in their order, if that be true.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions are in their order on the Calendar of Resolutions. The Chair thinks there ought to be some day for resolutions to be disposed of, but we are going on with the consideration of bills. A motion to proceed to the consideration of a resolution will be in order.

Mr. HOAR. What does the Chair say, if the Chair will permit me, to the other suggestion? The Chair held otherwise yesterday and the Senate acquiesced, and took this resolution up on a subsequent day, and after consideration it went over as the unfinished business as the pending question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts will pardon the Chair; the Chair said nothing about it yesterday because there was no point made about it, but some Senators suggested that it was not morning business, and the Chair said certainly, but he did not suppose he was called upon to say anything about it inasmuch as no objection was made. They stated that it was the business of the Chair to say whether or not it was morning business.

Mr. TELLER. If this is morning business I want to object to it. If it is on the Calendar I want to object to it.

Mr. HOAR. It is not on the Calendar. That is my point.

BATTLE OF MONMOUTH.

Mr. McPHERSON. I ask now to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 188) in regard to a monumental column to commemorate the battle of Monmouth, which was yesterday passed over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was passed over yesterday without prejudice, subject to the call of the Senator from New Jersey, and is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McPHERSON. I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate a little more than five minutes, but I hope less than fifteen, upon this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator, by unanimous consent, will be allowed to proceed beyond the time prescribed by the rule.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the Senator will be allowed to proceed.

Mr. COCKRELL and others. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, and others. There will be no objection to that.

Mr McPHERSON. Mr. President, an eminent English statesman has wisely said that a people which takes no pride in the noble achievements of remote ancestors will never achieve anything worthy to be remembered with pride by remote descendants.

The State of New Jersey has taken steps to commemorate the battle-field of Monmouth by a monument worthy of the patriots who won the battle, worthy of the cause for which they battled, worthy of the State, and it is to be hoped it may be made worthy of the nation. To this end I have had the honor to introduce a bill asking Congress to appropriate such money as in its judgment so noble a purpose and so glorious an undertaking demand. Ten thousand dollars have been raised by private subscription from the people of the State, and the sum of $10,000 has been appropriated by the Legislature. The memorial fund now consists of $20,000, and we ask Congress to appropriate a like sum to suitably commemorate the most important battle in its results in our Revolutionary history.

New Jersey was the very heart of the Revolutionary struggle; it was everywhere wet with the blood of heroes; from the Delaware at Philadelphia to the Hudson at New York, New Jersey is rich with Revolutionary memories—Trenton, Princeton, Morristown, Red Bank, and the Palisades are immortal with them. Time obliterates all that can die. New Jersey is monumental in national revolutionary glory, and yet there is not a monument to point out the sacred scenes the blood of our fathers has embalmed and sanctified. The battle of Monmouth, like the battles of Trenton and Princeton, was more important in its moral than its military aspect.

Our valor had secured us the co-operation of France and Spain; Monmouth showed that we were worthy of it.

It was after Germantown and Brandywine, and before the battle of Monmouth, that our country and our cause hung on the very verge of despair. Our supplies were exhausted, our soldiers were destitute, and our arms were dilapidated; we were without credit, without money, without provisions, clothing, arms, or means of procuring them, yet the patriotism of the people was sublime and universal; although the colonial treasury was empty, the colonial heart was full.

It was after the ever-memorable and terrible winter at Valley Forge that General Washington, with an army but one step from exhaustion and nothing but the inspirations of liberty, home, and country to keep the soldiers in the field, started in pursuit of the British army, which had just evacuated Philadelphia. Every step of the Continental army from the camp of Valley Forge to the battle-field of Monmouth is classic in our history. General Lee was second in command, and the whole corps was subject to his orders. Although sorely pressed by the American Army, Sir Henry Clinton avoided battle until he reached the memorable field about one mile from Monmouth Court House. His left was on the road to the village, his right was protected by a forest, and morasses protected his front. The position was a strong one. Lee was ordered by General Washington to attack the British forces. He was repulsed, and if his treasonable designs had been successful the sun of the 28th of June would have set forever on the grave of American liberty and independence. It was Lee that hatched the treason, it was Washington that saved the Army. Washington suspected Lee and assumed absolute command. Great enough to comprehend his duty and courageous enough to perform it, Washington determined to wrench victory from defeat and triumph from disgrace. He drove the enemy from his chosen position and compelled him to seek safety in flight. It is as humiliating to recall the treason as it is glorious to remember the triumphs of that day.

That 28th of June, 1778, was a memorable day for England. It was a memorable day for America. It was a new lesson to British arrogance with which the spring campaign of 1778 opened. Their best soldiers had again given away to Continental troops. The dead lay where they fell, and the groans of the wounded disturbed the slumbers of the wearied living who with arms in hand laid down upon the field of their victory, ready to continue the carnage on the following day; but the British army, exhausted and dispirited by the defeat of yesterday, under the darkness of night had stolen away.

The victory had been lost and won.

The battle of Monmouth was a new revelation. It was 10,000 Americans, ragged from poverty and hungry from want, after a winter of exhausting hardships, against 14,000 English soldiers under the ablest English generals, fat on the luxury of feasting and victorious wealth. It was liberty, poor and famished, yet vigorous with will and dauntless in courage, against oppression.

The spirit of the age demands that this past shall be respected, and its glories in enduring marble be made the heritage of those who follow us.

The old church at Monmouth which marks the scene of the battle is crumbling away. The orchard which sheltered our brigades, as a shield, is old with decay. The woods which protected them has fallen before the ax of the destroyer. The morass which impeded the British onset has been drained and filled. The spot where Washington rebuked Lee and planned the attack to regain by courage the ground which had been lost by cowardice and treachery has become obscure. The place where the deadly shot of Wayne's men arrested the ardor of Monkton's command, and sent him while yet the shout of battle was on his lips a lifeless martyr to British tyranny, is passing from the knowledge of men. The place, too, where Washington and Lafayette laid down with arms in hand with their soldiers on that memorable night is beginning to be shrouded in doubt. History in making up its final and impartial judgment has inscribed in letters of living light, "To the valor of our illustrious sires who so nobly asserted the rights of man upon the plains of Monmouth." A distinguished orator (Henry Armit Brown) so eloquently said:

> They fought not for power, not for glory, not for their country only, not for themselves alone. They served here for posterity; they suffered here for the human race; they bore here the cross of all the peoples; they died here that freedom might be the heritage of all. It was humanity which they defended; it was liberty itself they had in keeping. They laid the foundation of our happiness in a time of trouble, in days of sorrow and perplexity, of doubt, distress, and danger, of cold and hunger, of suffering and want; they built it up by courage, by self-sacrifice, by unfailing patriotism, by unceasing vigilance. By those things alone did we win our liberties; by them alone can we hope to keep them.

More than a century has passed away, and that civilization and that liberty for which they fought are still our heritage. The memory of this spot shall be an everlasting honor to our fathers, but we can make it an everlasting shame to ourselves if we choose to do so. The glory of Monmouth belongs not to us, but we can make it ours if we will.

This honor belongs not alone to New Jersey. It was the work of all the colonies, and now by inheritance the property and glory of all the States; and because of this it becomes your duty to assist the patriotic people of New Jersey in perpetuating in granite, bronze, or marble to future generations for all time to come the glories of our sires. "Emulate them here."

When history again speaks will it find the right to say that in furtherance of this good work the American Congress refused to take part? If this be so—which God forbid—what can it not say of the degeneracy of these times?

Senators, I can make no appeal so strong as to tell you that more than a century has passed and yet not a single monument points out the battle-fields to which we are indebted for our country, our prosperity, this city, with its magnificent monuments; this Capitol, the grandest legislative temple of the earth; and this Congress of the freest, happiest, and best educated people on the globe.

Were a stimulus required for such an appropriation, I could say to you that in every period of human history it has been one of the noblest characteristics of national pride to emulate great deeds and prominent victories by monumental evidences of appreciation and consecrated emblems of patriotic glory. Greece added as much to her fame by the genius of her artists and the taste of her people in monumental works of national gratitude as by the heroic valor of her great soldiers, or the more sublime and wonderful philosophies of her scholars, her poets, and her orators.

Athens, two thousand five hundred years before our era, shadowed forth in divine excellence of art the immortalities of its history. Radiant with temples and statues glowing from the Acropolis upon the glittering waters of the bay, they were so arranged as to lift unto her bright skies a congress of forms dazzling in pure marble, wrought into familiar semblance to shadow forth for all time the great men and great events which gave eternal spring-time to her history and measureless fame to her statesmen and to her heroes.

Athens was the first to proclaim the triumph and genius of a democracy. The lofty strains of Alcieus and Simonides have echoed from Ægian shores to all time an undying hatred of tyrannic power. Poets and sculptors have intensified that love of liberty which enabled a handful of Greeks to overthrow the proud hosts of Asia. Each of her statues seemed alive, and to hold within it a never-ending inspiration to fill Greece with the glory of the past. Greece was free; it was a nation; and in a single century of liberty it left more monuments than all the tyrannies of the ages had been able to create. The genius of Greece in marble classics made her victories a perpetual Iliad to the Athenians and to the world.

From the proudest days of her refinement to our own no country or age furnishes so sublime a basis for monumental history as the United States. Here in Washington, where our history, our statesmen, and our character seem to culminate, we have commenced our monumental record of the past. Let it be continued, but let us remember that we should have had no Capitol and no Washington, indeed no country, to command the admiration of mankind but for our Revolutionary battles.

Mr. President, I trust the bill will be passed.

Mr. BECK. I call the attention of the Senator from New Jersey to the fact that while there is a provision appropriating $20,000 in the bill, there is nothing in the bill that requires the monument to be completed for the sum appropriated. We very often make appropriations for monuments and public works, and the money is expended with the work left unfinished, and when it is in an unfinished state we are called upon, as we shall probably be called upon in this case, to finish it. What provision is there in the bill requiring that the money given by the United States shall complete the monument? Some assurance should be given of its completion before the $20,000 is paid.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I have no objection to such an amendment so far as the Government appropriation is concerned; but it is entirely unnecessary, because under the plan that has been partially adopted, so far at least as the State of New Jersey can adopt it, the cost of the monument will be exactly $40,000. There is no expectation of asking for an additional sum.

Mr. BECK. I merely mentioned it because we have been required heretofore to make additional appropriations by a change of plan.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I will move an amendment to the bill to cover the point suggested by the Senator from Kentucky. In line 6, after the word "erecting," I move to add the words "and completing," which I think will cover the whole ground.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, which will now be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. At the end of the bill, the committee report to add:

> And provided further, That the design for the said monument shall be approved by the Secretary of War.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest that to accomplish the object proposed by the Senator from Kentucky, there should be added to the amendment of the committee the words:

> And the sum herein appropriated shall not be available until a contract is made to complete the work within that sum.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The Senator from Ohio will please take notice that this whole appropriation is under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know, but I would make it safe.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I suppose he would not allow the money to be drawn from the Treasury until such precautions were taken.

Mr. SHERMAN. But there is nothing in the bill that requires the Secretary of War to confine it to the sum of $20,000.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I have no objection to the amendment suggested. That is all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SEWELL. I think that might interfere with the matter. The monument is expected to cost $40,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is recited in the preamble to the bill that $20,000 have been raised already, and this is an appropriation of $20,000 in addition.

Mr. SEWELL. I will state to the Senate that the original subscription by citizens of the State of New Jersey was $10,000, when the State appropriated $10,000, and by the act of appropriation formed an association, of which the State officers are the principal members, for carrying out the provisions of the act. The contract is to be made by the State, not by private parties.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM G. BUDLONG.

The consideration of the bill (S. No. 375) for the relief of William G. Budlong was resumed as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. BECK. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CALL. I should like to have the report of the committee read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was read yesterday.

Mr. CALL. If there be any opposition to the bill, I think we should have some understanding about it. The Committee on Patents, of which I am a member——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator wishes to have the report read again, of course the Chair will order it to be read.

Mr. CALL. Not for my information. I only want it understood by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator does not call for the reading?

Mr. CALL. No, sir.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask a question of some member of the committee. I want to know if this man has ever received anything from his invention, and if so, how much?

Mr. CALL. The Senator from Connecticut will answer.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Budlong, the patentee in this case, was a mechanic, a poor man. He invented a machine for pegging shoes by driving a peg instead of having it done by a clamp. It is a very valuable improvement. He has never been able to put it into operation. He has spent in perfecting it and trying to introduce it $15,000. It has never been in operation. He has never had the capital with which he could put it into successful operation. The public have never been taxed a dollar in any way, shape, or form, and he has never had a particle of benefit from his patent. Now, if there be any case where a patent should be extended, this is the case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the passage of the bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. VANCE.]

The yeas and nays were taken; and resulted—yeas 32, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—32.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Lapham,	Plumb,
Allison,	Frye,	Logan,	Rollins,

So the bill was passed.

STEAM-LAUNCHES IN CUSTOMS SERVICE.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 376) to amend section 2763 of the Revised Statutes, which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 2763 of the Revised Statutes by inserting after the word "boats" the words "or steam-launches."

Mr. MCMILLAN. There is a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury accompanying that bill, which may be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
January 24, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 19th instant, transmitting a copy of Senate bill No. 376, to amend section 2763 of the Revised Statutes, and requesting to be furnished with such information and suggestions as I may deem proper touching the merits of said bill, and the propriety of its passage.

In reply I have to state that I concur in the amendment suggested, and recommend the passage of the bill.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. J. FOLGER,
Secretary.

Hon. S. J. R. MCMILLAN,
Chairman of the Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

Mr. HOAR. May I inquire whether the title has been amended or is to be by the committee having the bill in charge? I think the title ought always to express the subject-matter and not merely refer to the section, because the public do not know anything about what legislation is pending.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Let the title be amended by adding "relating to the use of steam-launches in going on board of vessels."

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. No. 49) making a further appropriation to relieve the sufferers by the overflow of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4698) to create two additional land districts, and to change the boundaries of the Watertown land district in the Territory of Dakota, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 353) to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 3541) directing the issue of a check to the Pequonnock National Bank in place of one heretofore issued to Juliaett Prescott, a pensioner of the United States, and lost; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4754) to admit free of duty certain steam-plow machinery now at the port of San Francisco.

THE MISSISSIPPI OVERFLOW.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of half past one is reached and the Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. No. 22) to provide for the appointment of a commission to investigate the question of the tariff and internal-revenue laws, upon which the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GARLAND. I am fortunately or unfortunately brought to the floor on two different subjects. I suppose I may yield on one to myself. I ask the Senate to lay aside this bill, as agreed to by the Senator from Delaware yesterday, informally, that I may make some remarks on the levee bill, of which I gave notice some days ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This will be done, there being no objection, and the bill (S. No. 1414) providing for the construction, completion, repairing, and preservation of levees on the Mississippi River, will be regarded as before the Senate. The bill has had but one reading.

The bill was read the second time by its title.

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to address the Senate for a short time on the subject of building levees on the Mississippi River. The reason why I obtrude the proposition on the attention of the Senate now will appear while I am making my remarks in favor of it. As the bill that I have introduced is a short one, I ask the Secretary to read it at length.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Mississippi River commission organized under the act of Congress of June 28, 1879, be, and is hereby, empowered and directed to cause to be constructed or repaired, and to cause to be preserved and kept in order, such levees along the banks of the Mississippi River as they shall deem to be of the greatest general importance to the preservation of the channel of said river, and to the prevention of devastation from breaks and overflows, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, to be promulgated within thirty days after the passage hereof. And for this purpose the sum of $15,000,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; but no expenditure shall be made and no liability incurred in the premises beyond the sum so appropriated, and no money is to be paid on any account for levee work until the same is indorsed and approved by the Secretary of War.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, the bill is very simple on its face, encumbered with very few provisions. It is framed in accordance with all the bills which have been passed for the expenditure of money in any particular department of the Government. It is framed in accordance with the general idea of the river and harbor bills, of the bills for erecting public buildings, of nearly all bills for governmental expenditures.

It does not undertake to say where the levees shall be built, in what particular sections of country, or what their dimensions shall be, but leaves all these matters to the commission that we now have by law in existence, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe. It makes the appropriation, to be disbursed through the War Department under the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War, and is sufficiently guarded so that no expenditure shall be made until he approves the account.

So much for the general frame-work of the bill. The objects and purposes had in view are very nearly reached and accomplished already by provisions of law, or if not reached and accomplished by provision of law, (as we know they are not practically in point of fact,) they are fully recognized by provisions of law to which I will now call the attention of the Senate. Under the act of June 28, 1879, there was established a commission to be called the Mississippi River commission to consist of seven members. Among the duties assigned to that commission is the following, to be found in section 4, supplement to R. S., page 496:

It shall be the duty of said commission to take into consideration and mature such plan or plans and estimates as will correct, permanently locate, and deepen the channel and protect the banks of the Mississippi River; improve and give safety and ease to the navigation thereof; prevent destructive floods; promote and facilitate commerce, trade, and the postal service; and when so prepared and matured, to submit to the Secretary of War a full and detailed report of their proceedings and actions, and of such plans, with estimates of the cost thereof, for the purposes aforesaid, to be by him transmitted to Congress: Provided, That the commission shall report in full upon the practicability, feasibility, and probable cost of the various plans known as the jetty system, the levee system, and the outlet system, as well as upon such others as they deem necessary.

There is a commission of inquiry organized by act of Congress for which a large appropriation was made to take into consideration these various subjects and report to Congress. It may be possible that Congress did not commit itself by the passage of that act to the adoption of any plan as to either or any of these subjects-matter mentioned, the levees, the jetties, or the outlet system, or any other; but unquestionably Congress committed itself to this, that upon that information being furnished, if Congress deemed it had the power and it was necessary and proper to adopt any or all of these plans, it would do so.

I have on my desk the report of the commission made in 1881 under this act, full of information, full of facts and statistics in reference to each and all of these plans of improvement, with the opinions of the various commissioners upon those subjects referring to reports heretofore made by the Engineer Department, one of which I also have on my desk.

The question then comes to this: having a full recognition of the authority and the necessity of accomplishing some of these purposes, have we the information before us upon which we can act intelligently to justify the exercise of our power? Has the Congress in its legislative capacity the power to pass a bill of this character, and is there information sufficient before us to authorize our action, showing its necessity and propriety? Those are the questions to be considered.

I have referred to the act creating the Mississippi River commission, but long before that, in 1850, by the swamp-land grant Congress committed itself to the propriety of building levees, for that grant was made in part for that purpose.

What is this that we are asked to improve? It is not a simple canal; it is not a small creek or a tributary of some great river. It is, as Mr. Calhoun very aptly termed it in the commercial convention at Memphis a number of years ago, an inland sea. It is a great river, over which directly at least one-half the commerce of this country floats, and indirectly three-fourths, to confine myself strictly within the bounds of truth. It is a great highway from Minnesota to the Gulf of Mexico, over which millions upon millions of products float annually, and upon the successful carrying out of this project of levees the fortunes and the prosperity of millions and millions of the citizens of this country depend.

When Mr. Jefferson made his argument for the purchase of Louisiana, and the purchase of this river with it, he stated that western commerce demanded it, the commerce of the country demanded it; and when the Southern States attempted to dissever themselves from this Union no more powerful argument, no more overriding argument than the holding the mouth of that great stream prevailed upon the Western States to take up arms against those States. The adhering States—the Union States—never could bring themselves to submit to the mouth of that river being in possession of any other or any foreign power; and it was the strongest argument of all that prevailed against the success of the Southern States in their attempt to dissever themselves from the Union.

If such is the status of this great river, if it be correct that it is an inland sea and a great national highway, that is a national enterprise to which I am calling the attention of the Senate, it is a Federal enterprise, in which every State in this Union is directly (some of course more than others) interested.

Now, as to the legal power Congress has over this matter, I will read a few extracts from a celebrated case in 12th Howard Reports, 443. The Propeller Genesee Chief vs. Fitzhugh:

> The admiralty jurisdiction granted to the district courts of the United States under the Constitution extends to the navigable lakes and rivers of the United States, without regard to the ebb and flow of the tides of the ocean.

What was the cause given by the court for this doctrine? What was the reason assigned by the court for overruling two decisions of long standing that stood with the sanction of no less a personage than Chief-Justice Marshall, at the head of the court? I will proceed to show the Senate. Says the eminent Chief-Justice who delivered this opinion, Judge Taney:

> It is the decision in the case of The Thomas Jefferson which mainly embarrasses the court in the present inquiry.

The Thomas Jefferson was a case reported in 10 Wheaton, 428.

> We are sensible of the great weight to which it is entitled, but at the same time we are convinced that if we follow it we follow an erroneous decision into which the court fell when the great importance of the question as it now presents itself could not be foreseen, and the subject did not, therefore, receive that deliberate consideration which at this time would have been given to it by the eminent men who presided here when that case was decided. For the decision was made in 1825, when the commerce on the rivers of the West and on the lakes was in its infancy, and of little importance, and but little regarded, compared with that of the present day.

This jurisdiction was conferred, not by the Constitution expressly, but by the judiciary clause; and yet the argument of the court why they went back, as the common phrase is, on the decision of Chief-Justice Marshall in the case of The Thomas Jefferson was that the commerce of the country required that the jurisdiction in admiralty should exist on the inland rivers and the lakes above the tide and its ebb and flow. That was the statement of the question by the Supreme Court then. Now latterly it came before the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of The Hine vs. Trevor, in 4 Wallace, in which the decision is, according to the syllabus:

> The doctrine of the case of The Genesee Chief, 12 Howard, that the admiralty jurisdiction of the Federal courts, as granted by the Constitution, is not limited to tide-water, but extends wherever vessels float and navigation successfully aids commerce, approved and affirmed.

Now I will read the language of the court. This opinion was by Judge Miller. I read from 4 Wallace, 562:

> Accordingly we find in the case of the steamboat Thomas Jefferson, reported in 10 Wheaton, 428, that an attempt was made to invoke the jurisdiction in the case of a steamboat making a voyage from Shippingport, in Kentucky, to a point some distance up the Missouri River, and back again. This court seems not to have been impressed with the importance of the principle it was called upon to decide, as, indeed, no one could then anticipate the immense interests to arise in future, which by the rulings in that case were turned away from the forum of the Federal courts. Apparently without much consideration—certainly without anything like the cogent argument and ample illustration which the subject has since received here—the court declared that no act of Congress had conferred admiralty jurisdiction in cases arising above ebb and flow of the tide.

The court then proceeds to consider the other cases, and finally says:

> The next case in order of time, The Genesee Chief, 12 Howard, 457, is by far the most important of the series, for it overrules all the previous decisions limiting the admiralty jurisdiction to tide-water, and asserts the broad doctrine that the principles of that jurisdiction, as conferred on the Federal courts by the Constitution, extend wherever ships float and navigation successfully aids commerce, whether internal or external.

Mr. President, this bill seeks to limit the building of these levées to the banks of the Mississippi where navigation aids commerce, where the ships and vessels and boats of the country float. If Congress had power to vote a liberal appropriation for the jetties near the mouth of the Mississippi, to dig down into it, it needs no argument to prove that it has the authority to dig above the banks as well as to dig below.

We have established a National Board of Health in this country, under the commercial clause of the Constitution, which received the sanction of Congress after long debate, and we vote annually sums of money, $5,000, $15,000, and $20,000, for the improvement of harbors where, according to the returns from the Treasury, the clearances do not amount to more than enough to yield $350 or $500 revenue sometimes. But here is a commerce to be affected for better or for worse by the building or non-building and repairing of these levees, in which, I may say, the civilized world is concerned and interested.

Hence, Mr. President, outside of the question of mere riparian ownership the Congress of the United States, under these decisions and under the precedents set by itself, has most indisputably the authority to do this work.

Now, I will call the attention of the Senate to a few passages of the last report made by this commission. It adopts in this respect a previous report filed in 1880. I will not read everything that is said here, as it is before the Senate and will be before the committee having charge of this bill. On page 11 of the report the commissioners say:

> There is reason to believe that during the period when levees were in their most perfect condition, from 1850 to 1858, the channel of the river was better, generally, for purposes of navigation than it has been since that time.
>
> * * * * * * *
> It is obvious that levees are, upon a large portion of the river, essential to prevent destruction to life and property by overflow. They give safety and ease to navigation and promote and facilitate commerce and trade—

According to the very language of the act that created this commission—> by establishing banks or landing-places above the reach of floods, upon which produce can be placed while awaiting shipment, and where steamboats and other river craft can land in times of high water.

>
> In a restricted sense as auxiliary to a plan of channel improvement only, the construction and maintenance of a levee system is not demanded. But in a larger sense, as embracing not only beneficial effects upon the channel but as a protection against destructive floods, a levee system is essential, and such system also promotes and facilitates commerce, trade, and the postal service.
> A levee system aids and facilitates the postal service—

Another service that this Government has taken entire charge of, and rightfully and properly so under the Constitution—> by protecting from injury and destruction by freshets and floods the various common roads and railways upon which that service is conducted to and from the river bank, and generally within that portion of the alluvial region subject to overflow. Moreover, the permanent maintenance below Cairo of a connected levee system, a system of sufficient strength to inspire confidence in its efficiency, or the demonstration, by the achieved results of an improved river, that overflow need no longer be seriously apprehended, would act as a prompt and powerful stimulant in rapidly developing a largely increased trade and commerce in all the products of agricultural industry indigenous to that region, and in those branches of manufacturing enterprises related thereto.

In the report is the testimony of old rivermen and old planters who have been upon that river and inspected it for years and years past, who corroborate the statements of the commission. We have now by the testimony a direct improvement of the commerce, a direct improvement of the navigation, a direct improvement of the postal service—three causes of jurisdiction that this Federal Government has, and no one else. The commission say you must have a uniform system, you must have one connected system; hence it is necessary that the levees should be built under one, and only one, authority.

In my opinion, from the reading of these reports and from facts that I know outside of the reports, if a levee system is kept up in one way by the State of Arkansas, in another by the State of Mississippi, in still another by the State of Louisiana, and in yet another by the State of Tennessee, it would be worse in the end than no system at all. But aside from that, these States are not able now; even if they had the authority to do this and could do it by conjunction, by concert, or by agreement or otherwise, these States are not able to meet this exigency.

The Federal Government would not yield the possession of this great river in spite of all the force that the civilized world could muster and control; and if this river may be regarded, in a certain sense, as the property of the Federal Government, why should it allow the States to build levees on it? Even if the States should do it, under the decisions of the Supreme Court they would be as much under the jurisdiction of the Federal Government as if built by itself. Not one of these States can maintain a system of its own, and it is left for the General Government to maintain a uniform system at its own expense. The reports of the commission show the necessity and propriety of this.

I am not undertaking to say that the levee system is the best system or the only system of improvement. I am not undertaking to say that it is better than any other; nor does the bill that I propose and which I am advocating run counter to any other plan, either the outlet system or the jetty system or the cut-off system. They all come within the jurisdiction of the inquiry of this commission, and so far as I see anything in the report of the commission they may all be carried on in conjunction one with the other, the commissioners being the judges, under the rules and regulations to be established by the Secretary of War, of the necessity of the one or the other and where they shall be located respectively.

Mr. President, in the great flood of 1874, according to the reports, there were 15,000,000 acres of land overflowed in that rich cotton, sugar, and corn country. I have no means now of accurately measuring the extent of the present overflow in that respect, but I am satisfied it will exceed that by at least one-third, and I am satisfied of another thing, that the direct and immediate loss consequent upon this overflow outstrips twice the amount that is asked for in this bill, and will reach $30,000,000. When I speak of the direct and immediate and proximate damages, I mean such as would go into a verdict in the case of an action between individuals in a court of law, and could be recovered as damages for the cutting of a levee or the cutting of a dam, and letting the water upon a man's land. I am satisfied that I am within the bounds of truth when I say the damage is at least $30,000,000 in the stock, the cattle, the houses, the cotton, the corn, the provisions of every kind, the implements of husbandry, that have been destroyed and lost, and this takes not into consideration human life. And when you come from the reports to measure the consequential damages otherwise, there can be no estimate. If a failure of the cotton crop ensues from this overflow, not even our Finance Committee can estimate the loss to this country, not merely to Louisiana, Tennessee, Arkansas, Missouri, Mississippi, but to the whole country and to all commercial points and centers of business.

It is true this bill does not contemplate the building of levees to protect from this overflow, but it does contemplate work immediately, to be begun as soon as this overflow recedes sufficiently for it, so that we may not have a recurrence of this as we do on an average every six or eight years. Why, then, the necessity of so early beginning, since the loss has actually occurred? It is this, Mr. President: when this flood recedes now, according to the estimate I see in the papers, if no more high water comes, it will be five or six weeks before men can work in that country. There will be hundreds and thousands in that overflowed country who will have nothing to work with and have nothing to live upon. The Government proceeding with this improvement puts them at work at once, supplies their necessities for the time being, gives them something that they can earn a living from, and then secures and protects them hereafter against these terrible scourges, the extent and measure of which no man may calculate.

Mr. President, I say here to-day in the Senate, and I say it, too, advisedly; I say it with a conviction of its truth on my mind, that the splendid cotton country ranging from the county of Crittenden, in Arkansas, to New Orleans will have to be abandoned ultimately unless some assistance of this sort is given; the people will leave and go to the poor hills, where a fair subsistence can be made, rather than trust themselves hereafter to be devastated in this manner and destroyed, suffering not only the loss of their property, but numbers, by the half dozen, by the eight or the ten, and sometimes a dozen, dashed away and drowned.

It is true, as I have said, that the States on the river banks cannot build these levees. This Government can build them, and has the authority. The very best work that presents itself to the Government to take hold of now is that work. Fifty thousand people, according to the reports in the office of the Secretary of War, are houseless and shelterless, driven from their homes and exiled, not from the land but from water. That is the story as told in the War Department yesterday, and probably the half has not yet been stated. Most of those people, it is true, are colored people whose little homes, whose little all is there upon that soil, who are fitted for it by nature, who are fitted for it by their calling in life, and in whose good strong arm there is more genuine honest work than in any other on the face of the earth. These are the people to be provided for, to be looked after. They make the cotton, the corn, and the sugar that enter into your commerce and go out from every port and into every port almost in the world.

I have an estimate from Mr. Harrod, who was one of these commissioners. He says $11,800,000 will do this work. The War Department sends me through the Engineer Department a conjectural estimate that $23,000,000 will be necessary to do it. I have on the best figures that I can obtain concluded that $15,000,000 will do; I think possibly that is sufficient. That is not all necessary to be expended at once; it is only to be expended as the work proceeds. The total may fall under that. But if it requires $30,000,000, which goes far beyond any estimate yet, it is money well spent; it could not be better spent, because each one of these floods, according to the report of this commission, grows worse and worse and more and more destructive. We have the figures of the overflow of 1874, eight years ago, and this flood is at least one-third worse in its consequences than that.

There is no direction to this commission to institute a new levee system entirely; they can take what is there and add to it. They make their reports regularly to the Secretary of War, and he approves and ratifies all the accounts before any payment is made.

I could, if necessary, read authority after authority to substantiate the position I have taken in reference to the question of power. The Supreme Court has reiterated and repeated that doctrine time and again. In the case of the Belfast in 7 Wallace and the Eagle in 8 Wallace they go over the whole doctrine again, and even as late as 95 United States Reports by Otto, they again affirm it. Now, let me ask the Senate where have the United States greater commercial interests, where have they greater navigation interests to guard and protect, where have they greater postal service to aid and facilitate than this bill contemplates aiding and facilitating?

Mr. President, is it not time to do more than Congress has already generously done in voting temporary supplies for these suffering people, to institute this work and commence giving these poor men something to do immediately on the subsidence of this water? I doubt very much whether any cotton crop can be made there at all. It may be, but it is very doubtful. It will be necessary after this for us to have one of the most favorable seasons to insure anything of a crop at all.

In asking the reference of the bill I have introduced to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries, I hope I shall not be considered by that committee as out of order in requesting its early consideration of and report upon it.

Mr. President, while I am exceedingly obliged to the Senate for its kind indulgence in permitting me to bring up this matter out of its order, I wish to acknowledge with the liveliest sensibility its generous action in voting for supplies, as it has done, for the temporary relief of those suffering people in the overflowed districts.

Mr. JONAS. I shall ask the indulgence of the Committee on Appropriations to permit me to add a few words in support of the bill introduced by the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. GARLAND.]

The time, in my opinion, is most opportune for the introduction and discussion of this measure. We have for years treated this subject by piecemeal. We have for years endeavored to secure the passage of some bill which would save us from the frequent occurrence of damage by devastating floods such as have visited us this year. The Representatives of the various States affected have frequently offered propositions before Congress asking for national aid for the purpose of perfecting an appropriate levee system. They have always been abandoned and never pressed, either in the belief that the levees destroyed or impaired could be restored by State aid or individual enterprise, or because trifling appropriations were made for the purpose of giving temporary relief. Even now the Mississippi River commission who have been charged with the work of improving the navigation of this great river under such plan as they may deem best, whether by confining the waters within narrower channels by building levees, or by the erection of such other works as they may deem most expedient, have recommended to Congress an appropriation of $1,000,000 for the purpose of repairing the breaks in the levees. Since their report was laid before Congress, this devastating flood has come, adding largely to the breaches in the levees, sweeping away whole levees that were deemed perfect, and virtually destroying the unsatisfactory and incomplete levee system by which the people of Mississippi, Arkansas, Tennessee, and Louisiana, independently of each other, in some portions independent even of State action and State aid, have fought the encroachments of the Mississippi River.

Now, Mr. President, the deplorable condition of that country is before the whole people of these United States and brought to the notice of Congress, which has responded (as the Senator from Arkansas has said) most nobly in affording temporary aid to the distressed people in giving them food and supplying them with transportation from their homes to some place of safety. But, Mr. President, we are brought face to face with the question whether this great country is to be abandoned or to be preserved, and if preserved how it is to be done, and whether it can be done by State aid or the individual enterprise of the owners of land, or by the aid of the National Government. Nearly all the alluvial lands from the mouth of the Ohio River to the mouth of the Mississippi are now either under water or are threatened with overflow. In a large portion of the States of Arkansas, Mississippi, my own State, and Tennessee and in a small portion of Missouri and Illinois the levees have been swept away like cob-webs, and the muddy waters of the river pour over all the fertile fields, destroying habitations, destroying villages, driving people from their homes, destroying stock, growing crops, and probably destroying all possibility of replanting. A rough calculation which I have made from the figures of the last census shows that in the State of Mississippi lands which produced about 277,574 bales of cotton in 1880, lands in Arkansas producing 222,437 bales, and in Louisiana 250,052 bales of cotton, are either now under water or are daily in danger of being submerged.

These lands produced in 1880 750,063 bales of cotton, which at the ordinary market price of cotton, $45 per bale, were worth $33,752,835.

The lands in my State which are planted in sugar, and the whole area planted in rice, are also threatened with overflow. Some of them are now overflowed, but in part they are still protected by levees. If the levees give way, as there is great danger, the whole of that portion of the country will be submerged and the crops totally destroyed. The value of the sugar crop of 1880-'81 was $23,250,687. The value of the crop of molasses was $5,338,250. The value of the rice crop was $3,164,000. The alluvial lands protected by levees in 1861 produced over four hundred thousand hogsheads of sugar, and over two million bales of cotton. Last year they produced about one hundred and eighty-five thousand hogsheads of sugar, and probably less than one million bales of cotton. They are capable of producing a million hogsheads of sugar and probably ten million bales of cotton; but if this overflow continues, if the levees are swept away day after day as they have been for the last few weeks, they will not produce a pound of sugar and the cotton crop to the extent of probably a million bales will be rendered uncertain if not totally destroyed.

There is a possibility, as the Senator from Arkansas has said, that a crop of cotton may be made on these devastated lands, provided the flood soon retires, and also provided that the plantations which have been overflowed shall be left in condition for cultivation, provided they have stock, provided they have seed, provided they have farming implements, and provided their owners can find factors and merchants willing to give them credit after the loss of all their personal property and the devastation of their plantations.

But, Mr. President, so far as the sugar crop is concerned, an overflow means total destruction to that crop. The cane in Louisiana is now over a foot high. The water not only destroys the cane but prevents any possibility of a crop for the next two or three years until new seed-cane can be grown.

We are brought face to face with the question whether this enormous loss or risk of loss is to be continued from year to year; whether it is to be expected that this immense alluvial valley, the richest on the face of the earth, with its enormous possibilities and capabilities, is to be left to dry up into a desert; whether the people living and planting in that country, nine-tenths of whom are colored, of the race lately enfranchised, are to be driven from their homes and forced to seek others not congenial to them, without property, without money, without land; or whether the Government will come to the aid of these impoverished people and this impoverished section in restraining the flood of that mighty river which waters twenty-three States, which is the water-shed of the vast territory from the Rocky Mountains to the Alleghanies, into which flow the streams that permeate all the States of the West—whether the Government, I say, is to take charge of that river and devise means to control its angry floods, or whether this country is to be abandoned.

Why, Mr. President, this river which flows from its source in Minnesota to its mouth in my State receives the waters of nearly every stream flowing between mountain and mountain; it receives the water-shed of the whole West; it receives the melting snows from mountain and valley; all this is precipitated upon the lower country, and we, the people of Mississippi, of Arkansas, of Tennessee, and of Louisiana, are expected to receive this flood, and to restrain its flow. Why, Mr. President, as well may we attempt such a task with hope of success, (I am satisfied from the failure of our former experiments,) as Mrs. Partington, when she tried to keep out the waters of the North Sea with her broom.

We had before the war a perfect levee system, and the damage by floods was uncommon, and when it came it produced but partial or slight injury. We had then, as I have said, a perfect levee system along the river front of Arkansas, Mississippi, and Louisiana, and it was maintained by State aid and by taxation of the property protected by the levees. But then these lands (now worth much of them from a dollar and a quarter to three or five dollars an acre) were worth fifty dollars an acre. Then these plantations were in a high state of improvement; then there were behind the levees 300,000 slaves held as property, possessing a value of over $300,000,000, always as property subject to taxation. It was one of the richest sections of the earth. The planters did not feel the taxation; property was valuable, and its value was added to tenfold by the protection the levees afforded. A system was maintained which was simply perfect. Besides, behind those levees, always on guard, was this large population subject to discipline and control. When the levees were threatened in any portion, the labor could be brought to the relief of that portion; when the alarm-bell sounded the whole agricultural force of the district was gathered to the threatened point, and that point was guarded and preserved. But after the war the planters of this section, formerly so rich, were the most impoverished of any in the South. The larger the plantation, the more land, the more slaves that were owned by the planter, the greater was his ruin, the greater his poverty. Many of the levees were cut from the necessities of war, and most of them were dilapidated if not destroyed. Many of the plantations, probably a great majority of them, had been abandoned and were not cultivated during the war. After the war a portion of these lands were restored to cultivation, and the levees were in part repaired and rebuilt.

Well, Mr. President, in order to protect the country by levees the system must be perfect. There must be a perfect line of levees; there must be a perfect line of breastworks. A parish or a county may have a perfect levee in its front and may all be inundated from the waters coming from a broken levee on abandoned land above. The plantations in Louisiana may be protected by an admirable system of levees, and yet the system of levees in Arkansas being incomplete the water passing through those levees will come down on our back lands and inundate our plantations. It is impossible, as the Senator from Arkansas says, for any perfect system of levees to be maintained by the individual action of the different States, or by the individual action of the different counties or municipalities, or by the individual enterprise of different citizens. There is not sufficient capital in the South; the property is not sufficiently valuable to bear the heavy taxation which would be necessary in order to protect it properly. We have tried it since the war and we have again and again been overwhelmed by these devastating floods which have taken away all the property of our people; which have reduced them to poverty again and again; which have destroyed their improvements and their crops after years of accumulation and prosperity; which have swept their lands as naked as when they came from the Creator's hands, and have left the people living upon the plantations and depending upon them for support more impoverished than when they came to their homes after the war and tried to rebuild their fortunes.

Mr. President, I have obtained from one of the members of the Mississippi River commission an estimate as to what will be the cost of such a system of levees as in his opinion would protect the whole alluvial country watered by the Mississippi. This has been vastly exaggerated in former estimates. It has been said by the Senator from Arkansas this estimate was made before the recent flood, and probably many levees have been swept away which were then considered safe, but his estimate, which I will ask leave to read to the Senate, is $11,800,000:

NEW ORLEANS, December 2, 1881.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your request for information relative to the cost of a levee system, I give you my personal views. They cannot strictly be called an estimate, as such can only be based on surveys, and those of the Mississippi River commission are not yet sufficiently advanced to afford all the data necessary. I give you, however, the facts on which I base my opinion, and from which I think you will perceive that the figures are ample.

The levee commission of 1874 estimated that the aggregate length of breaks in the Arkansas and Missouri fronts was 192 miles, which would require for closing 4,000,000 cubic yards, or 20,833 cubic yards per mile. It is therefore certainly more than sufficient to assume that the entire alluvial front of these two States, say from the Louisiana-Arkansas line to Commerce, Missouri, a distance of 600 miles, will require releveeing. This distance, at the above rate in cubic yards, amounts to 12,499,800 yards.

The Mississippi State levees have been put and maintained in good order since 1874. The same is partially true of Louisiana. An allowance of 2,500,000 yards would certainly be sufficient, apart from maintenance, to close existing breaks in these two States. This, added to the requirements in Missouri and Arkansas, would be 15,000,000 cubic yards.

But it is probable that the entire line, thus repaired, might need raising. The Mississippi River commission, as you will see in the last report, probably now before the Senate, does not consider the bed of the river practically inerosible, as has been heretofore assumed. Its reasons are derived from more extended and exact information than has been available. It is not certain that any great elevation of grade will be necessary for a continuously completed line. I am very sure that the additional elevation heretofore recommended, amounting, as a maximum, to eleven feet, will never be required. For purposes of estimate I will assume that the present levees range in height from four to twelve feet, and that this must be increased to from five to fifteen feet over the entire length, on both banks, say 1,670 miles. While there are now heights exceeding twelve feet, there are also many localities where no levees, or levees less than four feet high, are required.

The amount of earthwork required for this additional grade is about 44,000,000 cubic yards, giving the following total:

Entire new levees in Arkansas and Missouri	12,500,000
Breaks in Louisiana and Mississippi	2,500,000
Raising grade throughout	44,000,000
Total cubic yards	59,000,000

The State of Louisiana has built her levees for the past two years at an average price of 19.4 cents per cubic yard. For the two years previous to that period, when supplies and labor were cheaper, the average cost was a fraction over 17 cents. The payments for this work have not been in cash, some warrants usually running as much as a year before settlement. The work also was divided into such small parts that contractors were not justified in purchasing the labor-saving machinery necessary for the economical execution of such work. It seems to me entirely certain that levee building could be done for 20 cents per yard for cash, and in such large contracts as would admit the purchase of a suitable outfit. Assuming this rate, and the quantities before stated would make the cost of a complete levee system $11,800,000, or about one-quarter of previous estimates, namely, $46,000,000.

Now concerning maintenance. The States of Louisiana and Mississippi have about 1,070 out of 1,670 miles of front requiring levees, or where the hills do not approach the river. This is kept in tolerably good order. There is spent annually for maintenance in these two States a sum not exceeding $400,000; $500,000 would suffice to do it well. Prorating this sum over the entire length would give $773,000. I believe that with the better locations and dimensions that would be given by the Government to a systematic line, and with the protection to caving banks by revetment and other works of channel improvement, and with the greater security, resulting from increased height, the maintenance could be accomplished annually for the sum of $600,000.

The part that this levee work would play in securing the objects enumerated in the act creating the Mississippi River commission is declared in our reports. With the other vast advantages that would flow from it you are as familiar as I am.

Very respectfully,

R. M. HARROD.

Hon. B. F. JONAS.

Mr. President, even with the new breaks in the levees since this report, I think I may be justified in concurring with the Senator from Arkansas that the whole cost of a perfect system of levees would be under $15,000,000, and the cost of maintaining the same when erected $700,000, thus protecting this immense agricultural region from destructive overflows, and thereby adding greatly not only to the wealth of that section but to the wealth of the whole country.

The amount, as I have said before, which will be lost this year alone, the amount which was lost in 1874, the amount which was lost in 1866 in that agricultural country, would be sufficient not only to levee the Mississippi River but to wall it with a wall of granite from its headwaters to its mouth.

This is not a new question in the Senate. In 1866, shortly after the war, at a time when the levees were only partially rebuilt, (and they have never been thoroughly rebuilt since,) at a time when a similar flood was devastating that country, a select committee was formed in the Senate for the purpose of investigating the question, and that select committee reported authorizing an appropriation of a million and a half of dollars for the repair of the levees in the States of Mississippi, Arkansas, and Louisiana. The report was made to the Senate by Mr. Clark, of New Hampshire; I shall only read its concluding paragraphs:

The power of Congress to improve harbors and rivers has been long exercised, and is not doubted by the committee. Experience demonstrates that unless the waters of this river be limited to its proper bounds, the result is a deposit of earth or alluvion gradually filling up the mouth and increasing the bars of the river.

I have not quoted from the report of the Mississippi River commission alluded to by the Senator from Arkansas; but the theory of that commission, as of all preceding boards of engineers who have considered this subject, is that the building and maintenance of levees is a proper mode not only of confining the waters of the river, but of increasing the depth of the channel and the navigability of the stream:

The restoration of the levees will give greatly increased volume and force to the waters, and remove the impediments to navigation, while it will rescue from annual devastating floods a vast area of land of wonderful fertility, capable of supporting, with well-ordered industry, millions of inhabitants, ministering largely by their products to the national wealth and to the wants of the civilized world.

It is the part of wisdom to restore the breaches and desolated places which wasting elements and a more wasting civil war have made. Whosesoever may have been the folly to pull down, let ours be the magnanimity and the effort to build up.

After a thorough discussion in the Senate, the bill as reported passed as an amendment to an appropriation bill by a vote of 28 to 7. The debate shows in favor of the amendment such distinguished men as Mr. Hendricks, Mr. Guthrie, Mr. Wilson, Mr. Doolittle, Mr. Henderson, Mr. Howard, of Michigan. I propose to read briefly from the sebate. Mr. Hendricks said:

I was not discussing the question whether Congress can fence farms. That is not exactly the question. The question is whether Congress can aid to reclaim a country which the Government bought in 1803, without the express letter of the Constitution authorizing it. This is to reclaim a whole section of the country and to restrain the Mississippi River within its natural limits. That river is under the control of the Government for almost every purpose. It is a great channel of commerce; it is the nation's river; it does not belong to Louisiana; it does not belong to Mississippi; it is the river of all the States; and when it has broken beyond its bounds, why may we not restrain it by some little aid which the Government of the United States may give to the people along the border?

But I was saying, when the Senator interrupted me, that there is no portion of the country more interested in this particular measure than the region of country that he and I represent. Let us have again that country restored to a condition of productiveness that our people, the men of Indiana and of Illinois, may find there the market that they did before these dreadful crevasses destroyed that country.

Mr. Howard, of Michigan, said:

It is a great channel of commerce. Have we not a right to protect it as such? Have we not a right to dredge it out for the purpose of facilitating trade and navigation upon its bosom? I think no gentleman will deny it; and if we have a right to dredge it, have we not, upon the same principle, a right to establish embankments upon it for the purpose of keeping the waters within their proper channels? These levees, I understand, were erected there mainly for that purpose originally.

The Senator from Illinois says the object of this amendment is to protect the lands. The amendment does not so declare. If I have read it correctly, it says not a word about protecting the lands. The whole purpose of the appropriation is to repair the levees which have been erected there for the purpose I have mentioned, and they are just as necessary for the purpose of commerce and navigation as would be the dredging of the same stream, the removal of snags and sawyers from its channel, or doing any other act the object of which was to promote commerce and give it additional facilities upon that great Father of Waters.

I vote for this measure, not because I wish particularly to do a favor to planters and other proprietors on the banks of that river who have been or still are disloyal. I do not think I shall be accused of any very hot haste in extending favors to that class of persons; but still, even in regard to them, I shall always be disposed to do them justice, exact justice. I think, en passant, that justice has not yet been done to many of them. Her march is very slow, but I trust in God that she will yet overtake them.

I vote for this as a great national improvement. It may incidentally inure to the benefit of proprietors upon the banks of the river. If it does, I should be entirely content with it. But the great object is to afford facilities for commerce and navigation upon that stream, an object in which not only the States mentioned in the amendment are particularly interested, but in which Illinois, Ohio, Wisconsin, Iowa, Michigan, all the States of the Union, have an interest as part and parcel of this great nation; and I will not limit or confine my views to the small benefit which it may possibly confer upon the few persons who are immediately interested as planters and owners of farms upon this great river. I vote for it as a national object, as a national undertaking worthy of Congress, and I hope to see the amendment passed.

I trust, Mr. President, the bill introduced by the Senator from Arkansas will receive the speedy and favorable consideration of the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. Before the Senator sits down I wish to ask him a question. When he said these levees were to be 1,670 miles, I did not understand exactly what he meant by that. Is that the whole distance? Does that include both sides of the river?

Mr. JONAS. Both sides of the river.

Mr. TELLER. Does it include the rivers that must necessarily be leveed that come into the Mississippi River?

Mr. JONAS. No; it includes the Mississippi River alone. I do not know whether the other rivers are leveed to any great extent.

Mr. TELLER. They must necessarily require leveeing. If they are not leveed the water will simply pass out of the Mississippi and overflow their banks.

Mr. JONAS. This only applies to the Mississippi River.

Mr. TELLER. I want to ask the Senator if he can give me any estimate of, not the cost, but of the amount of miles of embankment or levees, including the rivers that run into the Mississippi?

Mr. JONAS. This estimate is only made as to the miles required on the Mississippi River.

Mr. TELLER. I do not intend to debate this subject now, and I am not going to say very much about the Mississippi River; but whenever anybody makes a statement here to the Senate that the Mississippi River and the tributaries running into it can be leveed for fifteen, twenty, thirty, or forty million dollars, I feel at liberty to dispute it.

Mr. JONAS. I only referred to the Mississippi River. I have an estimate from one of the Mississippi River commission, a distinguished engineer, who says the Mississippi River can be leveed for this sum.

Mr. TELLER. It does not make any difference who may make that statement, any man of practical business sense in this country will know that it cannot be correct. The honorable Senator himself says there are 1,670 miles of river to be leveed. The Mississippi River commission say it is to be leveed, and they themselves put the expense at $45,000 a mile, and they have not included in that the embankments of the rivers running into the Mississippi. So there is a vast expenditure of money beyond anything that has been calculated.

Besides, when we enter on this subject of leveeing rivers, not for the purpose of commerce, but for the purpose of protection of land, we must extend this levee system to all the rivers in the United States that are navigable, at least, and overflow their bottoms. The Missouri overflows its bottom from away above Omaha or Sioux City clear down to its junction with the Mississippi River. The Red River in the Senator's State is a very long river, overflowing a vast extent of country. So we may as well, before we start in, make up our minds that we are going into the levee system generally. If it is for the protection of the landowners and not for the protection of commerce——

Mr. GARLAND. The Senator from Colorado will permit me a moment?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. GARLAND. I was careful to say that the bill contemplates only levees on the Mississippi River.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that.

Mr. GARLAND. The estimates I have read were confined to that project alone. I am of the opinion that if the General Government will take care of the levees on this great inland sea, this great national highway, the States can take care of the levees of the tributaries or streams within their borders. That is my proposition. All the estimates I have read are based upon that idea.

Mr. TELLER. But no system can ever be adopted by the General Government that does not include the leveeing of some portion of the rivers wholly and entirely confined to some of these States, because unless the States will adopt some system and join the General Government we cannot alone secure the object by leveeing the Mississippi. Of course there might be a system arranged with the States so that that might be done. But what I rose for was simply to put in my protest against any statement going into the RECORD, apparently with my consent, that any such sum of money as is here suggested will levee these great rivers.

Now, before I close I want to call the attention of the Senate to the last report of the Mississippi River commission as to the difficulties of making an estimate on this subject. Everybody understands that who has given attention to it. It is not the simple building of these levees, it is not the simple measurements of so much earth, but it depends very much upon the ground upon which you put them, and a thousand contingencies well understood by any man who has given attention to engineering; and until these are thoroughly understood—and they are not yet understood—I am satisfied from the report of the commission that nobody can make a fair estimate of the expense. The commission say:

In making the required estimate of the total cost of these improvements, difficulties of a peculiar character are encountered. Among these may be mentioned the uncertainty necessarily attending novel methods of construction; the absence of precedents indicating the degree and promptness with which desired results may be achieved; the possible existence of undiscovered gravel beds which will have to be removed by dredging; and the probability that one of the effects of the improvement will be the development of bad bars, and the necessity of additional works at localities where the navigation has heretofore been good.

The estimates of cost submitted in the report of February 17, 1880, for initial works upon six reaches of the river between Cairo and Vicksburgh, embracing an aggregate length of 184 miles of bad navigation, amounts to $4,113,000, and it was stated as the opinion of the commission—

"That such additional works as will ultimately be required to complete and render permanent the improvement contemplated in this system at the localities specified will not exceed the amount stated as needed for initial works."

This would amount to $8,226,000 for 184 miles, or about $45,000 per mile.

These estimates cover about one-fourth of the length of the river where navigation needs improvement, namely, from Cairo to Red River; and assuming that the remaining three-fourths will cost proportionately, the aggregate cost of the entire improvement would reach $33,000,000.

I am not afraid to put myself on record here—the future will demonstrate the correctness of it—that ten times $37,000,000 will not levee that river as it is proposed to levee it. I do not say that the Government ought not to do it; I am not going to pass upon that question. The power to do it I do not deny; and I am not saying but what the time may come, and it may be now, when we should do it; but I am saying that we ought to go into this business with our eyes wide open, and not allow the anxiety of people in that section of the country to induce us to suppose we are entering upon a very small undertaking. We must remember that it will take a vast amount of money, and when we have leveed the Mississippi River we shall never be able to stand up and deny to the Missouri River and other rivers of like character the same aid from the Government.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I beg to be indulged in a very few words before this bill is disposed of. I say "disposed of," because I can assure my friend from Arkansas that in my opinion it will never come back to the Senate again. Mississippi River bills have but one fate. Outside of the appropriation, and the meager, beggarly appropriation in the general river and harbor bill, it seems to be impossible to pass any act in the Congress of the United States for the improvement of the Mississippi River.

The Senator from Colorado reminds us that we need not expect only an expenditure of a few millions of dollars, but three or four hundred million dollars. Mr. President, the trouble is we can secure barely a million. With the greatest difficulty, in the last river and harbor bill, after to my personal knowledge we had to resort to all sorts of personal solicitations, we secured an appropriation for the Mississippi of $1,000,000. In the general river and harbor bill preceding the last bill we appropriated $100,000 for the Father of Waters and $100,000 for the Kentucky River, in my native State, on the banks of which I was born. I say this with no sort of invidious reflection upon the Kentucky River, because with it are associated all my memories of childhood and boyhood and young manhood; but a little stream across which any youth could throw a stone received at the hands of the Congress of the United States the same appropriation as that imperial river which laves in its course the soil of twenty-two States and Territories, and which, according to Mr. Calhoun, was the great inland sea of this continent.

Why, sir, some years ago, after immense labor, we organized a Mississippi River commission. It was composed of the most prominent and experienced engineers known to the United States or to the world. That commission surveyed the river, mapped out a plan of improvement, reported it to Congress, and asked $5,000,000 for initial improvements. They succeeded in securing $100,000, and altogether some $1,200,000 after that was voted, and to-day it stands facing the Congress of the United States without any action, without any regard being paid to its recommendations except these beggarly appropriations put in the general river and harbor bill. At the commencement of this session and on the very first day of the session, I introduced a bill appropriating $5,000,000 to the improvement of the Mississippi River under the plan of the Mississippi River commission, and $5,000,000 for the improvement of the Missouri. That bill went to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and has not been heard of since, and this bill will go the same way. It will never be heard of again in the Senate; it will lie in the tomb of the Capulets, and the whole result of this will be the speeches made here and the resolutions of the Mississippi River Convention, and next year another overflow, another flood, more appropriations for sufferers, and so on indefinitely through all time to come.

Mr. President, it is time to speak plainly upon this question. I believe the Senate of the United States has every disposition to make suitable improvements on this great river, but the trouble is that the river and harbor bill that comes to us from the House is an omnibus bill, a log-rolling bill, and members of the House are determined to provide for their own districts; and the result is, when they get through with Coon Creek and Goose Branch and Muskrat River, the river and harbor bill comes here swelled to eleven or twelve millions, and there is no room for the Mississippi or any of its great tributaries. The last river and harbor bill, which raised such a clamor throughout the country, amounted to over $11,000,000; and a distinguished Senator, not now a member of this body, a great leader in one of the political parties of this country, made it the text of his speech in opening the last campaign, that a log-rolling river and harbor bill of $11,000,000 had been passed through the Congress of the United States. The time has come when we must meet the question whether the Mississippi River is to be year after year a terror and a curse to this country, or whether it shall be made a great inland sea, floating the commerce of a continent to the ports of the entire world.

Now, Mr. President, without going into statistics or without lauding this great river—because to say that its dimensions and importance are not known is to charge this Senate with the most dense and sterile ignorance—what are the States interested and what their productions? The astounding figures are presented that 81 per cent. of the corn of the United States, or 1,263,348,700 bushels, are produced in fourteen States on the banks of the Mississippi River and its tributaries; 64 per cent. of the wheat of the whole United States, or 289,708,550 bushels; 65 per cent. of the entire oats of the United States, or 222,028,100 bushels; 55 per cent. of the tobacco, or 216,842,000 pounds; 49 per cent. of the cotton of the whole United States, or 2,616,763 bales; 66 per cent. in the value of live hogs, or $97,455,823 in value; and by the completion of the jetties at the mouth of this river, without carrying out the system of improvement adopted by the Mississippi River commission, the report shows that during the single fiscal year following the completion of the jetties at the mouth of the river, the year ending June 30, 1880, the domestic exports of the city of New Orleans alone increased $26,436,077, the total exports for the year ending June 30, 1879, being $63,782,426, and for the year ending June 30, 1880, $90,238,503.

Mr. President, in the face of these astounding figures, we are told that we must hesitate about $50,000,000 or $100,000,000 or $200,000,000 to reclaim this magnificent empire from the flood. It would be a cheap expenditure to-day if this Government would spend $250,000,000 upon the Mississippi River and its improvement; it would be an economical arrangement in face of the enormous value of property destroyed year after year, the enormous value of the commerce interested in this improvement.

But, Mr. President, there are one or two considerations which I shall mention outside of dollars and cents. We have had a great war. I do not care to discuss its causes. I am here, I trust as a patriot and pretending to be a statesman, to discuss its results and its effects. What were the results? One of them, which appalled almost the civilized world, was the devastation, the ruin, the destruction of values, and the destruction of the autonomy of the States of one-half of this Union. I say nothing now of the bitter feeling, the harvest of distrust, the blood and tears of agony which followed that war, but I speak alone of the destruction of material interests, the property that went out of existence, the ruin and havoc, the obliterated evidences of thrift and industry on every hand.

Sir, what higher ambition can exist for the victorious section now in possession of this Government—and I dispute not the edicts of war and of fate—than to hold out its strengthening hand, its warm, embracing clasp, to the people who now more than ever need the paternal care and assistance of this great Government? If the Congress of the United States ever intend to tie this country together with bands of love that will last as long as human nature is weak and yet trustful, let them do it now. If there ever was a time, this is the time, when the Government, in the hands of the North, should say to the Southern people, "Obliterate all feeling of the war; we come to you in your agony and distress; we will give you assistance; we will build up your levees; we will stand on no constitutional quibble, but in deed and in truth, in material prosperity, in the hopes of the future, in the memories of the common gallantry of the past, we will make this one great and undivided country."

But, Mr. President, more than that, above and beyond anything which may be termed æsthetic, as a matter of right and justice, the levees should be improved. Is there any doubt that this great river is the property of the entire country? Have there been any doubts since Mr. Calhoun, at the Mississippi River convention in Memphis years ago, the great father of the extreme school of State rights, declared that the Mississippi is a great inland sea, and under the care and in the hands of the General Government? Is there any man who shall stand here and say that this imperial river is not the property of all the States of this whole Union? If it is our property, then by the commonest principles of justice and of right we should so use it as not to injure the property of others. By the principles of law known to every civilized government, it is the duty of every man, of every corporation, of every community, so to use its own property that it shall not injure another's or become a nuisance to others.

What to-day is the Mississippi River? It is an annually recurring curse to the people upon its banks. Instead of being a source of prosperity mingling its great waters with those of the Gulf and on to the Atlantic Ocean, it is every year a recurring horror and a recurring dread.

More than that, as my friend from Arkansas said, it strikes not with its boisterous waves the rich and those who are able to seek refuge in cities and towns from its devastating course; it strikes the poor, the helpless, the humble. There are to-day upon its banks more than 40,000 negroes, unable to escape, unable to flee, and compelled to remain until the Government gives them a refuge from this great curse.

Mr. President, by every consideration, not only economic and material, but of justice, of right, of humanity, of mercy, this bill should be passed, no matter what the expense. Let it be but the initial point toward the recovery and reclamation of the Mississippi Valley and the permanent improvement of these rivers, that are the property of the entire country.

Mr. GARLAND. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] seemed to apprehend that I would press for a vote on this bill. That is not my purpose. I want every one to come to the consideration of it with eyes open, and I want the bill referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries. The Senator from Colorado will bear in mind that I do not wish to take advantage of any present distress on the Mississippi to press the bill to a vote. I wish to have it referred; and I hope the prophecy of the honorable Senator from Missouri will prove to be a mistake; I hope the committee will give it early consideration and make report. If they do not, I shall be compelled to resort to some of the parliamentary devices to prise it out and get it from that committee and have a vote upon it, with all due respect to them.

Mr. TELLER. I did not rise to say what I said for the purpose of antagonizing the bill. I stated distinctly that I did not know but that the time might have come when it was necessary to do this, but I wanted the Senate to proceed intelligently upon it, and not with the understanding that it is a small matter in which we are engaged.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair.) The bill, having been read the second time, will be referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and Tributaries.

DEPARTMENTAL EXPENDITURES.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Appropriations, who were directed by resolution of the Senate of October 26, 1881, "to investigate the accounts for the expenditure of the several appropriations for contingent or other expenses of the several Executive Departments, including the methods of making such disbursements, the character and disposition of the purchases made, and the employment of labor paid from such appropriations," submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and on motion of Mr. ALLISON, the testimony taken in the matter was ordered to be printed with the report.

TARIFF AND TAX COMMISSION.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask to lay aside informally the unfinished business, which is the tariff-commission bill, in order to proceed with the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. BAYARD. Let it be laid aside informally and without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The tariff-commission bill will still be the regular order. If there be no objection the tariff-commission bill will be laid aside informally and the Post-Office appropriation bill will be considered.

Mr. PLUMB. Now I yield to the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK.]

SUSAN MARSHALL MASSIE.

Mr. BECK. I appeal to the Senator from Kansas to allow me to ask unanimous consent to pass a little bill merely to authorize the issuing of a duplicate check, the original of which was lost in the mails. If it takes more than a minute, I will not press it. The bill passed the House unanimously and was reported from the Committee on Pensions unanimously, and I think it will pass the Senate unanimously.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield?

Mr. PLUMB. I yield for the purpose named by the Senator from Kentucky.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 4283) for the relief of Susan Marshall Massie. It directs the United States pension agent for paying pensions at Louisville, Kentucky, to issue to Susan Marshall Massie, of Mason County, Kentucky, a duplicate of his check for $1,466.67, dated June 30, 1881, and payable to her order, after she shall furnish to him sufficient proof of the loss and non-reception by her and non-payment of the original check.

Mr. SHERMAN. I thought the issuing of duplicate checks was to be covered by a general provision as an amendment to this bill?

Mr. BECK. No, sir; this bill passed the House some time ago, and was reported from the Committee on Pensions unanimously.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to this bill, but I understood there was to be a general provision covering such cases.

Mr. BECK. There is such a bill, which we propose to bring forward hereafter, but it will be delayed a long time, and this woman needs the money.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3548) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, after the word "sub-contractor," in line 72, to insert "on any contract hereafter made;" and in line 76, after the word "may," to insert "whenever he shall deem it for the good of the service;" so as to make the clause read:

For inland transportation by star-routes, $7,250,000: Provided, however, That whenever any contractor or sub-contractor on any contract hereafter made shall sublet his contract for the transportation of the mail on any route for a less sum than that for which he contracted to perform the service, the Postmaster-General may, whenever he shall deem it for the good of the service, declare the original contract at an end and enter into a contract with the last sub-contractor, without advertising, to perform the service on the terms at which the last sub-contractor agreed with the original contractor or former sub-contractor to perform the same.

Mr. McMILLAN. This was the question under consideration at the adjournment of the Senate yesterday. During the course of the discussion it was urged, in answer to the position which I assumed, that the first clause of the amendment proposed by the committee, and now pending, should be agreed to, and if it were not agreed to it would interfere with the rights of the parties to contracts for carrying the mail. It will be observed upon reading the bill that it does not interfere with mail contracts, but that it merely prevents a person who has entered into a contract for carrying the mails of the United States from subletting that contract at any future time. There the contract is not impaired in any way; the rights of the contractor are not interfered with. It regulates the service by imposing upon the contractor the performance of the duty which he has contracted to perform. It prevents him from transferring the right to carry the mail by sub-contract for a less sum than the Government had agreed to pay him. Therefore there is no private right interfered with.

It is merely a regulation of the public service for the public benefit, and it will prevent persons who intend to engage in carrying the mail of the United States from bidding and obtaining a contract at a higher rate than that service ought reasonably to be performed for, because if a contractor can sublet his contract and have the service which he has contracted to perform performed for a less sum, then the Government should be able to do that.

The bill secures to the Government the right to avoid any contract which has been sublet and to contract with the sub-contractor as if he were the original contractor. Certainly there can be no objection to permitting the Government to have that right. All that will be necessary, as I understand the bill, will be a non-concurrence in the first clause of the amendment proposed by the Senate committee. I concur with that committee altogether in the purpose they desire to accomplish. I think the committee proposed the amendment to the bill in the interest of the public service, and I think the suggestion which I make now is only in further accomplishment of that end.

Mr. MAXEY. I asked the Senator from Kansas yesterday evening a question in respect to the amendment, because I could not well understand it, and I cannot say that I do now, but the purpose which the committee has in view is good, it is wise, it is to prevent the system which has done so much toward destroying efficient mail service by the taking of mail contracts by a contractor and subletting them to sub-contractors, and giving up these sub-contracts when they are found not to be profitable, and the whole service thrown into confusion.

If the amendment accomplishes the object the committee have in view I am perfectly satisfied, my purpose being only to aid the committee in doing what clearly they want to do; but I am not sure as a proposition of law, as there is no privity between the Government and a sub-contractor, that the committee have covered the case by their amendment. It was in that view I asked the question I did yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McMILLAN. I submitted a motion last evening, I think, to strike out the first clause of the amendment of the committee.

Mr. PLUMB. No motion of that kind is necessary, because the amendment of the committee has not been incorporated in the bill. The Senator will accomplish his purpose by voting against agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. McMILLAN. Then I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will demand the yeas and nays only on the first clause of the amendment.

Mr. McMILLAN. That is all I care for, merely on the first clause.

Mr. PLUMB. The amendment may be divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first part of the amendment, to insert in line 72 the words "on any contract hereafter made."

Mr. McMILLAN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. RANSOM. My colleague [Mr. VANCE] is detained at home to-day by sickness. He is paired with the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. KELLOGG.] My colleague would vote "nay" on the pending amendment.

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—32.

Aldrich,	Conger,	Harrison,	Plumb,
Allison,	Dawes,	Hawley,	Rollins,
Anthony,	Ferry,	Hill of Colorado,	Sawyer,
Beck,	Frye,	Jackson,	Sherman,
Blair,	Garland,	Jonas,	Slater,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hale,	McDill,	Teller,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hampton,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Harris.	Mitchell,	Walker.

NAYS—12.

Brown,	Fair,	Morgan,	Ransom,
Coke,	Farley,	Platt,	Saunders,
Edmunds,	McMillan,	Pugh,	Williams.

ABSENT—32.

Bayard,	Groome,	Kellogg,	Morrill,
Butler,	Grover,	Lamar,	Pendleton,
Call,	Hill of Georgia,	Lapham,	Saulsbury,
Camden,	Hoar,	Logan,	Sewell,
Davis of Illinois,	Ingalls,	McPherson,	Vance,
Davis of West Va.,	Johnston,	Mahone,	Van Wyck,
George,	Jones of Florida,	Miller of Cal.,	Vest,
Gorman,	Jones of Nevada,	Miller of N. Y.,	Windom.

So the first clause of the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair.) The question is on agreeing to the next clause of the amendment, which is in line 76, after the word "may," to insert "whenever he shall deem it for the good of the service."

The second clause of the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 89, to insert the following additional provisos:

And provided further, That if any person shall hereafter perform any service for any contractor or sub-contractor in carrying the mail, he shall, upon filing in the Department satisfactory evidence of his contract for such service and of its performance, thereafter have a lien on any money due such contractor or sub-contractor for such service to the amount of the same; and if such contractor or sub-contractor shall fail to pay the party or parties who have performed service as aforesaid the amount due for such service within two months after the expiration of the quarter in which such service shall have been performed, the Postmaster-General may cause the amount due to be paid said party or parties and charge to the contractor, provided that such payment shall not in any case exceed the rate of pay per annum of the contractor or sub-contractor: And provided further, That where any person, corporation, or partnership shall have contracts for the performance of mail service upon more than one route, and any failure to perform the service according to contract on any one or more of such routes shall occur, no payment shall be made for service on any of the routes under contract with such person, corporation, or partnership until such failure has been removed and all penalties therefor fully satisfied.

Mr. SHERMAN. The amendment now proposed would make a very important change in the postal law. It would give an enormous power to every person interested in or doing work for a mail contractor over his pay. It seems to me that by the agency here provided for any mail contractor in doubtful circumstances could be broken up by one or two hostile subordinates. Any person who drives a stage-coach, any engineer on a steamboat, any person employed on a railroad engaged in the postal service or having a postal contract may make a claim against the contractor, file it with the Post-Office Department, and tie up for two months after the money becomes due any payment that may be due.

It seems to me that under the operation of this provision, unless it has been very carefully studied, the postal service may be greatly impeded. Suppose the creditors of a railroad company may have a claim against it. The railroad company has earned money under a contract. These creditors may file their claim with the Department, and it becomes a lien, from the time of its filing, upon the next quarter's pay. No money can be paid out, however unreasonable may be the claim, however unfounded it may be, provided the claim is made and filed. There is no requirement even that it shall be sworn to; but if a claim is made by any subordinate to the contractor he may file with the Postmaster-General his claim, whether well or ill founded, and it becomes at once a lien upon the quarter's pay, and for sixty days thereafter the money cannot be paid out. At the end of sixty days the Postmaster-General becomes the judge whether he shall pay the amount of the claim or whether he shall disallow it.

I do not want to interfere with the amendment proposed by the committee, and while I like very much the general object of it, to secure to laborers their hire, it does seem to me it is a very grave and doubtful question. In other words, it gives a mechanic's lien upon the pay of mail contractors to secure all claims that are made, not before a court, not before a tribunal which can try the question, but before the Postmaster-General.

I suppose the provision is recommended by the Postmaster-General, and that it is supported by the Department, or it would not have been proposed. I wish to enter my caveat against it at least. I believe it may be the cause of grave injustice; that it may interfere with the public service; and there is no reason for it, because each person presenting a claim of this kind has a right to sue in a tribunal at the place where he is employed; he may have his remedy at law, while this provision may be made the means of oppression and injustice.

Mr. PLUMB. There is no doubt some force in what the Senator from Ohio has said. I think, however, he misapprehends the entire purpose of the amendment in saying it would apply to the employés of railroad companies. The amendment is found under the heading of "inland transportation by star routes." By a construction which I have no doubt will be put upon it as upon all other portions of the bill, limiting the operation of its provisions to the title under which each item is found, this would be held to apply only to star-route service.

It is the application of a principle as familiar as any other known to the law, giving a lien to the material man, to the wage man, for services performed. While it is new in one sense in the practice of this Government in reference to the carrying of the mails, in another sense it is not new, because a similar principle is applied now, and has been for a long time, in favor of a sub-contractor, the adjudication of the service under whose contract would present the same feature for the consideration of the Postmaster-General in the quasi-judicial capacity in which he might act for the purpose of settling the claim as would be presented by a lien filed by a teamster or a stable-keeper or a rider or any other person who might perform service in or about the carrying of the mail.

This provision is designed to correct an evil which has grown to very great proportions. It has been the habit of a class of persons known as commercial bidders to bid routes off at a very low price, and to rely upon their ability to cheat the local people who render them a service, who hire to them for the carrying out of the contract, and thus save themselves from their official bond. This is not only an evil which the committee designed to correct, but it is an evil which has extended itself to the service in all portions of the country; and it is a matter of concern for the Government, not merely because of the obligation it may be under to protect these people, but because there is a tendency to break down the efficiency of the service. Under the old plan, a person taking a contract at a lower price than he can properly carry the mail for, and who charges his line off upon the person whom he may hire, runs the risk of being unable to carry on that service at a particular time or at a particular season of the year; and to that extent the Government is damaged by the practice which has heretofore prevailed, and which it is the design of this amendment to remedy.

We believe that not only is it the interest of the Government fairly to protect persons who take service under these contractors to the extent of giving them a lien, but that it is a part of the duty which the Government owes to the service itself to put this safeguard around its proper performance.

I may say further, that the amendment in its terms was drawn in the Post-Office Department, and has been the subject of a great deal of consideration there. It was changed somewhat in phraseology and abridged somewhat for the purpose of convenience, but the substance of it is as recommended by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no doubt that the object of this amendment is a good one; the design of the framers is good; but I again call the attention of the Senate to it. I assure them they will hear from this amendment a hundred times after it passes. This provision reverses the policy of the Government from the beginning. The Government of the United States has never allowed wages due to its employés to be attached; it has never invited a proceeding of attachment against the wages of its laborers or of its contractors; it has never undertaken to intervene between its employés and the creditors of those employés.

If the principle of this amendment were applied to all the public officers of the United States, they would be constantly harassed, the United States would be constantly harassed by attachments against the United States for money due to clerks or other employés. The principle of this amendment would authorize the pay of a Senator to be attached in order to do justice to some servant or employé of his. The Government of the United States has uniformly denied it; the Supreme Court in repeated decisions has decided that money due from the Government must be paid to the person to whom the Government has agreed to pay it, and that no court should enforce a provision to disturb that money; that money due to the individual must be paid to the person to whom it is payable, and the United States cannot be made the stakeholder between the creditors of its creditor and that creditor himself.

This provision invites controversies. Every person who has a complaint against a railroad or steamboat corporation or an ordinary star-route contractor may file his claim, whether well or ill founded, with the Postmaster-General, and then the money is stopped; it is attached; there is a lien upon it. In other words, it is treated like a man building a house. While the house is going forward and for a period of three months afterward the pay due to the laborers becomes a lien upon the land and may be enforced at the end of three months by a proper proceeding in law. No injustice is done in such cases, because the property is fixed and the labor of the man went in to contribute to that building. Therefore it is a just principle that the laborer should be paid from the proceeds of the building rather than that some one else should be paid who is an ordinary creditor. But this case is different.

Suppose a railroad company is somewhat involved. A railroad company is a contractor just like any other contractor. A railroad company earns say ten or fifteen thousand dollars a year for postal service. Any creditor, any person who works for that railroad, any person who contributes by his labor to carry the United States mails may, under the broad provision of this bill, file his claim here with the Postmaster-General and demand that he shall be paid. In that way it would compel the Government, probably, to file a petition or a proceeding in the nature of a cross-bill to ascertain which of the creditors are most deserving, and it would be embarrassing to the Government.

My own judgment is that it is better to leave the law stand as it is, and let the people who deal with public contractors look to the contractors for their pay. The United States has never undertaken to allow even the lien laws to apply to a Government building We do not deal so with the contractor. If a contractor makes a contract to build a public building we pay the money due to the contractor, and no process of law can arrest the money from being paid to the person to whom we have agreed to pay it. The equitable rights that exist between individuals who trust the contractor must be settled by the local courts, and the United States executive authorities never interpose.

This provision transfers to the Post-Office Department judicial authority. They must first pass upon the nature of the claim to see whether it is just and reasonable, whether it is supported by reasonable evidence, and at the end of sixty days, when the controversy is still undetermined, the Postmaster-General will be called upon to determine the question whether the claim is well or ill founded. He becomes the judge between the contractor and every person who has a claim against the contractor.

Although this amendment is intended for a good purpose, although its main object is undoubtedly correct, to secure to the man who labors pay for his labor, yet it would create serious embarrassment in the public service. I believe, in regard to our postal service and in regard to all other branches of the public service, the Government ought to stand by its contracts, leaving private citizens to their remedy in the courts, and not otherwise.

I do not wish to make any further objection to the amendment, but rose simply to call attention to it.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like, in connection with the remarks of the Senator from Ohio, to call attention to two other points that occur to me as objections to the amendment. In the second clause of the amendment, commencing in the ninety-sixth line, there are provisions which at the option of the Postmaster-General will result in the payment of the money in dispute to the person setting up the claim as against the contractor or the sub-contractor. That money in dispute may belong, of course, to the contractor. The very fact that it is in dispute shows that there is a proper subject-matter of litigation, but the Postmaster-General is made a judicial power to settle that controversy, at least for the time being, and to pay over the money to the full amount claimed by the person who sets up the claim. After having transferred, without any trial by jury, the custody of the contractor's funds to the possession of the claimant, the amendment does not even provide the safeguard of a right of action to recover it in the courts. If this can be done at all certainly it cannot be done, it seems to me, without providing a right of action or suggesting some form in which the recovery may be made. Then the last clause of the amendment, commencing in the one hundred and fifth line, reads:

That where any person, corporation, or partnership shall have contracts for the performance of mail service upon more than one route, and any failure to perform the service according to contract on any one or more of such routes shall occur, no payment shall be made for service on any of the routes under contract with such person, corporation, or partnership until such failure has been removed and all penalties therefor fully satisfied.

Where a contractor has various routes upon which he has agreed to carry the mails he is not likely to let all the work to a specific individual, but it is likely to be performed by many different parties, all of whom will be of course entitled to their pay from the general fund, the aggregate fund which is due to the principal contractor; but here is a provision which will work in this way: suppose a difficulty occurs between the principal contractor and the person who carries the mail over some one of the routes; that man, setting up a claim for whatever may be due him, justly or unjustly, for carrying the mail over his particular route, will lock up the entire fund from which payments must be made to those carrying the mail over other and different routes, between whom and the principal contractor no controversy whatever may exist.

It is quite obvious that these two objections are of so serious a character, at least they are to my mind, as to show that the entire amendment would be not only inoperative for good, but productive of very great confusion and evil.

Mr. BECK. I only rise for the purpose of reading, in answer to the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] who seems to think we are extending the principle to a very dangerous extent, section 625 of the postal laws and regulations of 1879, where all the principles of this amendment seem to me to be thoroughly recognized. After section 624, providing that contracts might be sublet with the consent of the Postmaster-General, section 625 reads as follows:

When any person or persons being under contract with the Government of the United States for carrying the mails shall lawfully sublet any such contract, or lawfully employ any other person or persons to perform the service by such contractor agreed to be performed, or any part thereof, he or they shall file in the office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General a copy of his or their contract; and thereupon it shall be the duty of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General to notify the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department of the fact of the filing in his office of such contract. Said notice shall embrace the name or names of the original contractor or contractors, the number of the route or routes, the name or names of the sub-contractor or sub-contractors, and the amount agreed to be paid to the sub-contractor or sub-contractors. And upon the receipt of said notice by the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, it shall be his duty to retain, out of the amount due the original contractor or contractors, the amount stated in said notice as agreed to be paid to the sub-contractor or sub-contractors, and shall pay said amount, upon the certificate of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, to the sub-contractor or sub-contractors, under the same rules and regulations now governing the payments made to original contractors: Provided, That upon satisfactory evidence that the original contractor or contractors have paid off and discharged the amount due under his or their contract to the sub-contractor or sub-contractors, it shall be the duty of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General to certify such fact to the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department; and thereupon said Auditor shall settle with the original contractor or contractors, under the same rules as are now provided by law for such settlements. (Act May 17, 1878, section 3, 20 Statutes, page 61.)

The Senate will observe that in the first part of this section the language seems to be broad enough to cover employés as well as sub-contractors, because the words used are:

When any person or persons * * * shall lawfully sublet any such contract, or lawfully employ any other person or persons to perform the service by such contractor agreed to be performed, or any part thereof, he or they shall file in the office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General a copy of his or their contract.

The object the committee had in view in carrying out this idea was simply that if the House provision shall prevail, it will substantially prohibit sub-contractors from taking the contracts off the hands of the original contractors, and the original contractors would carry the mails themselves, not through formal sub-contractors but through other persons, and these persons performing the service for the United States, under the spirit of this section, we thought it was fair to give them the same right to file their contracts and have the money held so that they should not be cheated out of it as in the present existing condition the sub-contractors had the right to do. That is all there is of it, as I understand; and we did not feel that there would be any serious harm growing out of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to state the difference?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is a provision in favor of an assignment, in whole or in part, of a contract, a subletting of a contract, or the employment of some one else to do the work stipulated for. In that case the assignment or sub-contract must be in writing and the writing filed. In other words, it is simply an assignment of a contract, and that assignment is filed in the Department and is respected, and to the extent of the stipulated sum named in the written assignment the sub-contractor is protected. That is very different from this provision. Here the language of the amendment is broad:

That if any person shall hereafter perform any service for any contractor or sub-contractor in carrying the mail he shall, &c.

This creates a right in the nature of a lien; it is declared to be in the nature of a lien for every person so employed. A stage-driver is employed in carrying the mail, a hostler is employed to attend to the horses, or a person is employed to furnish food at a particular stable, and you may apply it to all; not only to the emyloyés of the contractor, but to the employés of the sub-contractor upon an oral agreement as well as upon a written agreement, upon matters subject to dispute as well as those that are stipulated and fixed by precise writing. There is a very great difference, I respectfully suggest. I do not wish to obstruct any reforms that the Committee on Appropriations desire to make in the postal service. I have no doubt they are greatly needed. Judging by what is published in the papers, there have been great frauds and abuses in that system; but it seems to me this provision makes the Government a mere stakeholder to decide whether the contractor has complied with his engagements to those in his employ, and that is a departure from the established policy of the Government.

I said this provision would apply to a railroad company. So it does in terms; but the Senator from Kansas called my attention to the fact that this is a proviso to the appropriation for star-route service, which includes, I believe, stages, and horses, and steamboats, and everything of that kind.

Mr. HAWLEY. Not steamboats.

Mr. SHERMAN. The language is so broad that it might extend to all employment by any contractor, but that could be very easily remedied.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I think the pending amendment is another illustration of the vice of attempting general legislation upon an appropriation bill, a subject that I am sure was very thoroughly ventilated in the Forty-sixth Congress. I think the amendment is out of place entirely. Besides, it seems to be liable to the objections mentioned by the Senator from Ohio and others. As the Senator from Ohio says, this provision is unlimited except as to star routes.

If any person shall hereafter perform any service for any contractor or sub-contractor.

Why say "any" if that does not apply to the driver of the stage, to the stable-keeper, to the wagon-maker, to the harness-maker, to the bridge company, to any one of those persons, claiming, unjustly perhaps, from the contractor, who files his lien on the Post-Office Department? How shall that claim be adjusted? This differs very broadly from the case of a building lien in the several States, which has been referred to, because there the State provides for the lien, and the State provides for the method of settling the lien; it provides the tribunal for the settlement of the whole transaction; but, mind you, this is a lien that the Federal Government allows to be placed upon its Treasury, while the correctness of the claim which the man makes upon the contractor has to be settled in the State courts entirely; and there comes in a difference between this and the case suggested by the Senator from Kentucky. There a statute of the United States is dealing between contractors who alike have contracts with the Federal Government and who alike have remedies as against the Federal Government. The relation is all one and before one tribunal. Here you establish a tribunal the jurisdiction of which can only be settled in the State court. You may suppose the case, we will say, of a bridge company or any one of those numberless persons who may have a lawful claim upon a mail contractor. The plaintiff files a claim for $200 here in the Post-Office Department, and brings his suit in the State court at the same time. Nevertheless, at the end of two months, before that case may have come to trial, the Post-Office Department may pay over the $200, we will say to a wagon-maker. His suit comes on to trial, and it is found that only $50 is due; who is going to adjust that difference? Where is the $150 that he got from the contractor? The Government has paid it over and he has got it in his pocket. Or he comes into court after receiving the $200, and says: "I have got the $200; the Postmaster-General gave it to me; I withdraw my suit;" where is the remedy of the contractor then?

We are getting ourselves into inextricable confusion with this provision, and I think providing such a state of affairs that half a dozen malicious persons, trumping up claims for which there may or may not be any basis whatever, and filing them here may practically break a great many of these small contractors. There is no due relation between the lien and the authority that is to settle it.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion to him?

Mr. HAWLEY. Certainly.

Mr. BECK. I suggest after the word "service," in line 91, to add the words "under a written agreement," so as to read:

That if any person shall hereafter perform any service, under a written agreement, for any contractor or sub-contractor in carrying the mail, &c.

I thought that was in the amendment until just now; I know it was talked of in committee. There ought to be a written agreement.

Mr. HAWLEY. That would help somewhat, but every lawyer knows that a written agreement does not of necessity determine of its own language what the amount of the debt due is.

Mr. BECK. But it does as to the sub-contractor.

Mr. HAWLEY. That makes it a less difficulty concerning the sub-contractor; but another thing is whether the sub-contractor, the person with whom there was a written contract, has performed that contract or not. Of course I would not object to having those words inserted, but it would be only a botch of what I think is a bad amendment anyhow.

Mr. DAWES. I think it may be fairly said of mail contractors that they are men of many inventions, and when you undertake to protect both the service and the man who performs it as mail contractor, you have got from time to time to meet his inventions. First, he invented a way of associating with himself enough to bid off thousands of contracts all over the country for routes which he never had seen, where he had never known the expense of carrying on the service or what the mails could fitly be carried for. He only knew by access to the Department here what some man in the locality was carrying the mail for a thousand miles from here. Such mail routes have been bid off by men in this city, whose local habitation is here. Then he presents to the local contractor the alternative of giving up his whole appointment for carrying the mails or taking it off his hands at his terms.

It was found necessary to take care of sub-contractors who were compelled under those circumstances to carry the mails at rates dictated by contractors. The Department provided, and Congress adopted as a law, a provision to give such sub-contractor a lien upon the contract money, and took care of him in that way. Then the contractor invented another way to circumvent him, and that was to only contract with him to do a part of the service, and then he succeeded in relieving himself of the obligation to pay the man who performed part of the service for the service which he rendered. And it came to be four years ago that a corporation formed under the general law of the District of Columbia bid off a thousand or more contracts all over the country, and that they could not let them safely under existing law in an entirety to a sub-contractor, because the sub-contractor had the benefit of a law like this to take care of him. Then they employed one man to perform a part of the labor, and another man to perform another part of it, and each was without remedy, not even the remedy which a common day-laborer has against every other employer except the Government of the United States. When he performs any service, no matter whether it pertains to the particular subject-matter under consideration or any other service, there is furnished him by the law of the land a process by which he can put his hand upon whatever is due anywhere and from anybody to his employer and hold it until he is paid.

The House of Representatives undertook to meet this evil by providing that there should be no subletting; that if a number of men here in Washington, or elsewhere, should combine together to bid off the contracts for letting the mail, they should do it knowing that they assumed the responsibility of performing the contracts which they undertook with the Government to perform; but it appeared to the Department, as it did to this committee, that that would not be feasible, because instead of subletting the whole thing would hereafter be done by employing men to do the work in parts without undertaking, as in an assignment or subletting, to perform the entire work; and therefore the Department, and the committee modifying the Department's amendment, proposed that if they were prohibited from subletting they should not be tempted by that prohibition to work a greater evil and a greater hardship by being entirely relieved of all obligation except their own personal responsibility to pay those whom they had employed to carry the mails. Nobody else can have this lien, and nobody can have this lien who does not furnish satisfactory evidence to the Department of the performance hereafter of service in carrying the mail. It must be a performance hereafter; it must be a performance in and about carrying the very mail for the carrying of which the money is due; and it must be accompanied not only with proof of the fact that it is a performance hereafter, but that it is an actual performance; that is to say, it must satisfy the head of the Department that the party has actually performed the service in carrying this mail for which the money is due.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is not the Department then, according to the Senator's remarks, to act as a court and settle the exact amount of the claim?

Mr. DAWES. And not only must there be a performance but the party is to satisfy the Postmaster-General of the amount of service he has performed; and then what does the Postmaster-General do? He detains this money for sixty days to give the man who has availed himself of this service in the performance of his contract an opportunity himself to discharge his obligation; and then if he fails to perform that obligation toward his employé, the Postmaster-General is then himself to make that payment if the payment has not been made.

Mr. HAWLEY. Certainly.

Mr. DAWES. And he is to determine, a thing which so distresses my friend from Connecticut that he can hardly sit in his chair while I relate the effort of the Postmaster-General himself and of this committee to see to it that one of these mail contractors shall not get his mail carried and at the same time get the money for it into his pocket and let the men who actually carried it whistle.

Mr. President, my friend from Connecticut sees this alarming feature of it, that the Postmaster-General is hereby made a judge. Sir, we have had for ten years the Postmaster-General a judge between the contractor and the sub-contractor for carrying the whole mail under a contract, for the entire sum, and it has worked so healthy an influence that the sub-contractor can now, so far as looking to some security for his pay is concerned, deal as safely with a contractor as he could directly with the Government, and the tendency of the whole has been to enable the Government to get its contracts for carrying the mail at a much lower rate than formerly.

If there may seem to be some difficulty in the administration of this feature, I should feel very thankful to my distinguished friend from Connecticut, as well as to my friend from Ohio, if they would take hold in the interest of the Department or the service, and of him who actually performs it, in perfecting this amendment, rather than spend their entire argument on the side of the contractors. I do not mean to say that is their intention, but their argument, probably unwittingly on their part, is in the interest of those contractors who crowd around the corridors of the two Houses and cry out as well against this provision that comes to us from the other branch; but having already to the knowledge of the committee discovered how they could evade that provision, they are here again to-day decrying this amendment, intended to strengthen and carry out the effort of the other branch to take care that he who carries the mail shall have his pay for carrying it at the rate which he is willing to undertake that service for.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, under the law as it now stands, any citizen has the right to put in a bid for carrying the mail. He puts along with that bid a guaranty and files a certified check for 5 per cent. of the amount of his bid. That being done, he may have his bid considered. Now this amendment does not prevent what the Senator from Massachusetts wants to break up, and what I want to break up, and what ought to be broken up, one man taking a thousand contracts. It does not do it, for just so long as the law reads that the contract is to be let to the lowest bidder and that lowest bidder complies with the terms of the bidding by filing a guaranty satisfactory to the Post-Office Department, and the 5 per cent. certified check, he has a right to bid. What is the result? One man bids off, say a thousand contracts, or five hundred contracts, and then he sublets them.

The trouble that has come to Congress so often in respect to these sub-contractors is not on account of the regulation of the Department, because that is most wise and is in the interest of the sub-contractor. That regulation says, and it has stood for years, what the Senator from Kentucky read, that where the contractor lets out a contract to a sub-contractor and they enter into terms of agreement in writing, and that agreement is filed with the Post-Office Department, it becomes then the duty of the Post-Office Department to withhold an amount of pay from that due to the principal contractor sufficient to meet this sub-contract. The great trouble is that sub-contractors throughout the country do not seem to know, or do not seem to take advantage of, this regulation, the result of which is that they make their contracts with the principal contractor, lock them up in their trunks or desks or put them in their pockets, and go on and do the work, and there being nothing in the Post-Office Department to show that such a contract has been made, the Department pays the money out to the principal contractor; and when you get hold of a scoundrel who is willing to steal from the sub-contractor his hard earnings, he goes to the Department and draws the money, because there is nothing in the Department to show that he has let out the contract to somebody else who has done the work. If every sub-contractor could understand that by filing his contract in the Department he would be protected, as the regulations now are, we should get rid of very much of this trouble.

But, as I said, you cannot by this amendment prevent this ring, as it is called, of contractors around this city, or anywhere else, getting hold of large numbers of contracts. As the law stands to-day, and in fact even with this amendment, you cannot prevent one man taking just as many contracts as he pleases, provided he complies with the terms of the law and as the lowest bidder presents a good and sufficient guarantee for compliance with the terms of the proposal and files his certified check for 5 per cent. of the amount of his bid. When he does that, how are you going to prevent him from bidding? And if he bids, then the law makes the provision which I have stated, or the regulations do under the law, that the sub-contractor can protect himself fully in the manner I have spoken of.

I shall not go over the ground which the Senator from Ohio covered, but I want to point out another matter, and I shall call the special attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to this part of the amendment:

And provided further, That where any person, corporation, or partnership shall have contracts for the performance of mail service upon more than one route, and any failure to perform the service according to contract on any one or more of such routes shall occur, no payment shall be made for service on any of the routes under contract with such person, corporation, or partnership until such failure has been removed and all penalties therefor fully satisfied.

What is that? Here one man gets, as was stated by the Senator from Massachusetts, a thousand contracts. He may have to give a thousand different bonds with that many different securities. It does not follow that the same two men, or three, or half a dozen men go upon each of the bonds. There are different men, or may be, and they have different men upon all these bonds. The bondsmen upon each one of these bonds are responsible, as we ordinarily understand the law, for compliance with the terms of that particular contract and no other. They go upon that man's bond because the contract which he has made furnishes an amount of money sufficient for him to faithfully comply with that contract. Very well. Now, here come out of these thousand contracts two, three, or half a dozen cases in which the mails are not carried, by default of the contractor, the sub-contractor, or some one else; according to the terms of this amendment the pay on every one of all these thousand routes may be stopped. In other words, the effect of it is in law, if it is law, that you make each set of bondsmen guarantors of, and responsible for, every other set of bondsmen.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the Senator from Texas allow me to ask him whether or not that would be in the interest of the sureties on each of the bonds?

Mr. MAXEY. That is a matter of business. I have been on a great many bonds in my life, and I propose when I go upon a bond to stand upon that bond and to be responsible that that contract is carried out, and if two or three or a dozen other contracts are made by that man, for which he has to give bonds, and he fails on one of them, I do not want to be held responsible for that failure. That is exactly the view I take of this.

Mr. COKE. Will my colleague allow me to ask him if this will not be a very efficient mode of breaking up the ring of bidders, who propose to take a large number of contracts without doing the service themselves?

Mr. MAXEY. The suggestion made by my colleague is a good suggestion. It may have the effect of breaking up these rings which take two, four, or five hundred, or a thousand contracts. It may be so, because in my judgment a man would be an absolute idiot who, under such a law, would make himself responsible upon any considerable number of these bonds, when, if there was a failure on one single route, or two or three routes, every dollar which that contractor would be entitled to draw would be instantly stopped, and thus the very means whereby he would be enabled to carry out the contract would be at once taken away from him. That is my view as a proposition of business, but it may have the effect of breaking up these rings, and I hope it will, if this is adopted, for my purpose is, as I stated before, to take every step that can be taken to break them up. If that is the effect of it, I should most heartily accord with and indorse it; but I speak of these things because I want them looked into.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think it is the practice of the Government, where a man has several contracts and violates any one of them, to withhold the pay on all.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator from Texas allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. MAXEY. There is so much confusion that I cannot hear and therefore cannot answer anything intelligently.

Mr. HALE. I only want to say that the Senator from Texas has found the very root of this matter in what he has last said, that the operation of this clause in the appropriation bill will so tend to discourage these combinations of contractors that make the Post-Office a sluice-way for their bids that they will not enter into these contracts. The great object the committee had in view, I am bound to say, was to so discourage these contractors that they would not make these combinations; and it was not deemed on the other side that we were placing such burdens on the Post-Office Department as would make it impossible to do the business. It is a difficult thing to strike the exact mean and discourage such contracts and yet not hamper the Post-Office Department; but we have done the best we could in this provision.

Mr. MAXEY. I beg that the Senator, who is a member of the committee, will understand that I am not criticising the committee at all. My object is to bring out and let it go upon record the object and design and motive of this thing. Now we have it. I agree with the Senator that if it has this effect I most heartily and cordially agree to the amendment. If it does break up these rings, then it will accomplish a grand purpose and will result in good.

Mr. HALE. We cannot tell until we try it.

Mr. MAXEY. I understand that. What the people want, Mr. President, is the efficient carrying of the mail. If the effect of this amendment will be that men will be deterred so that we cannot have an efficient carrying of the mail the effect will be bad; but if on the contrary it breaks up the rings and enables us to secure a healthy bidding all over the country for the carrying of the mail, then it will have a beneficial effect in the interest of all.

The great design which I have so far as the carrying of the mail is concerned is that the people in every portion of this land shall have their mail carried to them. I hold that the man on the extreme portion of the frontier is as much entitled to the benefits of the mail service as the man who lives in the center of the great metropolitan city of New York. That is my view of it; and whatever will accomplish the object had in view, that I want done; and if the purpose of the committee is as stated by the Senator from Maine, then it is a wise purpose, and I trust the object will be accomplished, though I doubt very much if contractors will get bonds under the proposed arrangement.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, so far as this proposition seeks or tends to prevent the wrongs that contractors have been inflicting on the Government, of course I am as heartily for it as anybody. I see that this concluding proviso reads:

And provided further, That where any person, corporation, or partnership shall have contracts for the performance of mail service upon more than one route, and any failure to perform the service according to contract on any one or more of such routes shall occur, no payment shall be made for service on any of the routes under contract with such person, corporation, or partnership until such failure has been removed and all penalties therefor fully satisfied.

That seems to me entirely wise and obviously correct.

Mr. HALE. The Senator will let me say that that is to-day the practice of the Department. It has no law behind it, and it was thought better to put it in the form of law so that the practice which has been for years in the Department should have that sanction.

Mr. HAWLEY. In the remarks that I made before I had no reference whatever to that proviso. I did not suppose anybody disputed that. All the criticisms that had been made were made on the first clause or paragraph of the proviso, and my friend from Massachusetts need not manifest any anxiety concerning my anxiety. He knows that my anxiety is not in behalf of any special interest of contractors.

Mr. DAWES. I did not say any such thing.

Mr. HAWLEY. I thought the Senator seemed to say I was especially anxious for the interests of contractors, with the sarcasm that so well becomes him.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, knowing the Senator so well, I know he would not consciously do any injustice.

Mr. HAWLEY. I thank the Senator for the word "consciously;" it is so gracious. I do not accept any explanation of that sort. I am not speaking for the contractors, consciously or unconsciously.

Mr. DAWES. I think I have said nothing offensive to my friend from Connecticut. The singularity of the position he has taken in his remarks is that the Senator is doing what these very contractors importuned the committee to do. I know the Senator would not wittingly serve them, because I think his community and mine have experienced this evil. What I meant to say and all I meant to say was that the purpose of the committee was to discourage this thing.

Mr. HAWLEY. What thing, please?

Mr. DAWES. The matter of one contractor bidding off a thousand contracts and compelling local agents to do the work and then letting them get their pay as they could.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have made no criticism upon the last portion of the amendment; neither has that been the subject of my remarks, directly or indirectly.

Now, if the Senator will pardon me, I will state my point again. Perhaps I have not made myself understood. I should like to have him answer this supposed case, substantially the one I offered before: Mr. Driver, plaintiff, files a lien in the Post-Office Department for $300 alleged to be due him as driver. What is the course provided by this amendment? The Postmaster-General is to inquire into it. It may be a driver in Oregon; his claim may have been two weeks in getting here, and it may take two weeks to get back. The Postmaster-General has but a short time to inquire into the justice of that claim. He arrives at a conclusion without summoning the contractor, or perhaps without hearing from the contractor or having an affidavit apiece, which contradict one another like the pleadings in court. He makes up his mind that $300 is actually due to the driver, and at the end of sixty days under this provision, if he avails himself of the provision, the Postmaster-General sends on the $300 to Mr. Driver. In the mean time the driver has taken that course which he ought to have taken in the first place, and which affords in general to every citizen an abundant remedy; he has brought suit against the contractor in his own State courts; and if it is in my State he has a right of attachment on the horses, carriages, stables, and everything else belonging to the contractor. The Postmaster-General has sent on the $300 to the driver, the driver having in the mean time commenced his suit in the State courts. Now we will suppose there is only $50 really due. The driver goes to the State court and says: "I have got my $300; I withdraw the suit." The Government has paid the $300 over, and it says to the contractor, "We did it under the statute, and we are not going to give it to you." The contractor is $250 out. Tell me where is his remedy; and do you say to me that there is anything in all the liens under State governments that approximates the ridiculousness of such a provision?

I am only astounded and part of my anxiety was that the Senator from Massachusetts, eminent at the bar, should now make himself ridiculous by the most monstrous provision, so far as legal ingenuity is concerned, that I have ever seen put in an appropriation bill.

Mr. DAWES. Allow me to express my regret that the Committee on Appropriations could not have had the benefit of the Senator's information.

Mr. HAWLEY. So do I.

Mr. DAWES. The Committee on Appropriations made an honest effort to try to discourage an evil which everybody but the Senator from Connecticut has expressed a desire to suppress. The Senator from Connecticut will take notice of the phraseology of this clause, I hope, before he comments again upon it. Before his driver out in Oregon gets a lien on this money, he has got to satisfy and bring satisfactory evidence beforehand of three things: first, of what his contract is; second, that he has performed it; and third, that he has not had his pay. Then the contractor is notified that if he does not pay in sixty days this money will be detained. That is all there is to it.

Mr. HAWLEY. The decision then is to be made on the first day of the sixty days for the notice. The decision of the exact amount due is to be made the first day, because you say he will then have sixty days to pay it in. That is not the law.

Mr. DAWES. Unless that does have the effect, which the Senator from Texas thinks it is worth while for us to make an effort to produce on the contractor, it ought not to pass, and the provision put in by the other branch, which was aimed at this evil, should be left just as the contractors in this city have publicly announced that they desire to have it left, so that, instead of sub-contracting (using that term) hereafter, they can simply employ people to perform in part their contract, and then those who are employed will be without remedy, and they will not only be relieved of that responsibility but all the responsibility of the existing law which imposes the duty that so harrows up my friend from Connecticut—all that duty which is now imposed on the Department to make precisely the same determination between the contractor and the sub-contractor that the committee thought it possible to determine between a contractor and anybody who performed a portion of the service, as well as a sub-contractor who had agreed to take it off the hands of the contractor. It is only extending a practice now imposed by law and working a beneficent result as between contractor and sub-contractor until the contractor discovered a way by which to circumvent that provision. The House honestly made an effort to reach that evil, and it was not until the bill passed from the House and the contractor himself let out the method by which he could circumvent this provision that this effort was made.

The Committee on Appropriations have no feeling about it. They do not speak in any other interest than that of the public, and that perhaps is the reason they have no feeling about it.

I will not argue it any further. If there are serious objections to it the Committee on Appropriations would dislike as much as anybody to have it adopted. They tell the Senate frankly what their purpose is and what their effort is, and unless some other objection than that suggested by the Senator from Connecticut shall be raised against it, I am afraid whatever may be the decision of the Senate his effort to convince me will fail.

Mr. HAWLEY. Just a word or two in reply to that. The Senator made a remark that I did not quite understand. I may have spoken with some little warmth here because of his beginning with some sarcastic reference to myself. He says I did exhibit a little warmth. I confess it. He says then that the Committee on Appropriations has no feeling in this matter, perhaps because they have no interest in the matter. There is a little covert attack possibly at a Senator in that. I am not quite sure of it.

Mr. DAWES. Why, Mr. President, how many times does the Senator want that I should disclaim?

Mr. HAWLEY. As many times as the Senator repeats the offense.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, the Senator need not trouble himself about extorting from me any apology when I am conscious of having given no offense. There is nobody who will more readily apologize than myself. I have stated that I never harbored the thought that the Senator from Connecticut was consciously doing that which these contractors wanted done; but I did say, and I say it with the utmost frankness, and repeat it, that the contractors want all these provisions stricken out.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President I had one suggestion more to make besides that personal one. The Senator from Massachusetts says that the Post-Office Department has hitherto been acting in a judicial capacity upon the contracts and the relative rights and obligations of contractors and sub-contractors. That is inevitable and that is just, because both parties have contracts with the Government. If the sub-contractor has not one directly, it becomes such on his filing it, and the Department is compelled to act as a judge in those matters. Those are its own contracts, those are its own relations, all in writing also; but this proviso everybody must see goes to a great variety of contracts and obligations, unwritten contracts possibly, obligations that the contractor has, whether for shoeing a horse or paying the toll over a ferry and not a debt, because it is not a debt until it has been passed upon fairly—at least not a debt in the language of the law as we are talking here. This claim which may be tenfold or may be double the rightful sum is to be filed here, to be passed upon within sixty days by the Department that has thousands of such cases all over the country to be passed upon. It is to be paid to the inevitable injury, and the irrevocable injury so far as I can see, of the contractor.

I did not know that the contractors had ever noticed this or had ever heard of it; I did not see it myself till this very afternoon; neither do I care whether the party affected be a contractor or a blacksmith or a toll-collector; I am only anxious to have the law a reasonable law, and I am perfectly willing to take this amendment and go to any half dozen gentlemen of judicial experience in this body or out of this body and have a quiet argument over it and consider if it be a reasonable provision. I may be altogether mistaken, but I have certainly heard some of the best authorities speak of it as I have spoken of it.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut has called the attention of the Senate to certain difficulties arising under this amendment in the Post-Office Department, and they are difficulties which I can see as plainly as he can see. There must be difficulties in the operation and administration of this amendment; but let me call his attention, using his illustration of the driver in Oregon or California who has a service to the extent of $300, and he has pictured the trouble and the inconvenience that will arise in the Department when that party performing service in driving the mail-wagon comes into the Department and claims his lien. Undoubtedly there would be trouble; but let me call his attention to the operation of this amendment before that case arises.

It is true in medicine that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, and it is just as true in legislation. Pass the amendment and let the world know it, and let all this combination of contractors know it, and in the first place, as I have said, it will discourage bidding and combination. But suppose it should not fully have that effect; suppose a contractor under this section and this amendment makes his contract with the Department, how careful he will be in making his trades, in hiring his drivers, in making contracts for his supplies, because his line of action is marked out before him, and if he is not scrupulously and religiously careful and over-careful in everything that he does, he knows that his way through the Post-Office Department is beset with traps and pitfalls, and he will look to it that no driver shall come in and file his lien for his $300 or $500 or whatever it may be. The result will be that, while there will be here and there cases for the Department's investigation, cases for the Department's construction and determination under the amendment every contractor will have to travel to the line and the plummet in such a way that the Department will have less to be called upon to determine than it has to-day; and that is a great feature in favor of the amendment. I think the Senator from Connecticut will see something of that as I see it.

Mr. PLUMB. I will ask unanimous consent to amend the amendment of the committee in accordance with what was the intention of the committee. There has been a little misplacement of the language. I move to strike out in line 93 the three first words, "satisfactory evidence of," and to insert those words between "and" and "of" at the end of the line; so as to read:

He shall, upon filing in the Department his contract for such service and satisfactory evidence of its performance, &c.

I agree entirely with what the Senator from Maine has so well said. The operation of this will not be to embarrass the Department at all, but the contractors by reason of the stringency of these provisions will adjust their own matters just as under the lien laws of the several States. Now it is the rarest thing in the world that a lien is ever filed. A man who makes a contract to build a house knows that every man who labors for him has a lien on the house for his wages; every material man knows that he has a lien also; yet I venture to say that within the experience of all the lawyers on this floor less litigation involving the filing of liens or any controversy about wages or materials for building arises than upon almost any other subject. The right is there; there is absolute protection there, and the knowledge of that on the part of the laborer and on the part of the contractor puts stress upon them to adjust their matters without resorting to the law. We believe that will be the effect on this case, and so far as the Department is concerned we have the word of the head and his subordinates that they do not anticipate any difficulty or any embarrassment or any addition to the machinery by which the relations of the Government with the contractors and sub-contractors are adjusted now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] to the amendment of the committee, after the word "service," in line 91, to insert "under a written agreement."

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BECK. Will not the Senator allow a vote to be taken on this amendment first?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I have no objection to that, but I thought it would be better to leave that pending.

Mr. PLUMB. I think we can have a vote now on this amendment.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Very well; I withdraw the motion for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PLUMB. I think the Senator from Kentucky will withdraw that amendment, inasmuch as the effect of it has been anticipated by the amendment I have suggested on behalf of the committee. An amendment has been made to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. BECK. I withdraw my proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as amended.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have it read as it stands.

Mr. PLUMB. The amendment to the amendment was in line 93 to strike out the words "satisfactory evidence of," and to put them in between "and" and "of" at the close of the line.

Mr. HAWLEY. That presupposes a written contract, and its being filed, and evidence of its fulfillment. It makes the proviso much more reasonable, though I think it still open to serious objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it would be better to require it to be in writing.

Mr. PLUMB. It is in writing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The attention of the Chair is called by the Secretary to the fact that the amendment leaves one too many "ofs" in.

Mr. ALLISON. Strike one out.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The proposed correction is, in line 93, after the word "evidence," to strike out "of."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This correction will be made if there be no objection. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out lines 115 and 116, as follows: "For necessary and special mail facilities on trunk lines, $500,000;" and in lieu thereof to insert:

For necessary and special facilities on railroad lines, $650,000; said facilities to be ratably distributed, as near as may be, on railroad lines leading to and from the principal cities in the different sections of the United States.

Mr. PLUMB. I now yield to the Senator from New York, but before doing so I give notice that to-morrow immediately on the close of the morning hour I will move to lay aside the then existing order for the purpose of continuing the consideration of this bill.

Mr. MAXEY. The amendment just read to be first in order.

Mr. PLUMB. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will lay before the Senate a House bill for reference before putting the question on that motion.

DAKOTA LAND DISTRICTS.

The bill (H. R. No. 4698) to create two additional land districts and to change the boundaries of the Watertown land district, in the Territory of Dakota, was read twice by its title.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask the Senate to take action upon that bill without referring it to a committee. It is a bill coming from the House. The Senate Committee on Public Lands has reported a bill identical in terms, and it is now upon the Calendar, reported favorably by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MCDILL] from the committee, and he assents to the motion I now make that the House bill be passed and the Senate bill indefinitely postponed.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I did not yield for that. I am willing to let the bill lie on the table to be called up to-morrow, but my motion has precedence.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Very well, then; I ask unanimous consent that that be done. It will save time.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Let the bill lie on the table. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will lie on the table.

Mr. MCMILLAN. With the understanding that it be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. It will lie on the table until called up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. No. 22) to provide for the appointment of a commission to investigate the question of the tariff and internal-revenue laws. The Senator from New York moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and nineteen minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened; and (at five o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 15, 1882.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The SPEAKER. The Journal of the proceedings of Monday last and also of yesterday will be read.

The Journal was read and approved.

LAND DISTRICTS IN DAKOTA.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4698) to create two additional land districts and to change the boundaries of the Watertown land district, in the Territory of Dakota, and that the same be now considered and passed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all that part of the Territory of Dakota bounded as follows, to-wit: Commencing at the southeast corner of township 109 north, range 59 west of the fifth principal meridian; thence west along the second standard parallel north to the Missouri River; thence up and along the east bank of said river to a point where the fifth standard parallel north intersects said river; thence east along said standard parallel north to the northwest corner of township 120 north, range 59 west; thence south to the southwest corner of township 113 north, range 59 west; thence east to the southeast corner of said township; thence south to the place of beginning, &c. and the same is hereby, constituted a new land district, the office of which shall be located at such place as shall be designated by the President of the United States.

SEC. 2. That all that part of the Territory of Dakota bounded as follows, to wit: Commencing at the northwest corner of township 120 north, range 59 west of the fifth principal meridian; thence west along the fifth standard parallel north to the Missouri River; thence up and along the east bank of said river to the south line of township 130 north; thence east along said line to the northeast corner of township 129 north, range 59 west; thence south to the southeast corner of township 129 north, range 59 west; thence east along the seventh standard parallel north to the northwest corner of township 128 north, range 59 west; thence south to the place of beginning, be, and the same is hereby, constituted a new land district, the office of which shall be located at such place as shall be designated by the President of the United States.

SEC. 3. That all that part of the Territory of Dakota bounded as follows, to wit: Commencing at a point where the second standard parallel north of the fifth principal meridian intersects the eastern boundary of said Territory; thence west along said parallel to the southeast corner of township 109 north, range 59 west; thence north to the northeast corner of township 112 north, range 59 west; thence west along the third standard parallel north to the eighth guide meridian; thence north along said guide meridian to the northwest corner of township 128 north, range 59 west; thence west along the seventh standard parallel north to the southeast corner of township 129 north, range 59 west; thence north to the southeast corner of township 130 north, range 59 west; thence east to the eastern boundary line of the Territory of Dakota; thence southerly on said boundary line to the place of beginning, shall constitute the limits of the Watertown land district.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before this bill is considered I wish to inquire whether the creation of these new land districts in the Territory of Dakota is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. STRAIT. I can answer the gentleman. It is; and the bill is the unanimous report of the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the bill; which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VALENTINE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEVEE AT ALEXANDRIA, LOUISIANA.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask, by unanimous consent, to present the memorial of the mayor and council of the town of Alexandria, in the State of Louisiana, asking for an appropriation of public moneys to protect the river front of that town by the construction of a permanent levee, and to move that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and by unanimous consent printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is ordered accordingly.

The memorial is as follows:

To the honorable the Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives of the United States:

The memorial of the mayor and council of the town of Alexandria, in the parish of Rapides, and State of Louisiana, on the behalf of the inhabitants thereof, respectfully prays leave to supplement the petition heretofore made for an appropriation of public moneys to protect the river front of this town, now under consideration of one of the committees of your honorable body.

The memorialists represent that Red River is above its bank at this moment, and an inundation of this town and the country surrounding is prevented only by a temporary levee hastily thrown up. Formerly there was a levee along the outer edge of Front street, and Front street extended to the Bayou Rapides, and outside of the levee there were some houses and considerable ground. All of the ground and houses outside of the levee have been washed away save a single house, with the ground on which it stands. More than that—Front street above Fisk street, and more than half of the squares above it, that were formerly between Front and Second streets, have caved in. The survey of 1879, in possession of your committee, will show what is left of these squares.

Experience has demonstrated that the bank of the river caves in after every flood. Upon the subsidence of the water large masses of earth are detached and fall in. This will take place again so soon as the present flood passes away. The immediate front of such portions of the upper squares as remain must be lost, and so large a part of Front street will cave as to leave but a passage scarcely more than fifty or sixty feet between the banquette and the river bank. These losses are now inevitable, but we cannot afford to lose any more.

The encroachments of the river since the Bailey dam was built have been more formidable and more rapid than before, and unless the river front is protected after the present danger has passed, and before another flood, the abrasion of the bank will be so great as to destroy Front street as a thoroughfare. The Bailey dam was constructed to save the United States fleet from capture or destruction. Admiral Porter had taken his vessels above the falls in support of General Banks's army in the spring of 1864. The river fell, and the fleet was caught as in a trap. Its loss was averted by building the dam across the lower falls. That dam saved the United States Navy from a disaster, but it has entailed great disaster upon us.

The engineers report estimates for a revetment to protect our front, and also for other works to improve the navigation of Red River. We are solicitous that both shall be done. Both are needed. But we humbly suggest if the first is not done now irreparable loss will be sustained, and if either is to be postponed, we pray it shall not be that work which most presses for immediate execution, and which alone can protect our town from the incursions of the river, which never retires without carrying for booty large slices of valuable lots, parts of streets, and sometimes houses.

Your memorialists pray an appropriation of the sum estimated for the protection of our river front, and the speedy execution of the work.

MARCH 7, 1882.

WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Speaker, I ask, by unanimous consent, to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3869) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department, in order that it may be put upon its passage at this time. I will only say there is no general legislation in the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object.

Mr. HOUK. I hope the gentleman will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes; I object.

The SPEAKER. It is usual for this bill to be passed in the way proposed, as it simply carries out the findings of the accounting officers of the Treasury Department.

Mr. McMILLIN. This is the course it takes every year.

Mr. HOUK. It has always taken this course, and I hope my friend from Illinois will withdraw his objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will withdraw my objection, as it seems to be an omnibus bill in which everybody has an interest except my constituents.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I hope the nature of the bill will be explained if the gentleman withdraws his objection.

Mr. HOUK. Under the act of July 4, 1864, loyal persons living in the loyal States, and also in the State of Tennessee, and in two or three counties of the State of Virginia, were authorized to file their claims in the Quartermaster-General's Office. The claims so filed are acted on by the Quartermaster-General, and in doing so he sends to the various neighborhoods where the claims originated to investigate their justice and correctness, as well as the loyalty of the claimant himself. After this investigation has been had through the machinery of the Quartermaster-General's Office, the Quartermaster-General then makes his award to the Comptroller and the other accounting officers of the Treasury. The action of the Treasury Department is then sent through the Secretary of the Treasury to this House, and is referred to the Committee on War Claims. It has been the practice for that committee to report back to the House a bill carefully prepared making the necessary appropriation to meet the awards rendered by the Quartermaster-General and the accounting officers of the Treasury.

This bill, I will add, Mr. Speaker, contains nothing more than the necessary appropriations to carry out the judgment of the Quartermaster-General and the accounting officers of the Treasury. Not one dollar is appropriated which has not been allowed by those accounting officers.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Has the Committee on War Claims made any investigation of the justice of these claims?

Mr. HOUK. Yes, sir; the Committee on War Claims, under the supervision of its chairman, and by the assistance of the clerk of that committee, together with the help of a clerk from the Treasury Department sent specially to assist in that investigation and adjustment of these matters, has carefully gone through them to see whether there were any mistakes and to prepare the bill carefully, so that it should not provide for anything else but the allowances made by the accounting officers of the Treasury.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Is it reported by unanimous consent?

Mr. HOUK. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPRINGER. Did the committee examine any of the evidence on which these claims were allowed?

Mr. HOUK. We ran through the evidence casually to get the names and amount, and, in some instances, to verify the loyalty of a claimant when there was any doubt, but as a rule we acted on the adjudication of the Quartermaster-General and the accounting officers of the Treasury. We did not enlarge or cut down any of them, but took the adjudication made by the War and Treasury Departments.

Mr. SPRINGER. When were these claims contracted?

Mr. HOUK. They were contracted during the war, about the close of it; but most of them, however, were only filed and acted upon by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department recently.

Mr. McMILLIN. Some of them were filed years ago.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am opposed to paying any claim which accrued during the war on the finding of any of the Executive Departments. I think claims which have accrued in that way should have been presented within a reasonable time. To have claims presented and sent to the several Departments and adjudicated and allowed sixteen or eighteen years after the war, to my mind, is a faulty practice, and ought to be corrected. I hope, therefore, this bill will be defeated, and all such claims referred to the Court of Claims.

Mr. McMILLIN. It was the fault of the Government itself they were not filed sooner.

Mr. SPRINGER. I know the Government has been at fault. I hope this bill will be defeated, and all claims of a similar character, if we are to pay them, referred where they can be investigated on evidence proper to be considered in a court of justice.

Mr. HOUK. They have been investigated and adjudicated under a law of Congress. The Court of Claims has no jurisdiction. They have been adjudicated and awards made under the act of July 4, 1864, which gives jurisdiction to the Quartermaster-General and accounting officers of the Treasury Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. With the consent of the chairman of the Committee on War Claims I wish to say to the gentleman from Illinois that he misapprehends this bill. The claims embraced in this bill are reported to the House of Representatives under the provisions of the act of July 4, 1864, entitled "An act to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermaster stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States." Under that act claims in behalf of loyal citizens of States that were not in rebellion for stores and supplies furnished to the Army were permitted to be filed with the Quartermaster-General or Commissary-General for adjustment. These officers make their reports under the law to the Third Auditor of the Treasury, and these claims, after they have been finally approved and audited by that officer and by the Second Comptroller, are reported to Congress as audited accounts for appropriation. Until 1874, if I remember rightly, these claims thus audited were paid directly out of the appropriation for the Army, but since 1874 the Treasury Department reports them to Congress annually at the commencement of each session for appropriation. They stand under the law on the same footing as judgments of the Court of Claims, and Congress has, under the act of July 4, 1864, annually passed a bill to pay such audited claims as are contemplated by the pending bill, and while that law remains in force this course would seem to be inevitable.

The gentleman from Illinois will remember under that law as originally enacted only loyal citizens of States not in rebellion were permitted to file claims for property and stores, horses and the like, applied to the use of the Army, and under the law no claim could be filed after the 1st day of January, 1880, so that all such claims not filed prior to January 1, 1880, are forever barred. The bill embraces claims from Maryland, Kentucky, Kansas, Missouri, Tennessee, Indiana, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and many other States.

The gentleman from Illinois must see that while this act of July 4, 1864, remains in force the claims audited and settled by the accounting officers of the Treasury will require appropriations. Under the law these are not properly war claims, but claims for supplies appropriated to the use of the Army, for which vouchers were generally but not always given, as I understand the great body of them are for comparatively small amounts. Whether the law shall be repealed is a different question.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, in the ten minutes allowed me I shall hardly be able to do this subject the justice its merits demand. I regret that my friend from Illinois has departed from his usual accuracy so far as to question the propriety of the passage of this bill for the payment of these claims. As has been stated by my colleague [Mr. HOUK] and the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] these are claims of loyal citizens in the several States embraced in this bill. They have been passed upon by the Quartermaster-General, who is authorized under the law of Congress to investigate them, and under the statute he has to certify not only that the property was taken and used for the benefit of the Government but that it was taken from a citizen who was loyal to the Government during the war.

Again, under the law these claims have to be filed within a limited time, and that time having expired the claims would now be barred and the claimants left without remedy. But they were filed according to the law; they were considered by the Quartermaster-General; they were reported upon favorably by him to the Third Auditor of the Treasury, and to stop short now and refuse to pay them, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, would simply be for the Government of the United States to say we will delay action upon the claims for years and then take advantage of our own wrong and refuse to pay them on account of that delay. Such action would be a refusal to pay, because you have the power to do it.

Mr. Speaker, this Government, with its immense wealth and resources and boasted honor, cannot afford to refuse to pay its citizens when property has been taken from them for public uses. A more just, a more meritorious class of claims than that presented here can scarcely be conceived.

Again, the gentleman from Illinois seems to have forgotten that not only are these valid claims and honorable obligations, but he seems to have forgotten that every Congress for the last six or eight years has passed similar appropriations. The Democratic party passed a similar bill when they had a large majority in the House. They passed a bill of this kind in the last Congress, and never since the passage of the original law has any Congress, Republican or Democratic, refused to appropriate for their payment. Nor will any ever refuse as long as the Government has a proper sense of its obligation to its citizens.

Now, I will add still further, by way of quieting the fears of my friend from Illinois, that after Congress has made this appropriation the money cannot be drawn from the Treasury until further action is taken on the part of the proper officers of the Government. They go to one of the Auditors of the Treasury, and from him to a second officer, and a third, and it is made the duty of each of them to examine the appropriation made, to compare it with the cases acted upon by the Quartermaster-General and Third Auditor, and by them submitted to Congress. Then the warrants are issued, if it is found there is no error, so that there is not the ghost of a chance that any injury can follow to the Government from the adoption of this bill. If any claim not recommended by the Quartermaster-General were to be inserted, it would be rejected promptly upon discovery.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to enter my solemn protest now and here against the flagrant injustice done this class of the Government's creditors. What have they done to forfeit their right to pay for the property which the officers of the Government took from them to sustain the life of its armies? That they maintained their loyalty the proof in the cases clearly shows. That the Government used the property in support of the Army no member on this floor is rash enough to deny. That the most of them sorely need all that is due them any one will admit who has seen them in their destitution. Then why refuse to pay them? Why be niggardly about a few thousands to them when you are requiring them to assist in paying millions to others? The Government took for its support their corn, their hay, their horses, their cattle, and their meat. For eighteen long years they have been required to wait. Some have died out of the claims, and others been born into a right to them, so long have we kept them waiting. Even now we do not give them one dollar of interest, to compensate for this unconscionable and inexcusable delay. Hundreds and thousands have been and are being rejected that are as meritorious as a citizen could conceive or a government contract. Yet, when after eighteen years one out of every three gets in here for an appropriation, a clamor is raised against it as if it had been conceived in sin and brought forth in iniquity.

Mr. Speaker, it is high time we were paying these little debts that have been outstanding for nearly twenty years. Suppose that we were to refuse to pay the bondholders interest for half or one-tenth as long as we have refused to pay the old men, the widows, and children provided for in this bill, what would be the consequence? A terrific howl would be raised; the air would be filled with complaints, and the corridors of this Capitol would swarm with lobbyists clamoring for Congress to make an appropriation to meet the Government's interest in gold and silver; but, alas! the situation is different. These claimants are not the owners of bonds nor possessors of millions. For them no lobbyist wends his way to the Capitol of the great Republic; for them no syndicate of common interests is formed. In their humble homes, made drear by the ravages of war, they have waited and now wait the good pleasure of the great Government. Too many of them have already heard and too many of them will hear that their waiting was vain and their hoping foundationless.

Mr. Speaker, I hope this Congress will not close without making an appropriation large enough to have the work done in the claims now pending before the Quartermaster-General. Let every one of them that is just be allowed. Then let Congress make a sufficient appropriation to meet them. Let it not be truly said that we will allow an old man or an aged widow whom we owe $150 to starve while we have $150,000,000 lying idle in the Treasury. The Constitution provides, article 5, "Nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation." Whatever else we do, let us not violate the least clause of that sacred instrument.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Speaker, I now feel it my duty to move the previous question upon the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I wish to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee, the chairman of the Committee on War Claims, has the floor.

Mr. SPRINGER. I insist that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] has not yet yielded the floor; and as the gentleman has stated that I have departed from my usual accuracy, I want to ask him a question in that connection.

Mr. HOUK. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. McMILLIN. I understand the gentleman from Illinois wishes to ask me a question.

Mr. SPRINGER. I find this bill contains one hundred and eighteen printed pages, seventy-three pages of which are devoted to the payment of claims in the State of Tennessee, and forty-five to the payment of claims in the other States. Now, instead of this being called a bill to pay claims reported from the accounting officers of the Treasury, it should be called a bill to pay claims arising in the State of Tennessee.

Mr. DIBRELL. Because the State of Tennessee had the Army quartered there upon her citizens for two years.

Mr. SPRINGER. And as I understand from the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that this bill contemplates the payment of claims originating in loyal States——

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me say to the gentleman——

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman is rather late in coming to his interrogation point. What is the question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, in view of the facts stated by the gentleman from Indiana, I wish to know why it is that more is allowed in this bill to the State of Tennessee, which was not a loyal State, than to all the other States put together?

Mr. McMILLIN. Because, I suppose, there was more property taken from the loyal citizens of that State for the use of the Army, and allowed under the acts of Congress passed by a Republican Congress and acted upon by a Democratic Congress, that must be paid for. That is all there is of it.

Mr. HOUK. I desire to call the gentleman's attention——

Mr. McMILLIN. Allow me a moment more. I will state further for the information of the gentleman from Illinois that a similar bill to this went before the Committee on War Claims during the last Congress; and my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] as chairman of that committee—and permit me to say in this connection that even his enemies would not charge him with want of diligence—reported favorably upon that bill. It was taken up by unanimous consent; I had the honor of being in charge of it at the time, and it was passed as we propose to pass this bill. And the statement of the gentleman from Illinois, that the majority of the cases reported in this bill are due to loyal citizens of Tennessee, makes not one iota of difference. If the claims are just they should be paid, no matter where they come from.

Mr. HOLMAN rose.

Mr. HOUK. I will yield in a moment to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.] But I desire now to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that there are two reasons for Tennessee having more claims than any other one State. In the first place, Tennessee had more property taken and had more loyal people than other border States. Further, for a long time these claims lay in the Quartermaster-General's office uninvestigated. Finally, partly on my own application and partly on the application of other members of Congress, a number of agents were sent into Tennessee. Through our united efforts we succeeded in having seventeen quartermaster's agents sent there to investigate the claims and wind up the business. After the freest and fullest investigation these claims have been allowed under the law as it now exists on the statute books of the country.

I now yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.]

Mr. HUTCHINS rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is recognized.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is correct in saying I stated that these claims, under the act of July 4, 1864, were only permitted to be filed from the States not in rebellion, for such was the provision of the original act. He is also correct in his other statement that a large portion of these claims came from the State of Tennessee. But after the enactment of the act of 4th July, 1864, and after the termination of the war, I think in 1866, the provisions of the act of 4th July, 1864, were extended to the State of Tennessee, and also to certain counties of West Virginia.

The act of 1864 has been amended from time to time up to the Forty-fifth Congress, and its provisions have been extended so as to permit the filing of claims up to the 1st January, 1880, and then the limitation was made imperative that no claim filed after that time should be allowed. It is therefore now a little late, let me submit to the gentleman, to raise this question as to the propriety or impropriety of the passage of this bill.

These claims, by the very terms of the law of 1864 and the various amendatory acts, come to Congress simply for appropriations of money to pay them. The accounts are settled and audited by the Treasury in behalf of loyal citizens of the States not in rebellion, but including the State of Tennessee and certain portions of West Virginia. While that law remains in force, and the Treasury Department is permitted to audit, settle, and adjust these claims, it follows as a matter of course that Congress must make provision for them. The examination of these claims by the three officers, the Quartermaster-General, the Third Auditor, and Second Comptroller of the Treasury, is some guarantee against the allowance of fraudulent claims. Just claims of loyal citizens are alone entitled to payment.

These claims have been in progress of adjustment, as I have said, ever since 1864, and every year since 1874 a bill of this character has been passed appropriating the sums necessary for their payment; and before that time payment was made by general appropriation for the support of the Army. If these appropriations should not be made, the law itself authorizing their settlement should be repealed. But my friend does not propose to repeal the law. I will go as far as he can think of going in protecting the Treasury against the payment of what are properly called war claims, or of any other unjust claims against the Government; but claims which have been provided for by law, a law still remaining upon the statute-book, and which the officers of the Government are authorized to adjust and allow, are of such a character that they stand on the footing of audited accounts, and their liquidation, according to the practice of the Government, is inevitable, unless their settlement by the public officers is found to be erroneous or fraudulent.

I will say further, that I believe every year since this report has been required to be made to Congress the Committee on War Claims has made such examination of the claims reported as was practicable, and then upon the report of that committee the bill for their payment has passed the House, and this course is perhaps inevitable while this act of 1864 remains in force. These claims thus audited are of a very different character, and stand on a very different footing, than the great body of claims pending before the committees of the House, which rest exclusively on ex parte affidavits, and are unquestionably in the main without merit or foundation.

Mr. SPRINGER rose.

Mr. HOUK. I yield two minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. UPDEGRAFF,] after which I propose to yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] and two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS,] and I shall then move the previous question.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I find that it is provided in Rule XIV of the House, subdivision 6, that—

> No member shall speak more than once to the same question without leave of the House unless he be the mover, proposer, or introducer of the matter pending——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York will state his point of order.

Mr. HUTCHINS. The point of order is this——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is out of order in debating a question before he states it.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I had the floor and the Speaker took it from me and gave it to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] when he had already spoken twice on this question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York will state his point of order.

Mr. HUTCHINS. The point of order is, that I had the floor, and the Speaker then recognized the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] who had already spoken once on the question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUTCHINS] did not have the floor, except as he usurped it. The gentleman was not recognized as entitled to the floor, and the rule he now cites has no possible application to the matter under consideration. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK] in charge of the bill was recognized for one hour, and he yielded the floor to whomever he pleased, but he yielded no part of that time to the gentleman from New York, and the gentleman from New York under no rule of the House is entitled to the floor against the gentleman having charge of the bill.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I desire to know——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I am on the floor to ask a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is out of order and will take his seat.

Mr. HUTCHINS. All right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee yields for two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Iowa. I want the House to understand precisely what it is asked to do with respect to this bill. The bill provides for an appropriation of $291,000 for the payment of some thirteen hundred claims. Those claims have been audited by the Quartermaster-General under the act of July 4, 1864, and were sent to the War Claims Committee of this House. The War Claims Committee of this House know nothing about these claims beyond the fact I have stated. The War Claims Committee give no sanction whatever to these claims. That committee found these thirteen hundred and odd claims in eight or ten huge sacks of papers—claims that had been adjudicated by the Quartermaster-General.

There were but two or three things which the committee could do; one was to report a bill making appropriations to pay these claims; another was to report these claims unfavorably; and the other was to examine the claims, which it was physically impossible for them to do. Therefore they have reported this bill to the House without giving it any sanction whatever.

That is the situation exactly. I do not myself know what to do with respect to this bill. I do not like to vote for it; I do not like to vote against it, because I do not know what was contained in those eight or ten huge sacks of papers. The adjudication of these claims may have been all right, and it may not have been.

The SPEAKER. The time yielded to the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MILLER. It strikes me that this House ought to know what it is doing before it votes away $291,000.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK] yields two minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. WHITE.]

Mr. WHITE. If gentlemen will read the opening paragraph of this bill they will see that we are compelled to pass the bill if we would be at all fair. The bill says:

> That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the several persons in this act named, the several sums mentioned herein, the same being in full for, and the receipt of the same to be taken and accepted in each case as a full and final discharge of, the several claims examined and allowed by the proper accounting officers under the provisions of the act of July 4, 1864, since December, 1880, namely.

And then the different claims are specified with the several amounts awarded. Article 5 of the amendments to the Constitution provides that "private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation."

These are not war claims. These are small claims of a certain class which have been examined by the Quartermaster's Department and the Subsistence Department, and re-examined by the officers of the Treasury, and by them allowed under the act of 1864. We are compelled either to pass this bill, or to repeal the law under which these claims have been allowed.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK] now yields two minutes to his colleague, [Mr. ATKINS.]

Mr. ATKINS. A single word or so. I came into the Hall just as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] arose to address the House, and I indorse every word he has said on this subject.

A bill like this has come before the American Congress annually since 1865, and has been passed every year without a single exception. I remember that last year a similar bill went to the Committee on War Claims under the supervision of its chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. BRAGG,] and there was stricken from the bill but one single allowance that was made by the Quartermaster's and Commissary's Departments and by the Third Auditor of the Treasury.

As a matter of course it is the duty of the Committee on War Claims to investigate the claims contained in this bill, and I have no doubt they have done so, or it would not have been reported to the House. These claims have been examined by the Quartermaster's and Commissary's Departments and by them been sent to the Third Auditor for re-examination. There is no doubt about the correctness of this bill.

As the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] says, if Congress is not going to make an appropriation to pay these claims thus awarded, then let them repeal the law under which this bill has been annually passed. It would be a great outrage not to pass this bill, because these parties have presented their claims; the claims have passed all the different ordeals; the Commissary-General, the Quartermaster-General, and the Third Auditor have passed upon the claims and made these awards. I hope the bill will be passed without objection.

Mr. HOUK. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT.]

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman who has just taken his seat has rightly stated that this class of claims, instead of being like most of those on our calendars, and which give us so much trouble, have been examined by the proper officers of the Treasury. That is the usage in regard to these claims. The examination is made there, and the findings are sent to this House for our action.

That has been the course of proceeding ever since I have been a member of the House. The first knowledge I had of a bill of this character was a struggle which took place in this House as to whether the amount should be placed in an appropriation bill or the subject should be referred to the Committee on War Claims. It was contended by many gentlemen that these claims having been audited and allowed the appropriation for their payment should go directly into the deficiency bill. But the House referred the subject to the Committee on War Claims. The bill was reported back by Mr. Eden, of Illinois, the chairman of the committee, embracing the claims exactly as they had been audited by the accounting officers. This has been done at every session of Congress from the Forty-fifth Congress until the present, without any disposition on the part of the House to re-examine these claims after they have been duly audited.

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Speaker, in resuming the floor, I desire to say that these claims come here precisely as do claims which have been adjudicated in the Court of Claims. The Congress of the United States vested in the Quartermaster-General the power to adjudicate this class of claims. That officer, before reporting favorably upon any claim, is bound not only to find that the claimant was loyal but that the Government received, used, and had the benefit of the property for which allowance is made. In the course of his investigations the Quartermaster-General sends special agents into the locality where the claim originated to ascertain the justice of the claim and the loyalty of the claimant. After all this is done the Quartermaster-General certifies that the claim is just and proper, that the claimant is loyal; and the Secretary of the Treasury sends the claims thus allowed in a letter to this House, showing the amount found due to each claimant. As has been so often repeated in the progress of this running debate, it has been the universal custom of the House of Representatives to pass bills for the payment of claims which have thus been adjudicated; and I believe in every case heretofore this has been done under a suspension of the rules.

I desire to add that every special agent of the Quartermaster's Department who has been sent to investigate these claims in the neighborhood where they originated has been a northern man, going there with no prejudice in favor of the southern people which would lead him to do any injustice in their behalf. These agents are selected as strangers whose official conduct will be impartial, characterized by justice and equity toward the Government as well as the claimant.

Mr. ATKINS. And my colleague will allow me to suggest that in every case the claimants are obliged, before any claim is allowed, to establish their loyalty to the Government.

Mr HOUK. Yes, sir; in every case. They not only have to establish their loyalty before their claims can be passed but they have to prove it in the strongest affirmative manner possible. In a large number of these cases the claimants were soldiers in the Federal Army, fighting for their country when the property was taken from their wives and children at home.

Mr. Speaker, I now move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOUK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FAMILY OF HON. M. P. O'CONNOR, DECEASED.

Mr. EVINS, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 169) in favor of the widow and children of Hon. Michael P. O'Connor, of South Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CONDEMNED CANNON FOR SOLDIERS' MONUMENT.

Mr. JOYCE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5211) granting four condemned cannon to the town of Brandon, Vermont, to be placed near a soldiers' monument in said town; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

POLYGAMY.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a resolution unanimously passed by the Wilmington annual conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, at its session yesterday, in favor of the passage by Congress of a law prohibiting polygamy in Utah and elsewhere in the Territories.

I feel very much gratified, Mr. Speaker, to have this early indorsement of my vote on the bill passed yesterday, by so large and highly respectable a body of Christians.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. It is as follows:

Report of committee on Mormon polygamy.

Resolved, That it is the conviction of this annual conference that it is the duty of the Congress of the United States, having full power to legislate for the Territories, to enact laws for the suppression of Mormon polygamy in Utah and other Territories; and, further, it should provide for the vigorous enforcement of such laws.

I certify the above to be a true copy of the action of the Wilmington annual conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

J. D. RIGG, Secretary.

MARCH 13, 1882.

RELIEF OF AMERICAN SHIPPING.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the memorial of Hon. F. A. Pike for the relief of American shipping, with the accompanying statements of fact, be referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The memorial is as follows:

Memorial of Mr. F. A. Pike for relief of American shipping.

To the Congress of the United States:

The undersigned, an owner of coasting vessels, respectfully represents that of late years the customs charges on this species of property have greatly increased. Unfortunately, the earnings of these small vessels, instead of increasing with the swelling taxes, have greatly diminished. The condition of affairs in the last seven or eight years has been so bad that, taking into account the small gains and the pecuniary risks attending their ownership, one hardly knew whether to class coasters as assets or liabilities.

The General Government insists that a vessel, unlike a railroad engaged in interstate and international transportation, shall be equipped before she begins business with papers which now cost, including the preliminary measurements, about ten times as much as the same papers cost fifteen or twenty years since.

It obliges the crew managing the vessel to pay a monthly tax to hospitals they seldom or never use, and this tax has been doubled in the last ten years.

If one of these small vessels, in the dearth of business, goes to some port in the neighboring Dominion of Canada, or, in other words, extends its coasting voyage but a trifle, perhaps a single mile, and seldom more than two or three hundred miles, the vessel is obliged to pay thirty cents a ton, a new tax which has been imposed within the last twenty years, and besides this tonnage tax the vessel is obliged to enter and clear and pay fees which have been largely increased.

On the great lakes our vessels have papers which answer to coast along our own shores or go into the ports of the Dominion of Canada, and it is difficult to see why our coasters may not be supplied with the same character of papers. But according to our practice it is a serious burden to change vessel papers from enrollment and coasting license to register, and back again, as business demands.

Coasting vessels and fishing vessels are our only nurseries for American seamen, and it should be the policy of the Government to treat them as leniently as other governments deal with such properties.

But we do not. Following the English customs, the Dominion of Canada imposes none of the taxes of which I complain. I annex to this memorial a statement from C. M. Gove, esq., who has for a long time been collector of customs for the port of Saint Andrews, in the province of New Brunswick.

The customs charges we impose seem small when looked at in detail, but in the aggregate they are most oppressive. It is frequently the case that vessels engaged in the trade between the Dominion and our ports pay in a single season 10 per cent. of their value in these taxes of which I complain. I have known vessels to pay more than that percentage of value in a single season.

The business with the provinces is the transportation of coarse and cheap merchandise, such as coals, building-stone, wood, gypsum, and agricultural products. The freight is ordinarily small, and affords but lean compensation for the people engaged in managing these vessels, which they generally "run on shares," and very light returns to owners for the risks and expenditures involved.

Of late years railroads crossin the lines and runnin into the provinces have frequently come into competition with coasting vessels, and railroads pay none of these taxes.
